The Prince de Joinville quotes a passage from a speech in the House of Commons on the 29th of February, 1844, in which it was said that if steam-vessels had been employed as at present Napoleon might easily have landed even fifteen or twenty thousand men on our shores; and that although such a debarkation would not have had much success, the effect would have been "to destroy that confidence which our insular situation now inspires." The speaker, says the royal pamphleteer, adjured the legislature to take into consideration the great use that might be made of steam navigation in the event of a new war.* This is the text which the prince takes for his exhortation. Let us build steam vessels of war as quickly as possible, to maintain some approach to equality with the hundred and twenty-five steam vessels of war of Great Britain, of which number seventy-seven are armed. No suggestion could have been more proper. But what are the definite objects he proposes for a large addition to the French steam navy, beyond the defence of the ports and arsenals of France, in the event of a war? "Our successes would not be brilliant, because we should take care at first to avoid compromising all our resources in decisive encounters. But we should carry on war with certainty because we should attack two things equally vulnerable—the confidence of the English people in the insular position of their country and its maritime commerce. Who can doubt that, with a steam navy strongly organized, we should have the means of inflicting upon the enemy's coasts losses and sufferings unknown to a nation which has never felt all the miseries which war brings in its train? As the complement of these sufferings would come the evil, equally new for that nation—that of confidence lost. The wealth accumulated on its coasts and in its ports would cease to remain in security."

We have given "a calm perusal to this tract," and we do not find it "difficult to understand how it could have been pressed into the service of the alarmists." Mr. Cobden quotes a remonstrance by Sir William Molesworth to the "Spectator" in January, 1848, in which the philosophical statesman asks "the editor of that staid and philosophical print" whether he considered the French to be ruffians, Pindarees, freebooters, so that "you believe it necessary to keep constant watch and ward against them, as our Saxon forefathers did against the Danes and the Nordmen, lest they should burn our towns, plunder our coasts, and put our queen to ransom." The year 1847—when Louis Philippe and his ministers were full of ambitious projects not very different from those which Louis the Fourteenth had cherished—was not so far removed from 1844 that the people of England had forgotten that a son of the king of the French had published a pamphlet which, to use Mr. Cobden's words, "had sounded like a tocsin in our ears;" that a prince of the blood royal had proposed to "burn our towns and plunder our coasts;" had, to repeat the honest language of our great soldier which we have before quoted, issued "an invitation and provocative to war, to be carried on in a manner such as had been disclaimed by the civilized portions of mankind."†

CHAPTER CCXXXVII.

Parliament opened—Improved state of the kingdom—Sir Robert Peel's new tariff—Opposition of the country party—Mr. Cobden's motion for inquiring into agricultural distress—Grant to Maynooth College—Queen's Colleges in Ireland—Jews admitted to municipal offices—Prorogation—Apprehended failure of the potato crop in Ireland—Proposal of Sir Robert Peel to the cabinet—Lord John Russell's letter to the electors of London—Dissensions in the cabinet—Sir R. Peel resigns—Failure of Lord John Russell to form a ministry—Sir R. Peel resumes power—Parliament opened by the queen—Sir R. Peel asserts his determination to be unshackled as minister—The new tariff and the corn law bills introduced by Sir R. Peel—Debate of twelve nights in the Commons—The bills passed in both houses—Bill for the protection of life in Ireland rejected by a majority against the government—Resignation of Sir R. Peel—The Russell administration—The Oregon question settled—British Columbia—India—War with the Sikhs—Battle of Moodkee—Sir Henry Hardinge and Sir Hugh Gough—Battle of Feroze-

* "Memoirs of Sir R. Peel," p. 178.
† Ante, Note, p. 1099.
‡ "The Three Panics," p. 7.

* The speaker was Mr. Spring Rice, on the subject of Harbors of Refuge. See Hansard, vol. lxxiii. col. 400.
† The pamphlet of the Prince de Joinville, with its accompanying tables, is given in full in "Annuaire Historique," 1844, Appendice, p. 372.

shah—Battles of Alliwall and Sobraon—Treaty of peace—List of the Russell ministry.

When parliament was opened by the queen on the 4th of February, 1845, "the improved condition of the country" was a fertile subject of her majesty's congratulation. "Increased activity pervades almost every branch of manufacture; trade and commerce have been extended at home and abroad." At this period the income tax was about to expire. Why, then, with a certainty of improved revenue from imports, which had risen from sixty-five millions in 1842 to eighty-five millions in 1845, was it necessary for her majesty to say, with reference to the income tax, that it might be expedient to continue its operation for a further period? The reason alleged for this recommendation was, "thus to obtain the means of adequately providing for the public service, and at the same time making a reduction in other taxation." Simple as were these words they were full of significance. The one object in 1842 of imposing an income tax was to repair the financial disorder of the country. That object had been accomplished. On the 5th of January, 1845, there had been an excess of income over expenditure of nearly three millions and a half. The income tax had produced something above five millions. It was in many respects an objectionable tax, and if not to be wholly abolished there was ample room to reduce the amount of the impost by one half. But the minister had a great policy to carry into effect. His partial experiment on free-trade had prepared him to make a bolder experiment, upon the doctrine that the surest way to improve the condition of the great body of the people was to remove those taxes upon large branches of industry which not only interfered with their extension, but placed many of the comforts and conveniences of life beyond the reach of the humbler classes. M. Guizot has truly as well as eloquently said, "The greatest happiness of the greatest number of human beings as the supreme object of society and of government, was the superior power of which Sir Robert Peel had made himself the minister, and which swayed all his opponents; some of them governed like himself, others intimidated or paralyzed by this great idea, which was clearly or dimly present to their minds, either as an incontestable right or as an irresistible fact." *

The financial statement of Sir Robert Peel was made on the 14th of February. Continuing the income tax, he estimated there would be a surplus of 3,400,000*l*. He said—laying down general principles which ought ever to be kept in mind by a British financial minister—"In the first place you have to consider the claims which may be urged in favor of a reduction of taxation on account of the heaviness with which certain imposts press on articles of general consumption. You are bound also to consider what taxes press on the raw materials which constitute the staple of the manufactures of the country. You are also bound to consider what taxes cause a great increase in the establishments necessary for their collection, and what are those taxes the remission of which will enable us to diminish those establishments so as to reduce the expense of collection. You are bound also to consider what are those taxes the removal of which will give more scope to commercial enterprise, and occasion an increased demand for labor." † Broadly to state the minister's plans for obtaining such results as these, he proposed to abolish all duties on exports, including the duty on coal; he would abolish the import duties on four hundred and thirty raw materials used in manufactures, which, although yielding to the treasury only 320,000*l*., would still be a real and efficient relief; he would altogether remove the duties on cotton-wool, which yielded 680,000*l*., the reduction to be effected on the sugar duties would amount to 1,300,000*l*. More important, perhaps, than any of the imposts to be abolished or reduced was the repeal of the duty upon glass. That duty, upon the value of the manufactured article, was not less than from 200 to 300 per cent; there was no duty which required such a system of perpetual and vexatious interference with the manufacturer. In France, in Belgium, and in Bohemia, there was no excise duty on glass. In Bohemia, in particular, the manufacture had been brought to a state of admirable perfection. We had peculiar facilities for obtaining the same results, and yet we could not compete with foreigners in the manufacture of glass. "If you permit," said Sir Robert, "this article to be free of duty, it is difficult to foresee, in the first place, to what perfection this beautiful fabric may not be brought, and, secondly, it is impossible to say to what new purposes glass, manufactured by our own skill and capital, may not be applied." Seven years only had elapsed after the sagacious minister had made this confident anticipation, when we saw a wondrous fabric arise constructed almost wholly of glass, in which the British manufacturer was not ashamed to exhibit his glass wares by the side of his foreign rivals, not perhaps reaching the perfection of some glass fabrics, but very nearly approaching their beauty of form and color. Eleven more years elapsed, and then, in the more extended competition of a second International Exhibition, the British manufacture of glass for domestic use stood at the head of every European production. But, more than all this, it is only necessary to look with a rapid glance at the architecture of our public buildings, of our shops, of our mansions and villas, and even of our humblest cottages, to see how, in conjunction with the subsequent repeal of the window tax, the removal of the duty on glass had enabled every building to be erected with a regard to convenience and comfort, to health and cleanliness, which the existence of those imposts to a great extent prevented. It was the merit of Sir Robert Peel rarely to forget the effect of taxation upon the condition of the poor. He had in view the quarry of the cottage window, rarely mended when broken, but patched with paper or stuffed with rag, when he said, "If the house sanction the removal of the duty upon glass, you will thereby confer on the poorer classes a most extensive benefit." It is unnecessary now to follow the discussion upon Sir Robert Peel's financial measures, beyond noticing a few points in which the jealousy of free-trade principles occasionally broke out in objections almost ludicrous. One member complained of the removal of the duty on grease, as he judged it would lead to a great importation of foreign butter; another moved the omission of lard from the list of articles to be admitted free of duty. Mr. Cobden, upon such objections, besought the landed interest not to make a pitiable exhibition of themselves; Lord John Russell advised them either to surrender the principle of protection to native industry altogether, or resolutely to stand by it in and out of parliament. Bolder than the parliamentary free-traders was Mr. W. J. Fox, who, at one of the meetings of the League in Covent Garden Theatre, said of those who were horrified at the notion of repealing the duties on butter, bacon, and cheese, "they keep a great chandler's shop, and they look to every minute article in their store, how they can pervert the power of legislation to make the community pay more for the benefit of the aristocracy. There was a time when trading at all was thought inconsistent with the possession of that dignity. Your feudal baron did not mind robbing by the strong hand, but he turned away with contempt from robbing by the short weight of a protective duty." The time was approaching when as strong things would be said in and out of parliament against the minister who had sufficiently manifested his indisposition to support the chandler's shop. The course which Sir Robert Peel was pursuing, of asserting the principles of free-trade cautiously and yet successfully, by enlisting the opposition, for their support against the imperfectly concealed hostility or indifference of his own supporters, was gradually preparing for him an amount of rebellion and insubordination of which he was too experienced a party leader not accurately to contemplate the final result—his own deposition.

Upon the opening of parliament Lord John Russell endeavored to produce some ministerial declaration on the subject of the corn laws, by affirming that protection was the bane of agriculture. He obtained no contradiction from Sir Robert Peel; but he was asked by Mr. Miles, one of the most sturdy of the protectionists, whether he had found it convenient to make a compact alliance with the Corn Law League? Protectionists and free-traders equally sought support for their arguments at this time in the distress which was said to exist among the agriculturists. On the 13th of March Mr. Cobden moved for a select committee to inquire into the causes and extent of this alleged agricultural distress, and into "the effects of legislative protection upon the interests of land-owners, tenant-farmers, and farm laborers." His motion was rejected by a majority of ninety-two. But his speech produced a great impression upon the country; and it has been said that upon the prime minister himself it had a marked influence. On this occasion Mr. Cobden came forth with a spirit-stirring and impassioned eloquence which few had considered within the range of his oratorical powers. To the country party he said, "You live in a mercantile age, when the whole wealth of the world is poured into your lap. You cannot have the advantages of commercial rents and feudal privileges, but you may be what you always have been, if you will identify yourselves with the spirit of the age. The English people look to the gentry and the aristocracy of this country as their leaders. I, who am not one of you, have no hesitation in telling you that there is a deep-rooted, an hereditary prejudice, if I may so call it, in your favor in this country. But you never got it, and you will not keep it, by obstructing the spirit of the age. If you are indifferent to enlightened means of finding employment for your own peasantry; if you are found obstructing that advance which is calculated to knit nations more together in the bonds of peace, by means of commercial intercourse; if you are found fighting against the discoveries which have almost given breath and life to material nature, and setting up yourselves as obstructives of that which destiny has decreed shall go on—why, then, you will be the gentry of England no longer, and others will be found to take your place."

* Guizot, "Memoirs of Sir Robert Peel," p. 232.
† Hansard, vol. lxvii. col. 473.

The speech of Mr. Cobden on his motion for a committee was replied to by Mr. Sidney Herbert; but that reply was more damaging to the cause of agricultural protection than the arguments of Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright or the agitation of the League. It was the incaution of a young man of remarkable candor and somewhat inexperienced in parliamentary tactics, when he said, as the representative of an agricultural constituency, that it would be distasteful to the agriculturists to come whining to parliament at every period of temporary distress. Parliament had awarded to the agriculturists a certain amount of protection; with that they were content; and in adverse circumstances, such as failure of crop, they would meet them manfully and put their shoulders to the wheel.* Agriculturists were indignant at being represented as content with the protection they enjoyed; the assumption (which was meant for advice) that they would put their shoulders to the wheel instead of crying out for help to Hercules, was something different from the zealous friendship upon which they had calculated so long and reposed so confidingly. The rejection of Mr. Cobden's motion did not calm their anger. On the 17th of March Mr. W. Miles moved that in the reduction of taxation "due regard should be had to the necessity of affording relief to the agricultural interest." It was then that Mr. Disraeli pronounced unmistakably that sentence of open war against Sir Robert Peel which, whether in its skirmishes or pitched battles, for a year or two was admired by many as the daring of a noble courage in its insults to the first statesman of his time. Sir Robert Peel sometimes winced at these attacks, but in most cases he shook off the reckless words "like dewdrops from the lion's mane." "I remember," said Mr. Disraeli, "to have heard the right honorable baronet at the head of the government say he would sooner be the leader of the gentlemen of England than possess the confidence of sovereigns. . . . They were the right honorable baronet's first love, and though he may not kneel to them now as in the hour of passion, still they can recall the past. He does what he can to keep them quiet; sometimes he takes refuge in arrogant silence, and sometimes he treats them with haughty frigidity; and if they knew anything of human nature they would take the hint and shut their mouths. But they won't. And what then happens? The right honorable baronet, being compelled to interfere, sends down his valet, who says in the genteelest manner, We can have no whining here." Describing Sir Robert Peel as one who, by skilful parliamentary manœuvres, had tampered with the generous confidence of a great people, he addressed these words to the treasury bench: "Dissolve, if you please, the parliament you have betrayed, and appeal to the people who I believe mistrust you; for me there remains this at least—the opportunity of expressing thus publicly my belief that a conservative government is an organized hypocrisy."

In this speech of Mr. Disraeli there was a skilful allusion to that former desertion of the principle of ultra-Toryism which many yet remembered with the bitterness of intolerance: "Protection appears to be in about the same condition that Protestantism was in 1828. The country will draw its moral." Protestantism was now to have a new cause of offence. On the 3d of April Sir Robert Peel brought forward the plans of the government respecting the improvement of the College of Maynooth, proposing a grant of 30,000*l.* a year, to be secured by act of parliament. On the 11th, when the bill was to be read a second time, the table of the house was covered with petitions. There had been meetings throughout the country, in which churchmen and dissenters had been equally conspicuous in denouncing the measure as a renunciation of the Protestantism under which the empire had flourished. An annual vote had been taken for many years for the Roman Catholic College of Maynooth. It was the object of the government, to use the words of Sir Robert Peel, "to adopt in a friendly and generous spirit the institution provided for the education of the Roman Catholic priesthood—to extend the parliamentary provision for that purpose, and to attempt, not by interference with the doctrine or discipline of the Roman Catholic Church, but by a more liberal provision, to improve the system of education, and to elevate the tone and character of that institution." During six nights of debate in the Commons there was not a shaft in the quiver of bigotry, still replenished, however scantily, which was not then discharged against the government, and especially against Sir Robert Peel. Sir Robert Inglis, the most moderate and rational of his theological opponents, declared that, although shattered and torn, the flag of Protestantism still remained at the mast-head, and he would fight for it as unflinchingly as when in better days it waved untorn and unbent over our empire. Mr. Plumptre would not say that the religion of Rome was exclusively that of Antichrist, but he believed that it was so, completely and prominently; and he was further of opinion that it would be a fearful and national sin to endow such a religion. Mr. Ferrand solemnly believed that if the government could induce her majesty to attach her signature to this bill she would sign away her title to the British crown. Colonel Sibthorp was the loudest in the chorus: "Really, if I had not seen the first lord of the treasury take the oaths at the table of this house, I should have doubted whether he were a Protestant, a Roman Catholic, or a Mahometan; nor should I be surprised if the time should yet come when we shall see him sitting cross-legged as a Mahometan, or embracing a pope. I must say that I have lost all confidence in that man." Leaving the question of Maynooth untouched, Mr. Disraeli embraced the occasion for another personal assault upon the prime minister: "There is now no longer any constitutional opposition, because there is no government formed on definite principles. Something has risen up in this country as fatal in the political world as it has been in the landed world in Ireland; we have a great parliamentary middleman. It is well known what a middleman is: he is a man who bamboozles one party and plunders the other, till, having obtained a position to which he is not entitled, he cries out, 'Let us have no party questions, but fixity of tenure.'" In spite of the unmitigated opposition in both houses the Maynooth Bill was carried by considerable majorities. So also was the ministerial measure introduced by Sir James Graham for establishing three purely secular colleges in Ireland, wholly independent of religious tests or creeds, for the education of the middle classes. On the first debate on the measure Sir Robert Inglis termed it a great scheme "of godless education." The measure was carried by a large majority in the Commons upon the third reading, and was passed without a division in the Lords. But the faint cry of "godless education" raised by Sir Robert Inglis was echoed with far greater vehemence by the Roman Catholic clergy, whose prelates declared, through Mr. O'Connell, in the House of Commons, that this was a bad scheme of education, and the bill a penal and revolting measure. The "godless colleges" of Cork, Galway, and Belfast, nevertheless have flourished, unharmed under the constant attempts of a bigoted priesthood to oppose in this case, as well as in the national schools of Ireland, that system of instruction without religious teaching which the soundest statesmen have constantly regarded as one of the best means of softening the religious animosities and abating the injurious jealousies between Catholic and Protestant. There was another measure carried this session, in the spirit of religious liberality—that of the admission of Jews to municipal offices.

The session of parliament was terminated by the prorogation by the queen on the 9th of August. In the usual address to her majesty the speaker, in addition to his notice of the great financial measures of the session—the endowment of Maynooth, and the provision of the means of academical instruction in Ireland—adverted to two other labors in which the Commons had been engaged. The session had been rendered unusually laborious by the rapid development of private enterprise in extending the railway communications of the kingdom; anticipating the most beneficial results from the facilities thus afforded to the internal trade of the country, they had devoted much time and labor to the legislation requisite for the construction and regulation of those important works. The condition of the destitute poor of Scotland was the other subject of general legislation which the speaker recapitulated: "Assisted by the information which your majesty has directed to be laid before us, we have made such amendments in the law as will provide for the more effectual relief of the poor, and for a better system of parochial management, under the control of a general board of supervision."

* Hansard, vol. lxxviii. col. 818.

Parliamentary warfare was for a season at an end. The queen and Prince Albert, on the day of prorogation, embarked at Woolwich on a visit to Germany. The prime minister gladly sought the retreat of Drayton Manor, where the murmurs of his once devoted partisans could scarcely reach him. An observer of London fashionable life at this time has written, "The language of the Tory party is more bitter and violent against him [Sir R. Peel] than ever I heard in society of the olden time from disappointed Whigs against Mr. Pitt. But I do not imagine this to be traced to a no-popery cry. If Sir Robert had left the corn laws untouched he would have carried the Maynooth question by a triumphant majority without a schism. His inattention to what the landed interest call their agricultural distress, their apprehensions that he will ultimately repeal those laws, and also his notorious neglect of those who, in good report and ill report, had stuck to his skirts till they had brought him through the battle, and then found that his patronage was lavished on their opponents—all these things have so embittered their minds that they have seized with readiness the first opportunity to stick their teeth in his flanks, and have rallied all the sectarian interests to take part in the curée." *

On the 31st of October the cabinet having been called together by Sir Robert Peel, a meeting took place at his house, and on the following day the cabinet again assembled. The "Memoirs by Sir Robert Peel," which were published by his executors in 1857, enable us now to trace with a distinctness which could not previously be derived from other sources the beginning of that train of events which led to the repeal of the corn laws. The documents which these memoirs contain relate to the information received by Sir Robert Peel on the probable failure of the potato crop, and exhibit his correspondence on the subject with other members of the government. With something like an apology for giving these documents at length, he describes them as "the materials from which the future historian will extract that which is worthy of permanent record, and from which, with the aid of other contemporary evidence, he will pronounce his judgment on the motives and conduct of public men." †

There were three members of the government who, from their official station, were chiefly responsible at this time for instituting inquiries into the probability of a sudden and extensive defalcation in the ordinary supply of food, with a view to the adoption of measures calculated to mitigate the evil consequences of such a defalcation. These ministers were the first lord of the treasury, the secretary of state for the home department, and the lord lieutenant of Ireland. The correspondence between Sir Robert Peel and Sir James Graham goes on from the 12th of August to the 15th of October amid alternations of hope and alarm. On the 15th, the official reports having assumed a very serious aspect, Sir Robert writes: "My letter on the awful state of the potato crop in Ireland crossed yours to me. . . . Interference with the due course of the laws respecting the supply of food is so momentous and so lasting in its consequences that we must not act without the most accurate information. I fear the worst." To obtain the most accurate information the prime minister dispatched to Ireland two men eminent in their respective departments of science—Professor Lindley and Dr. Lyon Playfair. The reports of the botanist and the chemist were not calculated to mitigate the apprehensions of official and other observers in Ireland. The secretary of the Irish Agricultural Improvement Society had obtained proofs that the entire potato crop was more or less affected in every part of the country, and he says that a panic had seized all parties to a greater extent than he ever remembered since the cholera. The alarm in Scotland was also great and rapidly increasing. Sir James Graham clearly sees what is at hand. "The anti-corn law pressure is about to commence, and it will be the most formidable movement in modern times."

Such was the information which Sir Robert Peel had to lay before the cabinet on the 31st of October. He told his colleagues in a cabinet memorandum that "inaction—the letting things take their own course—seems to me impossible. . . . Inaction and indifference might involve the country in serious danger, and the government in the heaviest responsibility." It is unnecessary here to go through the various suggestions of the memorandum. The prime minister found few inclined to deal boldly with the danger: "It became evident that very serious differences of opinion existed as to the necessity of adopting any extraordinary measures and as to the character of the measures which it might be advisable to adopt." * The cabinet separated, fixing another meeting for the 6th of November. The accounts received in the interim were not of a nature to allay the apprehensions of the week before. At that cabinet Sir Robert Peel proposed to issue immediately an order in council remitting the duty on grain in bond to one shilling, opening the ports to the temporary admission of all grain at a smaller rate of duty. He further proposed to call parliament together on the 27th to ask for indemnity, and to declare an intention of submitting immediately after the recess a modification of the existing corn laws. Three only of his colleagues gave their support to the first lord of the treasury—the Earl of Aberdeen, Sir James Graham, and Mr. Sidney Herbert. On the 2d of November Lord Stanley wrote to Sir Robert Peel to express the regret with which he saw how widely he differed in opinion with Sir James Graham and himself as to the necessity of proposing to parliament a repeal of the corn laws. Sir Robert Peel replied that he had not proposed to the cabinet that they should recommend to parliament a repeal of the corn laws, still less that they should offer their advice to the queen that the corn laws ought to be abandoned.

On the 22d of November Lord John Russell addressed a public letter to the electors of the city of London, which began with stating precisely the same truth which Sir Robert Peel had endeavored to impress upon his cabinet. "The present state of the country in regard to its supply of food cannot be viewed without apprehension. Forethought and bold precautions may avert any serious evils—indecision and procrastination may produce a state of suffering which it is frightful to contemplate." He complains that the queen's ministers had met and separated without affording any promise of seasonable relief. He points out that the duties on the importations of corn were so contrived that "the corn barometer points to fair while the ship is bending under a storm." Then comes a declaration from the leader of the Whig party which forbids all further advocacy of "fixed duty" in opposition to "sliding scale." "I confess that on the general subject my views have in the course of twenty years undergone a great alteration. I used to be of opinion that corn was an exception to the general rules of political economy; but observation and experience have convinced me that we ought to abstain from all interference with the supply of food. Neither a government nor a legislature can ever regulate the corn market with the beneficial effects which the entire freedom of sale and purchase are sure of themselves to produce." It was no longer worth while, he said, to contend for a fixed duty; the imposition at present of any duty, without a provision for its speedy extinction, would only prolong a contest already sufficiently fruitful of animosity and discontent. "Let us then unite to put an end to a system which has been proved to be the blight of commerce, the bane of agriculture, the source of bitter division among classes, the cause of penury, fever, mortality, and crime among the people." Sir Robert Peel prints this letter in his Memoirs with this observation: "It was asserted by many who were careless about the foundation of their assertions that I had been influenced in the advice which I offered to the cabinet by the appearance of this letter. A simple reference to dates will prove that this could not have been the case." †

On the 25th and 26th of November the cabinet was occupied in the discussion of instructions to be given to the commission which had been

* Raikes's "Diary," vol. iv. pp. 423, 424.
† "Memoirs by Sir Robert Peel," p. 107.

* "Memoirs," p. 148.
† Ibid., p. 179.

appointed, for the consideration and adoption of such measures as might tend to mitigate the evil consequences of the apprehended scarcity. These instructions were unanimously approved of by the cabinet. Sir Robert Peel felt that the danger to be apprehended was so fully admitted and was set forth in such strong terms in the letter of the secretary of state to the lord lieutenant that it was "difficult to reconcile the issue of this letter with passiveness and inaction in respect to the means of increasing the supply of food." Before the instructions, therefore, contained in the letter were finally assented to by the cabinet, he read to them a memorandum, of which the opening sentence was quite sufficient to indicate the final tendency of his opinions: "I cannot consent to the issue of these instructions, and undertake at the same time to maintain the existing corn laws." On the 29th of November he put in circulation among his colleagues a memorandum, addressed in the first instance to the Duke of Wellington, in which "are contained the reasons which induce me to advise the suspension of the existing corn laws for a limited period." The answer of the Duke of Wellington is very characteristic. He was of opinion that the government should avoid to break down the corn laws till that measure should appear to be absolutely necessary. "But of this I do not entertain a doubt: if it is necessary to suspend the corn laws to avoid real evils resulting from scarcity of food, we ought not to hesitate." The duke then comes to the party view of the question which Sir Robert Peel had not discussed, Could he carry on a government for the queen, supposing that the support of the landed interest were withdrawn from him? The duke was afraid that Sir Robert Peel must reckon upon its being withdrawn from him, unless he should be able to show clearly the necessity of the measure in question. "In respect to my own course, my only object in public life is to support Sir Robert Peel's administration of the government for the queen." The duke, if Sir Robert Peel thought that his position in parliament and in the public view required that the course should be taken which he recommended, had no hesitation in saying, "I earnestly recommend that the cabinet should support him, and I for one declare that I will do so." Others of the cabinet took a very different view. Mr. Goulburn writes to Sir Robert Peel, "An abandonment of your former opinions now would I think, prejudice your and our characters as public men, and would be fraught with fatal results to the country's best interests. . . . In my opinion the party of which you are the head is the only barrier which remains against the revolutionary effects of the Reform Bill." Lord Wharncliffe was of opinion "that the queen's speech, if it should ultimately be decided to recommend any modification or a tempotary suspension of the corn law, should do so in terms which would show our decided intention to uphold the principle of protection in some way or other."

The discussions in the cabinet continued till the 2d of December, when Sir Robert Peel brought before his colleagues a specific measure for the proposal of a new law which would be "founded upon the principle of the present law, while it continues in operation, but will in the course of that operation insure the ultimate and not remote extinction of protective duties." He believed that some such measure as he had suggested might receive the assent of all his colleagues. Lord Stanley and the Duke of Buccleugh, however, each signified his inability to support a measure involving the ultimate repeal of the corn laws. Sir Robert Peel, thinking that the public interest would be very injuriously affected by the failure of an attempt made by a government to adjust the question of corn laws, repaired to Osborne on the 5th of December, and humbly solicited the queen to relieve him from duties which he could no longer discharge with advantage to her majesty's service. The queen then informed Sir Robert Peel that it was her intention to propose to Lord John Russell to undertake the formation of a government. In a letter to the queen, written after the audience, Sir Robert Peel stated that if the opinions of his colleagues had been in concurrence with his own, he had been fully prepared to take the responsibility of suspending the corn laws, and of entering upon a comprehensive review of restrictions on the import of foreign grain and other articles of food, with a view to their gradual diminution and ultimate removal. With reference to the proposed new administration he adds, "Sir Robert Peel is prepared to support, in a private capacity, measures which may be in general conformity with those which he advised as a minister."

Lord John Russell was at Edinburgh when a summons reached him to attend the queen. He went to her majesty with the conviction that he could not accept the great trust now offered to him. He felt that his party, being in a large minority in the Commons, he could not properly undertake the formation of a government. But the offer of Sir Robert Peel, to give his assistance in a private capacity toward the settlement of the corn-law question, determined Lord John Russell to depart from this resolution. There was a week of negotiation as to the specific nature of this limited offer. Sir Robert Peel was "convinced that previous concert, or a previous pledge on his part, to support a particular measure of adjustment would be distasteful to the House of Commons, and embarrassing to all parties." With this view Lord John Russell expressed his concurrence, but required at the same time that Sir Robert Peel should give assurances, that would have amounted substantially to a pledge, that he would support the immediate and total repeal of the corn laws. The ex-minister did not feel it to be consistent with his duty to enter upon the consideration of this important question in parliament, being fettered by a previous engagement of the nature of that required from him. Nevertheless Lord John Russell, in the afternoon of the 18th of December, stated to her majesty at Windsor Castle that he was ready to undertake the formation of a government. In consequence Sir Robert Peel was invited by her majesty to a parting interview on his relinquishment of office. On entering the room at Windsor, on the 20th of December, her majesty said to him very graciously, "So far from taking leave of you, Sir Robert, I must require you to withdraw your resignation, and to remain in my service." Lord John Russell had written to the queen on the morning of that day that he had found it impossible to form an administration. He had informed the queen that he had had olely in view the settlement of the question of corn laws; he admitted that Sir Robert Peel had been willing, from the commencement to the end, to diminish the difficulties of a new government in attempting that settlement, although Sir Robert Peel could not of course rely upon the support of his political friends. It was therefore necessary, he wrote, that all those who were prominent in the political party to which Lord John Russell was attached should give their zealous aid, and act in concert in the new administration. "Lord John Russell had in one instance been unable to obtain this concert, and he must now consider that task as hopeless which has been from the beginning hazardous." The one instance was that of Lord Grey; he had objected to one proposed appointment, and Lord John Russell had been unwilling to admit the force of the objection. We can easily understand how the self-asserting inheritor of a great name should have failed in substantiating his objection to a statesman with the reputation of Lord Palmerston. Lord John Russell having absolutely relinquished the formation of a government, Sir Robert Peel at once decided, if such were her majesty's pleasure, on the resumption of his office. He wished, he said, to be able to announce to his late colleagues that he had not hesitated to reaccept the appointment of first minister. The cabinet met at Downing Street in the evening of the 20th, and he told them that, whether supported or not, he was firmly resolved to meet parliament as her majesty's minister, and to propose such measures as the public exigencies required. Lord Stanley declared that he must persevere in resigning. He thought the corn laws ought to be adhered to, and might have been maintained. The Duke of Buccleugh would not at once decide upon resigning. The other members of the cabinet declared their determination to support Sir Robert Peel in the course he had announced to them. The Duke of Wellington was the man to admire courage, whether civil or military. He told the House of Lords, on the ministerial explanations, "I applauded the conduct of my right honorable friend; I was delighted with it. It was exactly the course which I should have followed myself under similar circumstances, and I therefore determined to stand by him." The new cabinet enlisted an able coadjutor in Lord Dalhousie; and Mr. Gladstone, who had retired from office some time previous, succeeded Lord Stanley as secretary of state for the colonial department. Lord Wharncliffe, the president of the council, had died, during this great crisis, on the 19th of December.

The biographer of Sir Robert Peel has described his hesitation, in the session of 1845, to apply the strict principles of commercial freedom to the trade in corn, as the "touching perplexity of a sincere and conscientious mind, carried forward in the direction of its own inclination by a great flood of public opinion and passion, and struggling painfully against its adversaries, its friends, and itself."* The "perplexity" was now over. The struggle of the "sincere and conscientious mind" against itself was passed. Six days after Sir Robert Peel had declared to the cabinet that he was again her majesty's minister, he wrote to the Princess Lieven at Paris a short note, in which he casts off the reserve of the statesman to give unrestrained expression to his natural feelings: "However unexpected is the turn which affairs have taken, it is for the best. I resume power with greater means of rendering public service than I should have had if I had not relinquished it. But it is a strange dream."†

It was the 22d of January, 1846, when the queen opened the parliament in person. The royal speech necessarily alluded to the failure of the potato crops in Ireland, and to the means that had been adopted for alleviating the sufferings caused by this calamity. Her majesty had had great satisfaction in giving her consent to the measures for the repeal of prohibitory and the relaxation of protective duties. The prosperous state of the revenue, the increased demand for labor, and the general improvement which had taken place in the internal condition of the country, were strong testimonies in favor of the course that had been pursued. "I recommend you," said the queen, "to take into your early consideration whether the principles on which you have acted may not with advantage be yet more extensively applied, and whether it may not be in your power, after a careful review of the existing duties upon many articles, the produce or manufacture of other countries, to make such further reductions and remissions as may tend to insure the continuance of the great benefits to which I have adverted." There might have been some doubt as to the interpretation of the words "further reductions and remissions;" but the ministerial explanations of Sir Robert Peel and of Lord John Russell, in which the details of the negotiations for the formation of a government were fully stated, left no doubt whatever that a free trade in corn, however gradually to be accomplished, was now the great object of Sir Robert Peel's administration. After the mover and seconder of the addresses in the House of Commons had delivered their speeches, Sir Robert Peel immediately rose. Having gone through the explanatory details expected from the head of the government after a ministerial crisis, he did not wait for the attacks of those adversaries who were once his submissive friends. He boldly proclaimed his determination to stand free from the trammels of party. "Sir, believe me, to conduct the government of this country is a most arduous duty; I may say it without irreverence, that these ancient institutions, like our physical frames, are 'fearfully and wonderfully made.' It is no easy task to insure the united action of an ancient monarchy, a proud aristocracy, and a reformed constituency. I have done everything I could do, and have thought it consistent with true conservative policy, to reconcile these three branches of the state. I have thought it consistent with true conservative policy to promote so much of happiness among the people that the voice of disaffection should be no longer heard, and that thoughts of the dissolution of our institutions should be forgotten in the midst of physical enjoyment. These were my attempts, and I thought them not inconsistent with true and enlarged conservative policy. These were my objects in accepting office—it is a burden too great for my physical and far beyond my intellectual structure; and to be relieved from it with perfect honor would be the greatest favor that could be conferred on me. But as a feeling of honor and a strong sense of duty require me to undertake those responsible functions, I declare, sir, that I am ready to incur these risks, to bear these burdens, and to front all these honorable dangers. But, sir, I will not take the step with mutilated power and shackled authority. I will not stand at the helm during such tempestuous nights as I have seen, if the vessel be not allowed fairly to pursue the course which I think she ought to take. I will not, sir, undertake to direct the course of the vessel by the observations taken in 1842. I will reserve to myself the marking out of that course; and I must, for the public interest, claim for myself the unfettered power of judging of those measures which I conceive will be better for the country to propose. Sir, I do not wish to be the minister of England; but while I have the high honor of holding that office, I am determined to hold it by no servile tenure. I will only hold that office upon the condition of being unshackled by any other obligations than those of consulting the public interests and of providing for the public safety."*

This speech was of course accepted as a declaration of war by all those who interpreted conservative policy as one almost exclusively directed to the upholding of class interests and class prejudices. Mr. Disraeli, in declaring his intention of adhering to the principles of protection which had sent him into that house, did not attempt to defend those principles, but confined himself, as he did for the greater part of the session, to the bitterest attacks on the minister who was about to give them their final and irrevocable blow. Sir Robert Peel's conduct, he said, was that of the captain, who having received the command of a fleet from the sultan to attack Mehemet Ali, steered that fleet at once into the enemy's port. Sir Robert Peel, a great statesman, who was always marching after the events of his age! He was just as much a great statesman as he who got up behind a carriage was a great whip. There could be no mistake as to the intentions of the so-called conservative party, whether they spoke in the "wild and hurling words" of the brilliant orator, or in the bucolic accents of the lords of many acres. By the mouth of Mr. Miles they gave notice that the "strongest constitutional opposition would be given to the minister's plan, and that every impediment would be made use of to prevent its passing into law." The plan was not yet developed, but its scope and objects were pretty correctly anticipated.

On the 27th of January the avenues of the House of Commons were filled with eager crowds; the seats below the bar were thronged with listeners, among whom were Prince Albert and the Duke of Cambridge; the strangers' gallery was crammed to excess, while hundreds who had obtained tickets were unable to get admission. His whole plan of financial and commercial policy was developed by Sir Robert Peel in a speech of four hours. He said, in the onset, that he was not about to apply the principle of relaxation of protective duties to any one particular class: "I am not about to select that great interest connected with the agriculture of the country, and call upon the landowners to relinquish protection, unprepared at the same time to call upon other protected classes to relinquish protection also. In the confidence that the principle for which I contend is a just and a wise one, I ask all protected interests to make the sacrifice, if it be a sacrifice, which the application of that principle will render necessary."† The duties on tallow and timber were to be extensively reduced; these were the only raw materials still subject to duty. The duties on foreign manufactured goods were to be abolished or reduced. As the silk manufacture had increased in the ratio of the removal of duties, there was now to be a further reduction. On cotton and woollen fabrics duties were to be removed or lessened by one half. Articles of food were relieved from taxation, either wholly or partially. The differential duties on free-labor sugar were abated about fifty per cent. Animal food and vegetables were admitted duty free. One half of the existing duties on butter, cheese, hops, and cured fish were removed. Live animals were no longer to be subject to any import duty. Here was a tariff which a few years before would have shaken the isle from its propriety; but what a clamor would have gone through the land, echoed at every county meeting and every market table, if a minister had proposed, as Sir Robert Peel now proposed, to admit buckwheat and Indian corn duty free; to submit colonial grain to a merely nominal duty; and altogether to remove protection from every other species of grain at the end of three years. In the interval the duties on grain were to be as follows: When wheat was under 48*s.* per quarter the duty was to be 10*s.*; at every rise of a shilling per quarter in the market price the duty was to be a shilling lower, till wheat should be at 54*s.* and the duty at 4*s.*, after which the duty should not further change. The existing price of wheat being 54*s.*, the duty would be at once reduced from 16*s.* to 4*s.* Some relief of the burdens upon agriculture, involved in an alteration of the law of settlement, a consolidation of highway boards, the removal of the cost of prisoners from the county rates—these and other minor concessions, which were real benefits, were received only with ridicule, in the face of the startling fact that the staff of protection, which had so long been leaned upon, would be utterly broken and cast away. The philosophical

* Guizot, "Memoirs of Sir Robert Peel," p. 250.
† "Memoirs by Sir Robert Peel," p. 251.

* Hansard, vol. lxxxiii. col. 94.
† Ibid., col. 241.

reasoners knew well that the hale man would then be able to walk without his crutch ; but the country party were not greatly addicted to philosophical politics. Sir Robert Peel concluded the speech, in which he offered, on the part of the government, these proposals "for the ultimate adjustment of this question by affirming that there had been a great change in the opinion of the great mass of the community with respect to the corn laws." He recommended his plan as a whole to their calm and dispassionate consideration, with no other feeling or interest in its ultimate issue than that it might, to use the words of her majesty's speech, conduce to promote "friendly feelings between different classes of my subjects, to provide additional security for the continuance of peace, and to maintain contentment and happiness at home by increasing the comfort and bettering the condition of the great body of my people."

On the 9th of February a debate was begun, which continued twelve nights, on the motion that the speaker should leave the chair to go into committee on the Customs and Corn Importation Act. Mr. Miles had proposed as an amendment, "that this house will, upon this day six months, resolve itself into the said committee." On the fifth night of the discussion, the 16th of February, Sir Robert Peel, with even more than his ordinary debating ability, reviewed every species of objection, whether from agriculturists or shipowners or manufacturers, that had been raised to the various details of his measure. Toward the conclusion of his speech he warmed into an eloquence such as had been rarely equalled since the days of the great orators of former generations.

"This night is to decide between the policy of continued relaxation of restriction or the return to restraint and prohibition. This night you will select the motto which is to indicate the commercial policy of England. Shall it be 'advance' or 'recede'? Which is the fitter motto for this great empire? Survey our position ; consider the advantage which God and nature have given us, and the destiny for which we are intended. We stand on the confines of Western Europe, the chief connecting link between the old world and the new. The discoveries of science, the improvement of navigation have brought us within ten days of St. Petersburg, and will soon bring us within ten days of New York. We have an extent of coast greater in proportion to our population and the area of our land than any other great nation, securing to us maritime strength and superiority. Iron and coal, the sinews of manufacture, give us advantages over every rival in the great competition of industry. Our capital far exceeds that which they can command. In ingenuity, in skill, in energy, we are inferior to none. Our national character, the free institutions under which we live, the liberty of thought and action, an unshackled press spreading the knowledge of every discovery and of every advance in science, combine with our natural and physical advantages to place us at the head of those nations which profit by the free interchange of their products. And is this the country to shrink from competition? Is this the country to adopt a retrograde policy? Is this the country which can only flourish in the sickly, artificial atmosphere of prohibition? Is this the country to stand shivering on the brink of exposure to the healthful breezes of competition?" *

Turning then from commercial freedom in manufactures to commercial freedom in agriculture, he asked if in some future season, when "the years of plenteousness shall have ended," and "the years of dearth may have come," would it be no satisfaction to you to reflect that by your own act you have been relieved from the grievous responsibility of regulating the supply of food? "When you are again exhorting a suffering people to fortitude under their privations ; when you are telling them 'these are the chastenings of an all-wise and merciful Providence, sent for some inscrutable but just and beneficent purpose—it may be to humble our pride or to punish our unfaithfulness or to impress us with a sense of our nothingness and dependence on His mercy ;' when you are thus addressing your suffering fellow-subjects, and encouraging them to bear without repining the dispensations of Providence, may God grant that by your decision of this night you may have laid in store for yourselves the consolation of reflecting that such calamities are, in truth, the dispensations of Providence—that they have not been caused, they have not been aggravated by the laws of man, restricting in the hour of scarcity the supply of food!" *

On the 27th of February the debate on Mr. Miles's amendment on the motion for going into committee on the Customs and Corn Importation Act was brought to a conclusion. During the twelve nights of debate forty-eight members spoke in favor of free trade and fifty-five on the side of protection. To attempt the briefest analysis of the general arguments for the removal of protection, and of the anticipations of commercial and agricultural ruin if protection were abolished —arguments now so perfectly understood, and fears now so thoroughly exploded—would be as wearisome as useless. Upon a division the numbers were, for Mr. Miles's amendment, 240 ; against it, 337, being a majority for the government of 97. The House of Commons went into committee on the 2d of March. The various clauses of the proposed bill were debated with the same earnestness for four nights, when the second reading was carried by a majority of 88. On the third reading there was a debate of three nights. On the 15th of May, at four in the morning, 327 members voted for the third reading, and for an amendment of the Marquess of Granby, that the bill be read that day six months, 229 voted, giving a majority for the third reading of 98. In the House of Lords the bill was passed with less difficulty than might have been anticipated. The Duke of Wellington on the 18th moved the first reading of the Corn Importation Bill, and on the 19th the Duke of Buccleugh moved the first reading of the Customs Duties Bill. It is as unnecessary to follow the course of debate in the Lords as in the Commons. The second reading of the Corn Bill was carried by a majority of 47—211 being for the second reading, against it 164. The second reading of the Customs Duties Bill was carried without a division. The various clauses of the Corn Bill having been debated in committee, the bill on the 19th of June was reported without amendments. On the 25th of June both bills were read a third time and passed, to which on the 26th the royal assent was given by commission. By the Corn Importation Act, that scale of duties as proposed by the government on the 27th of January was to continue until the 1st of February, 1849, after which day a duty upon grain of one shilling per quarter, and of fourpence-halfpenny per cwt. upon flour and meal, was to be levied, for purely statistical purposes. A revolution, scarcely second in importance to the Reform Bill, was thus accomplished. England entered on a new course of commercial policy, of whose beneficial results the experience of the succeeding sixteen years has left too strong an evidence to allow any but a few devotees of an obsolete creed to abide in "their temples dim."

During the progress through the House of Commons of the measures of commercial freedom, a bill entitled, "For the protection of life in Ireland," which had passed in the House of Lords, was brought under discussion in the House of Commons. It was opposed with the utmost vehemence by the protectionists, who in the rejection of the measure hailed the prospect of being revenged on Sir Robert Peel ; and by the majority of the Whigs, who, consistently adhering to their often declared principles upon coercion bills in Ireland, nevertheless saw in the defeat of the government the door opened for their return to power after it had been closed against them for five years. On the 21st of June Sir Robert Peel accurately calculated upon the double event—the passing of the Corn Law Repeal Bill unmutilated in the House of Lords, and the rejection of the bill for the protection of life in Ireland by the House of Commons. He took a decision at once dignified and patriotic. He addressed a memorandum on the position of the government to the cabinet, in which he suggested to the deliberate and dispassionate consideration of his colleagues, "to determine whether, after the passing of the Corn and Customs Bills, it would be for the interest of the crown, of the country, and for the honor and character of the government, that they should remain in office." He said, with an honesty worthy of all imitation, "a government ought to have a natural support ; a conservative government should be supported by a conservative party ; support from the compassion of its enemies, or even from the personally friendly feelings of those who ought on public principle to oppose a government, is a hollow and not a creditable support. Depend upon it that we shall not pass the Irish Bill into a law." He was decidedly, he told them, of opinion "that we should not fall into the errors of the last Whig government—retain office after we have lost power, or advise a dissolution with little prospect of securing a majority of members, honestly and cordially concurring with us on great political principles." * The memorandum being communicated to the other members of the government, there was not the slightest difference of opinion as to the course to be pursued.

* Hansard, vol. lxxxiii. col. 1041.

* Hansard, vol. lxxxiii. col. 1044.

There were six nights of debate upon the Irish Bill. On the 25th of June Lord George Bentinck, who had for some time filled the office of the aristocratic leader of the protectionists, expressed himself with a violence toward the prime minister that more than rivalled the attacks of his untitled coadjutor. Mr. Cobden answered Lord George Bentinck: "I have to say, in contradiction to the noble lord, that if the right honorable baronet chooses to retire from office in consequence of this vote, he carries with him the esteem and gratitude of a larger number of the population of this empire than ever followed any minister that was ever hurled from power." After Mr. Cobden had spoken the division took place: for the second reading, 219; against it, 292; majority against the government, 73. On the 29th of June the resignation of ministers was announced by Sir Robert Peel. He cast a retrospect over the reasons which had influenced his conduct, and the results which had been obtained. "The name," he said, "which ought to be associated with the success of those measures, is not the name of the noble lord, the organ of the party of which he is the leader, nor is it mine. The name which ought to be and will be associated with the success of those measures is the name of one who, acting, as I believe, from pure and disinterested motives, has, with untiring energy, made appeals to our reason, and has enforced those appeals with an eloquence the more to be admired because it was unaffected and unadorned: it is the name of Richard Cobden." He concluded his speech with those emphatic words which have been inscribed upon the pedestal of more than one monumental tribute of a nation's gratitude: "It may be that I shall leave a name sometimes remembered with expressions of good-will in the abodes of those whose lot it is to labor and to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow, when they shall recruit their exhausted strength with abundant and untaxed food, the sweeter because it is no longer leavened with a sense of injustice."

The House of Commons adjourned to the 3d of July. On the 6th Lord John Russell, as first lord of the treasury, and the other members of the administration were sworn into office.

From the 16th of July, when, after the change of government, the House of Commons met again for the dispatch of business, to the 28th of August, when parliament was prorogued by commission, the measures passed were various and important. The impending distress in Ireland occupied much of the attention of the legislature. Two measures of permanent social interest became law. One enactment has worked a most material and salutary change in the power of the people to obtain cheap justice—the establishment of county courts for the recovery of small debts. The other, directed to important sanitary objects, which received the royal assent on the 26th of August, declares that "it is desirable for the health, comfort, and welfare of the inhabitants of towns and populous districts, to encourage the establishment therein of public baths and wash-houses and open bathing-places." To town councils and parish vestries is given the power to establish such public conveniences, the expenses of which, beyond the receipts, are to be paid as part of the poor's-rate.

On the 4th of July Sir Robert Peel wrote to Lord Hardinge, "There is nothing I would not have done to insure the carrying of the measures I had proposed this session. I pique myself on never having proposed anything which I have not carried; but the moment their success was insured, and I had the satisfaction of seeing two drowsy masters in chancery mumble out at the table of the House of Commons that the Lords had passed the Corn and Customs Bills I was satisfied. Two hours after this intelligence was brought we were ejected from power; and, by another coincidence as marvellous, on the day on which I had to announce in the House of Commons the dissolution of the government, the news arrived that we had settled the Oregon question, and that our proposals had been accepted by the United States without the alteration of a word." *

The settlement of the Oregon question was announced to the House of Lords on the 29th by the Earl of Aberdeen. He made a brief statement of what had occurred since the President of the United States, Mr. Polk, had sent his message to the Senate with a direct refusal of the repeated proposals of the British government to submit the whole question to arbitration. When Lord Aberdeen afterward saw that the Senate and House of Representatives had adopted resolutions of a conciliatory and friendly description, he at once put aside all idea of diplomatic etiquette, and sent over to the British minister the draft of a convention to be proposed for the acceptance of the United States Government. The president having submitted this draft for the opinion of the Senate, that body, by a majority of thirty-eight votes to twelve, adopted a resolution advising the president to accept the terms proposed. Mr. Buchanan, the American Secretary of State, accordingly informed our minister that the conditions offered were accepted, "without the addition or alteration of a single word." *

This settlement of the Oregon question relieved the British nation and the government from a long-continued cause of anxiety. In 1845 Mr. Polk, in his inaugural address, affirmed that it was his duty "to assert and maintain by all constitutional means the right of the United States to that portion of our territory which lies beyond the Rocky Mountains. Our title to the country of the Oregon is clear and unquestionable; and already are our people preparing to perfect their title by occupying it with their wives and children." † The value of the Oregon territory was so little understood when the treaty of peace was concluded, in 1783, that no provision whatever was made for its occupation. Forty years later the claims of the British government and that of the United States to this region had become so opposed that Lord Castlereagh said to Mr. Rush, the American minister, that by holding up a finger a war regarding Oregon might be produced between the two countries. During the foreign secretaryship of Mr. Canning the apprehension of hostilities became greater. In 1818 a convention had been entered into, by which the whole territory was to be open to the settlers of both countries for a period of ten years; but the agreement was not to be construed to the prejudice of any claim which either of the contracting parties might have to any part of the country. In 1844 Mr. Calhoun, Secretary of State at Washington, explained his reasons for declining proposals made by the British government, in a state paper, in which he contended that time so far from impairing the American claims had greatly strengthened them, by the rapid advance of the population of the United States toward that territory. An emigration, estimated at not less than a thousand in 1843 and fifteen hundred in 1844, had flowed into it, and that the current thus commenced would continue to flow with increased volume hereafter. "There can, then, be no doubt now that the operation of the same cause which impelled our population westward from the shores of the Atlantic across the Alleghany to the valley of the Mississippi will impel them onward with accumulating force across the Rocky Mountains into the valley of the Columbia, and that the whole region drained by it is destined to be peopled by us." ‡ In 1845 the president, in a public address, while negotiations were pending, referred, contrary to all usage, to other contingencies than a friendly and satisfactory termination of the differences between the two governments. Upon this declaration Sir Robert Peel expressed himself with deep regret that such a reference should be made in a tone and temper which was not likely to lead to an amicable and equitable settlement of the differences. We have rights, he said, respecting this territory of Oregon clear and unquestionable. "We trust still to arrive at an amicable adjustment—we desire to effect an amicable adjustment of our claim—but having exhausted every effort to effect that settlement, if our rights should be invaded we are resolved—and we are prepared—to maintain them." §

We have thus briefly traced the course of those differences which were happily concluded before the administration of affairs was handed over by the Peel government to that of Lord John Russell The territory in dispute has now became the rising colony of British Columbia. In looking to the probable extensive emigration in a few years to this vast territory—in many parts fertile, abundantly

* "Memoirs by Sir Robert Peel," pp. 288, 297. † Ibid., p. 309.

* Hansard, vol. lxxxvii. col. 1038.
† "Annual Register for 1845," p. 279. ‡ Ibid., p. 288.
§ Hansard, vol. lxxxi. col. 199.

watered by numerous streams, and most attractive in adding one more to our gold-productive colonies—we are struck by an eloquent prediction of the great modern orator of the United States, which was made at Boston three months after the speech of Sir Robert Peel on the Oregon question. The anticipation of Mr. Webster carries us forward to the consideration of a future of far greater significance than the disputes of the past. "I believe that it is in the course of Providence and of human destiny that a great state is to arise, of English and American descent, whose power will be established over the country on the shores of the Pacific; and that all those rights of natural and political liberty, all those great principles that both nations have inherited from their fathers, will be transmitted through us to them, so that there will exist at the mouth of the Columbia, or more probably farther south, a great Pacific republic, a nation where our children may go for a residence, separating themselves from this government, and forming an integral part of a new government, halfway between England and China; in the most healthful, fertile, and desirable portion of the globe, and quite too far remote from Europe and from this side of the American continent to be under the governmental influence of either country. This state of things is by no means so far off as we may imagine—by no means so remote from the present time as may be supposed; and, looking to this state of things, this question becomes one upon which intelligent and well-disposed men might very readily come to an agreement." *

In writing to Lord Hardinge on the 4th of July, Sir Robert Peel mentions "our reception in England of your closing exploits on the Sutlej." In the royal speech, on the prorogation, the queen congratulated her parliament on the victorious course and happy conclusion of the war in India, and announced that perfect tranquillity prevailed throughout the whole of the British possessions in that quarter of the world. It was in December, 1845, when the British occupied most of the southern bank of the Sutlej, that the Sikh army began to cross the river for the purpose of making an attack on the British frontier. Runjeet Sing, the ruler of the Sikhs and the Punjaub, had, up to the time of his death in 1839, always continued on terms of amity with the British government. His son, Kurruck Sing, who died in 1840, was the ruler of the country, his elder brother being imbecile. An illegitimate son of Runjeet Sing, who succeeded to the government, was assassinated in 1843. His son, being very young, the mother assumed the power, giving her favorite, Lall Sing, the appointment of Vizier. There was no strong hand, as in the days of Runjeet Sing, to restrain the army, and thus, having crossed to the southern bank of the Sutlej, they took up an intrenched position at the village of Ferozeshah. In this camp the Sikhs had a force of more than 50,000 men, with 108 pieces of cannon. The British force, under the commander-in-chief, Sir Hugh Gough, was advancing from Umballah in order to relieve Ferozepoor, held by Sir J. Littler, which had been partially invested. On the 18th of December the British army reached Moodkee, and that evening repulsed an attack of the Sikhs. In this battle Sir Robert Sale received a wound, of which he died two months afterward. The British army, consisting of 16,700 men, and 69 guns, then marched toward Ferozepoor. Sir Henry Hardinge accompanied the army. Up to the time of the Sikhs crossing the Sutlej he had carefully avoided every demonstration which could be construed into an act of hostility. It was now his clear duty to repel aggression, and he put into the performance of that duty all that energy of a chivalrous nature which had so illustrated his career in the Peninsular War. Waiving the claims of his rank as governor-general, he offered to Sir Hugh Gough to serve under him as second in command. On the 21st and 22d of December was fought the great battle of Ferozeshah. The British attacked the intrenched camp on the evening of the 21st. The resistance of the Sikhs was most obstinate. Night closed before the British had become masters of a part of the intrenched quadrangle. Their situation was one of considerable peril. The British reserves had been engaged to the last man; the troops had fought a desperate battle after a long march; they were wearied, and had little food. A writer, who had access to special information, has given an animated description of the night which followed the attack on the intrenched camp. "Side by side, with the dying and the dead, the living lay down. They strove to sleep; some of them did sleep in spite of cold, hunger, thirst, and, worse than all, the cries and groans of their wounded comrades. And all around them and above, the horizon was illuminated with the flames of burning huts, exploding shells, tumbrils, ammunition carts, and occasionally a mine. Moreover, they suffered, even then, from a constant fire of artillery, which became at one time so annoying, where the governor-general was in person, that he was forced to order two regiments, the 80th and 1st Bengal Europeans, to charge with the bayonet. But Sir Henry Hardinge and Sir Hugh Gough knew no rest at all; they went about from corps to corps, animating the men, and cheerfully demonstrating to the officers that there was no alternative but victory or death." *

"The long night wore away," wrote Sir Hugh Gough, "and dawned the morning of the 22d." The line was again formed. All the artillery of the British was brought up to the attack, but this arm of war was overmatched by the heavy cannon of the Sikh batteries. Relying upon the unfailing British weapon, the bayonet, the line advanced. The two commanders rode in front. The inner works were carried; the troops entered the village. But the day was not yet gained. The Sikh army of reserve had marched from the camp above Ferozepoor early in the morning, and their advanced guard became engaged with our cavalry. They, however, drew off, but soon again appeared in tremendous force. Very touching are the words in which the veteran commander-in-chief described his feelings: "The only time I felt a doubt was toward the evening of the 22d, when the fresh enemy advanced with heavy columns of infantry, cavalry, and guns; and our cavalry horses were so thoroughly done up that they would not command even a trot. For a moment then I felt regret (and I deeply deplore my want of confidence in Him who never failed me nor forsook me) as each passing shot left me on horseback: but it was only for a moment." The cavalry movement, with jaded horses and exhausted men, decided the struggle. A panic seized the Sikhs, who believed the British were going to fall on their flank in force. They abandoned their guns, and retreated across the Sutlej. The British in that terrible struggle, almost unmatched in Indian warfare, lost 2415 men, with many distinguished officers. The European regiments were fearfully thinned. Of these the 62d left half its numbers on the field.

Having crossed the Sutlej the Sikhs again took up a fortified position. The British army were so destitute of ammunition that they were unable to prevent the Sikhs again establishing a portion of their army on the left bank of the river. They intrenched themselves near the village of Alliwall to prevent Sir Harry Smith's communication with the main army. With 12,000 men and thirty-two guns he attacked them, carried their camp by storm, captured the whole of their cannon and munitions of war, and drove the entire force precipitately across the Sutlej.

On the 10th of February was fought the great battle of Sobraon. The Sikhs had here intrenched themselves on the southern bank, having constructed a bridge of boats across the river. The victory of Alliwall had enabled Sir Harry Smith to unite with the main army. A siege train had arrived from Delhi. Sir Hugh Gough was strong enough to attack the Sikhs at some moment when the accidents of climate would permit him fairly to engage the enemy. He waited for a fall of rain to swell the ford, or a thaw of snow upon the hills, which would deprive them of any means of crossing except by their bridge of boats. A fall of rain came; the ford was impracticable. The Sikhs, dislodged from their intrenchments, retreated across the bridge, which broke down with the weight of the masses, having lost 13,000 men and sixty-seven guns. The British loss was about 2000 killed and wounded. On the 20th of February Lahore, the capital, was occupied; Dhuleep Sing, the young Maharajah, was reinstated in the city; and a treaty was signed by which he was continued in the relation of a friendly sovereign with the British government.

THE MINISTRY AS FORMED BY LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

Cabinet.

Marquess of Lansdowne.....Lord President of the Council.
Lord Cottenham.....Lord High Chancellor.
Earl of Minto.....Lord Privy Seal.
Right Hon. Lord John Russell..First Lord of the Treasury.
Right Hon. Charles Wood.....Chancellor of the Exchequer.
Earl of Auckland.....First Lord of the Admiralty.

* "Annual Register for 1845," p. 301.

* "Quarterly Review," vol. lxxviii. p. 203.

Right Hon. Sir George Grey....	Secretary of State for the Home Department.
Right Hon. Viscount Palmerston.	Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.
Earl Grey.....	Secretary of State for the Colonies.
Right Hon. Sir John Cam Hobhouse.....	President of the Board of Control.
Earl of Clarendon.....	President of the Board of Trade.
Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay.....	Paymaster of the Forces.
Marquess of Clanricarde.....	Postmaster-General.
Lord Campbell.....	Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.
Right Hon. Viscount Morpeth...	Woods and Forests.
Right Hon. H. Labouchere.....	Chief Secretary for Ireland.

Not of the Cabinet.

Duke of Wellington.....	Commander-in-Chief.
Marquess of Anglesey.....	Master-General of the Ordnance.
Right Hon. Fox Maule.....	Secretary at War.
Right Hon. T. M. Gibson.....	Vice-President of the Board of Trade.
H. G. Ward, Esq.....	Secretary of the Admiralty.
Right Hon. R. L. Shiel.....	Master of the Mint.
J. Jervis, Esq.....	Attorney-General.
David Dundas, Esq.....	Solicitor-General.

Great Officers of State.

Earl Fortescue.....	Lord Steward.
Earl Spencer.....	Lord Chamberlain.
Duke of Norfolk.....	Master of the Horse.

Ireland.

Earl of Bessborough.....	Lord-Lieutenant.
Right Hon. Maziere Brady.....	Lord High Chancellor.

Scotland.

Right Hon. Andrew Rutherford..	Lord Advocate.
Thomas Maitland, Esq.....	Solicitor-General.

CHAPTER CCXXXVIII.

The great Irish famine—The potato-rot of 1845 and 1846—Modes of relief adopted by the government—Mr. O'Connell's call upon England for help—His death—Munificent subscriptions—Irish landlords and cottier tenants—Navigation laws suspended—Ten Hours Factory Bill—Abundant harvest in England—Monetary pressure and panic—Excitement on the subject of national defences—The Duke of Wellington's letter—Proposed increase of the income tax—The House of Commons on the night of the 24th of February—News of the abdication of Louis Philippe—Real causes of the overthrow of the French monarchy—The revolution of 1848—Provisional government appointed—Chartism in England revived by the Socialist revolution—The Tenth of April—Preparations of the government—Physical-force Chartism at an end—The attempt at insurrection in Ireland—The French Republic established in bloodshed—Paris in a state of siege—Prince Louis Napoleon president—Convulsions of the continent—Progress of improvement in England—The Public Health Bill—The impulse to social amelioration given by Prince Albert—Free-trade banquet at Manchester to celebrate the final extinction of the corn laws—Meeting of parliament the next day—Tranquillity and loyalty of England contrasted in the royal speech with the condition of the continental kingdoms.

Postscript.

Tables—Sovereigns—Population—Occupations of the people—Census of education—Census of religious worship—Revenue and expenditure—Commerce.

One of the most intelligent and experienced of the official men attached to the Whig government thus wrote in the beginning of 1848: "The time has not yet arrived at which any man can with confidence say that he fully appreciates the nature and the bearings of that great event which will long be inseparably associated with the year just departed." That event was "the great Irish famine." This thoughtful writer adds, "Unless we are much deceived, posterity will trace up to that famine the commencement of a salutary revolution in the habits of a nation long singularly unfortunate, and will acknowledge that on this as on many other occasions supreme wisdom has educed permanent good out of transient evil." *

We have seen how the first appearances of the potato-rot, which was to deprive the population of Ireland of their too-exclusive article of subsistence, induced that alarm in 1845 which was the turning-point in the memorable change of the policy of Sir Robert Peel as to the supply of food for the population of all this kingdom. The disease in the crop of 1845 was not so universal as to prevent a considerable portion being saved; but the quantity that was found unfit for food when the store-pits were opened in 1846 fully testified to the wisdom of the step which Sir Robert Peel took upon his own responsibility before he quitted office, of giving a commission to a great mercantile house to purchase a hundred thousand pounds' worth of Indian corn in the American markets. That supply was intrusted to Irish commissariat officers in the spring of 1846, to sell from various depôts, at a moderate price, wherever the ordinary supplies of food were found to be deficient. The necessity for something more effectual than even such a timely but partial supply was soon apparent. In 1846 the fatal potato blight took place earlier and was much more destructive than in 1845. Father Mathew, the great temperance apostle of Ireland, has described how, on the 27th of July, he saw in a journey from Cork to Dublin the doomed plant blooming in all the luxuriance of an abundant harvest; but how, on his return on the 3d of August, he beheld one wide waste of putrefying vegetation: "In many places the wretched people were seated on the fences of their decaying gardens, wringing their hands, and wailing bitterly the destruction that had left them foodless." The experience of the partial failure of 1845 had not taught the people that it was dangerous to depend upon one species of food alone. The great proportion of the early culture of 1846 was that of potatoes. Toward the end of July the potatoes began to show symptoms of the disease of the previous year. There was first a little brown spot on the leaf; the spots gradually increased in number and size until the foliage withered and the stem became brittle. Then, although the stalks remained green, the leaves suddenly blackened; the growth of the root was arrested; the staple food of a nation had perished. No potatoes were that year pitted. Those that were of any value when dug up were immediately sold or consumed, in the natural apprehension that they would rot. The autumn came, and it was now found that the potato-crop had, with very few local exceptions, universally and entirely failed.

Before the distress in Ireland had reached its height—before the word "famine" was the only term which could express the real state of human beings who would die for want of food if help were not bestowed upon them—the government of Lord John Russell had devised various modes for the relief of sufferings and privations which were, even in their early stage, far more extensive than those which had been caused by the failure of the potato crop in various years during the previous quarter of a century.

On the 28th of August, 1846, the roaly assent was given to three acts, especially directed to meet the inevitable failure of the great Irish esculent. They were acts for the employment of the poor in the distressed districts for a limited period, for providing additional funds for provisional loans and grants for public works, and for authorizing a further issue of money in aid of public works. The application of these measures was a tentative process. The Labor Rate Act at the beginning of September was directed to be applied to twenty-four districts, proclaimed to be in a state of distress. At the beginning of October this measure was found ineffectual, and the lord lieutenant issued a circular authorizing the undertaking of works of permanent utility. In the House of Commons, on the 20th of January, 1847, Lord John Russell described how the Labor Rate Act and other acts of the last session had worked. An immense staff of servants, upward of eleven thousand, had been employed to furnish labor to half a million of adults, representing two millions of souls, at an expense estimated for January of 800,000*l*. It was difficult to find trustworthy servants, and to prevent the improper employment upon the works of persons by no means destitute. It was desirable for the government to adopt new measures; to form relief committees empowered to receive subscriptions and levy rates, and to be intrusted with donations from the state. Out of the sums thus raised they were to purchase food, and deliver rations to the famishing inhabitants. The system of affording relief through public works had utterly broken down; the payment of money was evidently liable to gross abuse; and undressed food, such as meal, might be exchanged for less needful articles by the improvident. Rations of cooked food offered the most effectual mode of relieving the helpless and prostrate people. Then began that beneficial system which was limited by the act to the 1st of October, and which reached its highest point in July, 1847, when upward of three millions of persons received separate rations. The famine was stayed. The harvest was approaching in which the staple food was not affected by the disease. Impressively has it been said by Sir Charles Trevelyan, "This enterprise was in truth the grandest attempt ever made to grapple with famine over a whole country. Organized armies, amounting altogether to some hundreds of thousands, had been rationed before; but neither ancient nor modern history can furnish a parallel to the fact that upward of three millions of persons were fed every day in the neighborhood of their own homes, by administrative arrangements emanating from and controlled by one central office." *

* "Edinburgh Review," vol. lxxxvii. p. 229. Article "On the Irish Crisis," by Sir Charles Trevelyan.

The last time that the voice of Daniel O'Connell was heard in parliament was on the 8th of February, 1847. He called upon the House of Commons to do something speedy and efficacious—some great act of national generosity, calculated upon a broad and liberal scale. "Ireland is in your hands—in your power. If you do not save her, she cannot save herself." The great demagogue was dying. The wretched parodists of his system of agitation, which was as powerful for good as for evil—the ranting and swaggering young Irelanders, who, as Charles Lamb said of the early dramatists, used blood as they would "the paint of the property-man in the theatre"—had separated from him when he declared against the employment of physical force to obtain the repeal of the union. In the famine he perhaps clearly saw how social evils had been neglected for the advocacy of purely political objects very uncertain in their possible benefits for the future, and deeply injurious in their present tendency to put aside all real improvement. He died at Genoa, on the 15th of May. Had he lived he would have seen and acknowledged how England had answered, not merely his call upon her generosity, but had yielded at once and wholly to the cry that had gone up to heaven from the afflicted land, and had stretched forth her hand to succor and to save. Distressing as it must be, even at this distance of time, to look back upon the amount of human misery produced by this national calamity, there were circumstances connected with its relief that we can regard with pride and admiration. The noble exertions of public officers and private individuals, the unstinting employment of the pecuniary resources of the government, the munificence of the subscriptions sent to Ireland from the sister kingdom, the tender sympathy with the sufferers of every true English heart—these might be considered by a captious few as the mere payment of a debt from the happier island; but if so the payment was large and liberal, and such as could scarcely have been anticipated, even by those who best understood the English character. Captain Mann, an officer of the Coast Guard, who had seen the whole course of this great affliction, and who, when the worst was over, said, "I frequently look back upon it as a fearful and horrid dream," was of opinion that "such sufferings and such help cannot be easily forgotten." The government in 1846 and 1847 advanced more than seven millions of money. The British Association for the Relief of the Distress in Ireland and Scotland applied to Ireland half a million sterling of the subscriptions raised. The Society of Friends collected in addition 168,000*l.*; and many persons in England contributed largely, independently of any association. Sir Robert Peel, in his cabinet memorandum of November 1st, 1845, thought there would be no hope of contributions here for Irish relief. He apprehended that the charitable would have monster meetings and repeal rent too present to their minds to make any great exertions.† All such feelings quickly passed away. England did her duty. "In the hour of her utmost need, Ireland became sensible of an union of feeling and interest with the rest of the empire, which would have moved hearts less susceptible of every generous and grateful emotion than those of her sons and daughters."‡ It was during the eventful years from 1846 to 1850 that the vast amount of emigration took place which has been called the Irish Exodus. Before the gold discoveries in Australia, the emigrants from England and Scotland were comparatively few. "It is to Ireland that we must chiefly ascribe the departure, during those five years, of a million and a quarter of emigrants from the ports of the United Kingdom, three fourths of whom went to the United States." *

Sir James Graham wrote to Sir Robert Peel at the commencement of the alarm with respect to the potato crop, "A great national risk is always incurred when a population so dense as that of Ireland subsists on the potato; for it is the cheapest and the lowest food, and if it fail no substitute can be found for starving multitudes."† Why was the population of Ireland driven to subsist on the cheapest and the lowest food? Why was the agriculture of the south and west in a neglected state, little wheat being grown, with oats inferior for milling purposes, and green crops almost unknown? Why was the sole foundation for a sufficiency of food the renting of a bit of land on which a family could be located in a miserable cabin; the population rapidly increasing, inasmuch as land used for raising potatoes will support three times the number as the same land laid down to corn will support? These small tenures paid the landlord a higher rent than could have been obtained by letting to cultivators on a large scale. The rent of the cottier tenantry was always forthcoming, either in money or in kind. This certain payment, however delayed, was the absolute condition of their precarious existence upon the cheapest and the lowest food. Too often, even in the best times, they were standing on the margin of absolute want, especially when they were waiting for the ingathering of their crop. It was as truly as boldly said, by a great political economist, soon after the Irish crisis, "With individual exceptions (some of them very honorable ones), the owners of Irish estates do nothing for the land but drain it of its produce." He had previously said, "In no sound theory of private property was it ever contemplated that the proprietor of land should be merely a sinecurist quartered on it."‡ Mr. O'Connell, in the speech we have quoted, replied to some such inference: "It is asserted that the Irish landlords do not do their duty. Several of them have done their duty; others have not. . . . But recollect how incumbered is the property of Ireland, how many of her estates are in chancery, how many in the hands of trustees." The legislature did recollect this, and in 1849 passed the act by which a commission for the sale of incumbered estates was established. From the beneficial operations of this commission, and through a better spirit infused into the proprietors of unincumbered estates, much of the land has come into the hands of skilful cultivators; and that race of cottier tenantry, of whose family one or more of its members was supported by beggary, has in great part vanished. Religiously and wisely did the Society of Friends in Ireland regard the mysterious dispensation with which their country had been visited in the blight of the potato, "as a means permitted by an all-wise Providence to exhibit more strikingly the unsound state of its social condition."

The question of a probable scarcity of food, not only in Ireland and in the Highlands and isles of Scotland, but in the kingdom generally, was very early in the session brought before parliament, upon a proposal of the government for the total suspension of all import duties upon corn, and of the navigation laws through which importation was restricted. There was very little opposition to this measure. The Protectionists were paralyzed by the fearful presence of the Irish famine, which forbade the consideration of class interests while three millions of people were crying out for food. Sir Robert Peel has justly said, that if subsequent events could fairly be taken into account, the various measures taken by parliament to mitigate the sufferings of 1846 and 1847, and "the hurried suspension of the navigation laws and of the remaining duties on articles of subsistence, would exercise no unfavorable influence on the opinion which might be formed on the precautionary measures of 1846." Unanimously as these measures were passed, as an absolute and uncontrollable necessity, there was scarcely a debate during the session in which the repeal of the corn laws and the abolition or reduction of protective duties were not denounced as causes of present injury and of future mischief. When the budget was brought forward Lord George Bentinck denied that free-trade had caused any in-

* "Edinburgh Review," vol. lxxxvii. p. 269.
† "Memoirs by Sir Robert Peel," p. 143.
‡ Sir Charles Trevelyan, "Edinburgh Review," vol. lxxxvii. p. 316.

* See the twenty-second report of the emigration commissioners, 1862. Table, p. 65.
† "Memoirs by Sir Robert Peel," p. 114.
‡ John Stuart Mill, "Principles of Political Economy," book ii. chap. ii. sect. 6.

creased consumption, as affirmed by the chancellor of the exchequer, except in slave-grown sugar and in foreign silks; and he read an address from the Spitalfields weavers to himself, which thus concluded: 'We entertain the idea that had your lordship possessed the reins of government, the people of Ireland would not have perished to the extent they have, because we conceive that your lordship would not have regarded the fashionable principles of political economy, whereby the people might have been saved." His lordship with great complacency affirmed that he agreed with them.

It was during this session that the Ten Hours' Factory Bill was carried upon the motion of Mr. Fielden; the members of the government being divided in opinion, not only upon the general question of this interference with labor, but as to the probable benefit, or rather injury, of limiting factory labor to ten hours or to eleven hours. Sir Robert Peel was strongly opposed to restrictions of labor which might lessen the power of the operatives to command the material necessaries and comforts of life. It had been said that a diminution of the hours of labor would tend to the moral and intellectual improvement of the great laboring class. "I firmly believe," said Sir Robert Peel, "that the source of the future peace, happiness, and prosperity of this country lies in the improvement, religious as well as moral, of the different classes of society; but it is in thus advocating the elevation of the people that I oppose these restrictions. I do not deny the advantage of leisure; but of this I am perfectly convinced, that the real way to improve the condition of the laborer, and to elevate the character of the working classes of this country, is to give them a command over the necessaries of life." When the bill went to the House of Lords, Lord Brougham laughed at the idea of passing the bill for the sake of mental improvement. After ten hours' work a man was too tired for the task of self-cultivation. He had been trying to educate the peasantry for these twenty-five years, and his constant competitor and antagonist, by which he had always been defeated, was—sleep.

On the 23d of July parliament was prorogued by the queen. Her majesty, after announcing her intention immediately to dissolve the present parliament, said, "I rely with confidence on the loyalty to the throne, and attachment to the free institutions of this country, which animate the great body of my people. I join with them in supplications to Almighty God that the dearth by which we have been afflicted may, by the divine blessing, be converted into cheapness and plenty."

The prayer was heard. On the 17th of October thanksgivings were offered up in all the churches of England for the abundant harvest. But in a country of such large and complicated commercial relations as Great Britain, the transition from dearth to plenty cannot produce that universal gladness which is felt in simpler communities, when the garners are newly filled, and the privations of the summer and the dread of the winter are removed in a bounteous autumn. In September and October there had been such a pressure upon the merchants and traders as had not been experienced since the great panic of 1825. Mercantile houses in London of the highest eminence suspended their payments. Corresponding disasters occurred at Manchester, Liverpool, and Glasgow. All the usual accommodation in the money market was at an end. In October the alarm swelled into a general panic; the crash of eminent houses went on in London; in the country, not only mercantile firms but banks were failing; the funds fell rapidly; exchequer bills were at a high rate of discount. On the 19th of October a deputation from the bankers, merchants, and shipowners of Liverpool addressed the first lord of the treasury on the necessity for some remedial measures. On the 23d a deputation of London bankers urged upon the government to grant relief by a suspension of the Bank Charter Act of 1844. On the 25th of October a letter was addressed, signed by Lord John Russell and the chancellor of the exchequer, to the governor and deputy-governor of the Bank of England, in which it was announced that "her majesty's government have come to the conclusion that a time has arrived when they ought to attempt, by some extraordinary and temporary measure, to restore confidence to the mercantile and manufacturing community." They recommended, therefore, the directors of the Bank of England to enlarge the amount of their discounts and advances upon approved security, charging a high rate of interest. The letter added, "If this course should lead to any infringement of the existing law, her majesty's government will be prepared to propose to parliament on its meeting a bill of indemnity." The recommendation was immediately acceded to by the Bank of England. There was a partial restoration of confidence; but the ruin had been too widely spread not to make its effects long felt by the mercantile and manufacturing classes, and thus by abridging the capital engaged in the employment of labor, extending the suffering to the class least able to endure it.

The new parliament was opened on the 18th of November. Mr. Charles Shaw Lefevre was re-elected speaker. On the 23d the royal speech was delivered by commission. It announced that although the course recommended by ministers to the Bank of England might have led to an infringement of the law, the law had not been infringed. It went on to say that the alarm had subsided; that the pressure on the banking and commercial interests had been mitigated; and that the abundant harvest with which the country had been blessed had alleviated the evils which always accompany a want of employment in the manufacturing districts. On the 30th of November the chancellor of the exchequer, in a speech in which he defended the government interference with the Bank Act of 1844, ascribed the recent pressure to the continued drain of available capital for the purchase of foreign corn and for the construction of railways. He moved the appointment of a select committee "to inquire into the causes of the recent commercial distress, and how far it has been affected by the laws for regulating the issue of bank-notes payable on demand." After three nights of debate the motion was agreed to. It is unnecessary to follow the course of that debate. A law was passed for the prevention of crime and outrage in Ireland; and a bill to remove the civil disabilities of the Jews was read a first time, the second reading being deferred to the 7th of February. The measure proposed by Lord John Russell was occasioned by the return at the general election of the Baron Rothschild as one of the members for the city of London. It was first presented in the shape of a resolution, affirming the eligibility of Jews to all functions and offices to which Roman Catholics were admissible by law. The prime minister, who was the colleague of Baron Rothschild, vindicated his measure in a speech of great eloquence and historical research. He was opposed by Sir Robert Inglis and Lord Ashley; he was supported by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli.

On the 20th of December it was moved and carried in both houses that parliament should be adjourned to the 3d of February.

When parliament met after the recess, there was existing in the country an unusual excitement on the subject of our national defences. Many may remember how the enjoyment of the great domestic festival of Christmas was somewhat marred that season, by a letter of the Earl of Ellesmere which appeared in the "Times" of the 25th of December, 1847. From the 10th of October, 1846, when the king of the French and M. Guizot, his minister, by a stroke of policy intended to circumvent the supposed designs of the British government, secretly prepared and hastily accomplished the double marriage of the Queen of Spain with the Infanta of Spain, the Duke of Cadiz, and of the Infanta with the Duke de Montpensier, the son of Louis Philippe, it was evident that between the two courts of France and England there would no longer be friendship. There had been too much bad faith on the part of the king to permit the old relations to continue, which had existed during the days of the entente cordiale at Windsor Castle and at the Château d'Eu. M. Guizot exaggerated the importance to France of the Spanish alliance. He has said that he had openly laid down the principle that the throne of Spain should not pass from the House of Bourbon, and that he secured its triumph when it was on the point of defeat.* The British government perhaps took an equally exaggerated view of a new family compact, in being, as M. Guizot infers, more influenced by memory and imagination than enlightened by observation; the past casting its mighty shadows over their minds, and leading them to waste their strength in the pursuit or avoidance of phantoms.† Whether the apprehension of the mischief that was especially provided against by the allied powers in 1814 were well-founded or unreasonable, the correspondence between the two governments became altered in its character; and the English people, with a natural hatred of trickery, and with peculiar feelings of disgust at some circumstances connected with the marriage of Queen Isabella to the Infanta, from that time forth ceased to regard Louis Philippe with the sentiments of respect and confidence which once prevailed. When Lord John Russell, therefore, in making his financial statement for the year, exhibited a probable excess of expenditure beyond revenue, occasioned by the Irish famine and by the commercial panic, he said it was obvious that the deficiency must be met by taxation, or by great reductions in the army and navy. He adverted to a letter of the Duke of Wellington on our national defences, which had been described by a foreign writer,* animated by the most friendly feelings toward England, as a pamphleteering reply to the Prince de Joinville. Nothing, he continued, could be more foreign to the intentions of the Duke of Wellington, or could have given him greater pain, than the publication of sentiments which he had confidentially expressed to a brother officer. The duke had communicated to the government what he considered to be a deficiency in our defences; but it was far from his wish to make any public appeal, or to exasperate relations between England and other countries. It was clear from the statements of Lord John Russell that France was the country from which danger was apprehended. "Under a king," he said, "who was a sincere lover of peace, since 1833 the active preparations and increase of the naval force of France had been very extensive." The proposition of the government was to increase the military, naval, and ordnance estimates by 358,000*l.*, to lay the foundation of a militia by a grant of 150,000*l.*, and to meet the probable deficiency of revenue by increasing the income tax to five per cent. The proposed armament was moderate, compared with the public alarm on the subject of invasion; but it was evident that a reduction of expenditure would be strenuously demanded by the union of two very opposite parties—the free-traders and the country gentlemen. The House of Commons was debating these subjects, when the question whether we could look to the professed friendship of Louis Philippe as our security for peace, or prepare for a rupture arising out of his bitter remembrance of our dissatisfaction with his schemes for the aggrandizement of his house, suddenly received a solution most unexpected—pregnant with far higher consequences than the success or the failure of an obsolete policy, totally out of character with the altered condition of society in which a king could no longer say, "I am the state."

* Guizot, "Memoirs of Sir Robert Peel," p. 336.
† Ibid., p. 330.

Mr. Cobden, in his "Historical Episode," which, however decided may be the bias of his opinions, exhibits many of the qualifications of the historian, has preserved the recollection of a scene of singular interest. "On the evening of the 24th of February, 1848, while the House of Commons was in session, a murmur of conversation suddenly arose at the door, and spread throughout the house, when was witnessed—what never occurred before or since, in the writer's experience—a suspension for a few minutes of all attention to the business of the house, while every member was engaged in close and earnest conversation with his neighbor. The intelligence had arrived of the abdication and flight of Louis Philippe, and of the proclamation of the republic." Mr. Cobden relates a curious anecdote of the impression which this startling intelligence produced upon Sir Robert Peel. Mr. Cobden and Mr. Hume were sitting together when the news reached their bench. Mr. Hume stepped across the floor to tell it to the ex-minister; and on returning to his place, repeated the following remarkable words as Sir Robert's commentary: "This comes of trying to carry on a government by means of a mere majority of a chamber, without regard to the opinion out of doors."†

Before we proceed to narrate, with necessary brevity, the portentous event which shook Europe to its centre, "with fear of change perplexing monarchs," we feel it due to M. Guizot, who has been accused of precipitating the fall of his sovereign by his conduct in the Spanish marriages, to exhibit his opinion upon this debatable matter: "It has sometimes been said that the Spanish marriages, and the ill-humor which the English government had felt on their account, were not without their influence in this catastrophe. This is a frivolous mistake wth regard to its nature and causes; they were altogether internal. It was a social and moral crisis—an earthquake, French at first, and afterward European, but with which the external relations of states and their governments had nothing to do."*

The real causes of the "social and moral crisis," by which the government of France was overthrown, were too deeply imbedded in the feelings and opinions of that large portion of the French people who were shut out from an active participation in public affairs, to be at first seen and understood by political observers in England. The proximate causes were on the surface. A very short time sufficed to reveal, what might have been conjectured from the tendency of much of the current literature of the time, that the employers of labor and the receivers of wages had no bond of union or sympathy; were suspicious of each other; were regarding each other as natural enemies—the one accustomed to view their almost exclusive possession of political power as their exclusive and inalienable right; the other, debarred from civil privileges, hating the government much, but hating the middle class more, upon whose affections the government was founded. The opposition in the chambers were ready to excite this uneasiness in the masses. They wielded the double weapons of the tribune and the press; dangerous as orators, they were more dangerous as journalists. Seeking for the attainment of power while they strove to accomplish an electoral reform, they did not hesitate to ally themselves with men of more extreme opinions, whose democratic principles were directed rather toward the maintenance of the doctrine of "Equality" under a new form than to the assertion of "Liberty," as understood by the founders of the revolution which had overthrown the ancient monarchy; which was the cry of the indignant citizens who destroyed the monarchy of the restoration, to place upon the throne one who was proud to call himself a citizen king. The constitutional opposers of the government of Louis Philippe in 1848 were ready enough to propitiate the assertors of equality, without perceiving that it had taken a practical shape, in which was involved the modification or destruction of all the conditions of society which rested on the basis of individual property exchanging capital for labor, and which, carrying out the principle of competition, regarded the consumer more than the producer. A profound thinker has said, "The passion for equality has never ceased to occupy that deep-seated place in the hearts of the French people which it was the first to seize: it clings to the feelings they cherish most fondly."† In 1848 the principle of co-operation was regarded by the workmen of France less as a means of benefiting their condition than as placing all men upon a level. Vain attempt to war against nature, who, in making men unequal in bodily and mental vigor, has decreed that the most skilful, the wisest, and the strongest shall be foremost in the race.

It is not compatible with the limits of our work to enter into any minute detail of the revolution of February. The legislative session had opened on the 28th of December, 1847. The king's speech contained an allusion to the agitation for "electoral and parliamentary reform"—which words had become a toast at several provincial banquets. Petitions for reform had been presented to the Chamber of Deputies. On the opening of the session there had been discussions in the chamber on the legality of peaceful and unarmed political meetings. On the 22d of February there was to have been a reform banquet in the twelfth arrondissement of Paris—a quarter where the materials for disorder were abundant. The minister of the interior forbade the meeting, as the committee for the banquet had proposed a procession of national guard in uniform, and of students. The uniform of the national guard had almost disappeared from public view. They were no longer favored and flattered by the government. The principal leaders of the parliamentary opposition now announced that the banquet was adjourned, in consequence of the declaration of the minister of the interior. This postponement was loudly murmured at by the democratic journalists. On the morning of the 22d the streets were crowded at an early hour. About noon a crowd surrounded the Chamber of Deputies, and a cry was raised of "Down with Guizot;" but in the evening the city was quiet. Not so during the night. The government was collecting troops, and the people were raising barricades. The rappel was again heard calling out the national guard at seven in the

* M. Chevallier.
† "The Three Panics," p. 12.

* Guizot, "Memoirs of Sir Robert Peel," p. 337.
† De Tocqueville, "France before the Revolution of 1789," Mr. Reeve's translation, p. 383.

morning of the 23d. Some firing soon took place between the populace and the municipal guard. But the national guard had come to an agreement among themselves to act the part of conciliators rather than that of the opposers of the people; and their presence in consequence prevented any attempt of the regular troops to disperse the multitudes assembled in various quarters. Soon the cry of Vive la Réforme was heard among groups of the citizen soldiers. The royal occupants of the Tuileries began to be seriously alarmed. A council was hastily summoned, when M. Guizot, finding that the cabinet could not rely upon the firmness of the king, expressed his determination to retire. He himself announced his resignation to the Chamber of Deputies. There was joy that night in Paris, for it was thought that the cause of reform had gained a victory. Houses were illuminated as if the crisis were passed. But a band of republicans bearing a red flag had come forth, and gathering together before the Hotel of Foreign Affairs, occupied by M. Guizot, where a battalion of infantry were stationed, a shot fired from the mob was answered by a volley from the soldiery, and fifty fell, killed or wounded. A procession was immediately formed. The bodies of the dead were carried by torchlight through the streets, amid the frantic cries of excited crowds demanding vengeance. The opportunity of restoring tranquillity by the exercise of force had passed away. During the night the king had reluctantly decided for concession. He had sent for M. Thiers and offered him the formation of a ministry. As the condition of his acceptance M. Thiers stipulated that M. Odillon Barrot should be a member of the cabinet. This was entirely to yield upon the question of reform, and wholly to change the policy of the government. But there was no alternative for the perplexed king. The change of administration was announced by placards in the morning. The command of the troops had been given to Marshal Bugeaud during the night, and it is probable that he would have adopted no half measures to support the crown. His command was superseded by the new ministers, who judged that the danger of insurrection was passed. They were deceived. About noon the populace attacked the Palais Royal, and sacked the apartments. The Tuileries was next to be assailed. The king left the palace with his queen. The mob broke in. The throne was carried along the boulevards and was burned at the foot of the column of July.

The Chamber of Deputies met at half-past twelve, when M. Dupin announced the abdication of Louis Philippe. M. Dupin also announced that the king had abdicated in favor of his grandson, the Comte de Paris, appointing the Duchess of Orleans regent. The duchess, leading her two sons by the hand, entered the chamber accompanied by the Duke de Nemours. She said, "I have come here with all I have dear in the world." Some repugnance was manifested at the presence of the royal strangers, but the duchess appearing unwilling to retire, a stormy discussion began. By a law of 1842 it was declared that during the minority of the Comte de Paris, in the event of the demise of the king, the Duke de Nemours should be regent. The debate turned upon this difficulty. It was soon interrupted by the rush of a crowd that filled all the passages of the chambers and swarmed into the hall. The mother and her children were surrounded by armed men; but still she resolved to remain. She heard the demand for a provisional government; she heard the assertion that a regency could not be created. Amid clamors and threats she was forced by her attendants out of the hall. The deputies were scarcely free agents, as, with the applauses or the hisses of the fierce republicans who were now in command of the situation, the members of a provisional government were nominated. Seven deputies were finally appointed to this responsibility. In the mean time another provisional government had been formed at the Hôtel de Ville. The members chosen by the chamber were Lamartine, Marie, Ledru-Rollin, Crèmieux, Dupont de l'Eure, Arago, and Garnier Pagès. The provisional government of the Hôtel de Ville consisted of Marrast, Flocon, Louis Blanc, and Albert. The seven proceeded to the Hôtel de Ville, and there, after violent altercation, came to a compromise with the four. Liberty and equality shook hands. There was to be a republic; but a republic in which the principles of Socialism should be the paramount element. At the top of the stairs of the Hôtel de Ville Lamartine proclaimed the republic to the populace below. The provisional government of eleven declared that the Chamber of Deputies was dissolved; that a national assembly should be convoked, the members of the "ex-chamber of peers" being forbidden to assemble. On the 25th "a proclamation," signed by Garnier Pagès and Louis Blanc, declared that the provisional government undertook to secure the existence of the workman by labor; to guarantee labor to all citizens. On the 26th the members presented themselves to the people assembled before the Hôtel de Ville, and there Lamartine proclaimed the abolition of royalty and the establishment of the republic, with the exercise of their political rights by the people. The prospect of universal suffrage was made still more agreeable by the announcement of the opening of national workshops for the unemployed workmen.

Chartism had slumbered in England since the monster petition of 1839.* The principles of Socialism, which had been diligently propagated in France during the ten years which preceded the revolution of 1848, gradually made their way to a small extent in this country. Enthusiasts multiplied, who believed that the evils of competition were to be swept away by one broad recognition of the blessings of co-operation. While Robert Owen, the most benevolent of fanatics, still continued to predict that grass would soon grow in the streets of London at the time when happy communities should produce every necessary and every luxury of life for themselves in capacious parallelograms, there were less harmless regenerators of society who asserted that universal felicity could not exist without the complete establishment of democratic principles which should know no distinctions of rank and wealth. "Liberty and property," wrote Voltaire, "is the cry of England. It is of far higher worth than St. George and my right—than Saint Denis and Mount Joy. It is the cry of nature." The social regenerators of England in 1848, when they had taken the government of the country into their own hands, "would divide the land into small farms, and give every man an opportunity of getting his living by the sweat of his brow." Such was one of the doctrines propounded at "the convention" held in the week which preceded the great demonstration of the 10th of April. The organ of Chartism was the "Northern Star," of Mr. Feargus O'Connor, one of the members for Nottingham, a brawling ignorant demagogue, who, not without an eye to his own profit, had contrived to induce many hard-working people to subscribe their money to his schemes for establishing "The National Land Company." This association was, in truth, founded upon those rights of property which his disciples, with some inconsistency, were inclined to abolish for all landowners except themselves. In the mean time, while the higher mysteries of Chartism only now and then peeped out, the great business of the Chartists, was to get up a petition to parliament for their five points, which being completed, and alleged to have received 5,706,000 signatures, was to be presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Feargus O'Connor on the 10th of April.

The preparations for this day would have been calculated to alarm any other than an energetic government. A great convulsion might have shaken all our institutions into temporary disorder had not the avowed designs of the physical-force Chartists been promptly met by such an organization as would have crushed mob-violence into annihilation at the moment of its display. The ministry took the advice of the Duke of Wellington. He so judiciously arranged a plan for the presence of the military power at every point where a contest might by possibility occur, that without the display of a single soldier effectual resistance was impossible. "You have left one point unprotected—one way in which they could escape," said a member of the cabinet to the great captain. "That was precisely what I intended to do," replied the duke.† But, more than all the combinations of military science was a display of strength which proclaimed to the Chartists—some of whom were young enthusiasts who had brooded over the evils of society hopelessly and passionately; many, desperate men, such as the prolétaires of France; all, without any definite plan, at the command of ignorant and presumptuous leaders—that they alone were not the people. On that morning a hundred and seventy thousand special constables stood shoulder to shoulder in the streets of London, each armed only with a staff which represented the strength of the law—a band where a real equality of rights and duties placed the peer side by side with the shopkeeper; where the merchant stood amid his clerks, and the manufacturer with his workmen ; where the humblest and the highest exchanged the resolves of good subjects, that, come what might, the generation which had seen so many ameliorations of the state of society peacefully accomplished, should not be disgraced by an attempt to redress grievances by physical force, under the direction of empty-headed demagogues. The display of the national will—the unostentatious preparations of the government, and their bold resolve not to prevent the proposed meeting of the Chartists on Kennington Common, but steadily to oppose their return over either of the bridges in procession—was enough for present safety and future peace. This resistance to their return in multitudes at nightfall was accomplished, not by the soldiery, who continued unseen to the last, but by the police alone. The great petition was ignobly carried to the House of Commons in a cart, to be presented by Mr. Feargus O'Connor without his legions. Physical-force Chartism was really at an end, although its revival was several times attempted, to be put down by the same firmness.

* Ante, p. 1236. † We state this from private information.

Contemporaneous with the abortive proceedings of disaffection in London, in Glasgow, and in a few provincial towns, was what at first appeared to be a serious renewal of insurrection in Ireland. An association was in 1847 formed in Dublin, called "The Irish Confederation." Of this confederation Mr. Smith O'Brien, with several others who attained to distinction as the utterers of the boldest sedition, and the announcers of the bloodiest resolves, were leading authorities. The French Revolution gave a new impulse to their exertions. "Up with the barricades and invoke the God of battles," cried Mr. Meagher, at a meeting held to congratulate the provisional government of France. The uttering of seditious speeches was, up to April, an offence which the law regarded as a misdemeanor ; but an act was then passed which rendered it felony to compass or imagine the deposition of the queen, or to give expression to any such intention. Under this act Mr. Mitchell was tried and convicted, and Mr. Duffy was about to be prosecuted. It was determined by Mr. O'Brien and his bold associates in an act of treason to rise in August to rescue Mr. Mitchell, and to prevent the trial of Mr. Duffy. A war directory was appointed by the confederation, and a mighty warrior, Mr. O'Brien, was to take the field in person and lead his forces to the overthrow of the despotic government. On the 28th of July the great rebel was in arms. He engaged the police in a pitched battle near Ballingarry, where he had seven of his army killed and several wounded. On the 5th of August he was arrested at Thurles. The adventure of "the cabbage-garden" will be long remembered, in connection with the wise mercy of the government, which, after a few years, permitted his return to Ireland, to warn political fanaticism of the probable danger of that public contempt which awaits the anarchist who is too silly to be mischievous. The insurrection had soon come to an end. There were trials for high treason, of which the ridicule attached to the traitors could not prevent the people acknowledging that their capital sentence was deserved ; rejoicing equally when, in the next year, after the demand of a writ of error, the sentence was commuted to transportation. Ireland was now free to apply herself to the amelioration of her social evils, instead of continuing a vain struggle for a separation from a country which had saved her in the direst hour of her calamity, and which was now ready to devote her capital and her skill, in a hearty endeavor to improve the material resources of the neglected land.

The essential differences between the institutions of England and of France, and the no less remarkable diversity in the political aspirations of the people of each, may in some degree account for the contrast between the two countries which 1848 presented. The insurrectionary movements in the one were suppressed without bloodshed. In the other, within four months after the proclamation of the republic, sixteen thousand persons were killed or wounded in the streets of Paris. The short career of the provisional government of France had been upheld by military force, amid the increasing animosities of the Socialists. When the national assembly was opened, and had appointed an executive commission of five members, there was an attempt to form another provisional government of those who had now come to be designated as Red Republicans. This attempt was put down. The election of Prince Louis Napoleon to a seat in the national assembly was met by the proposition of a decree for his banishment. He was admitted to take his seat by the vote of a great majority. Close upon this event came the terrible crisis which, after four days' fighting, ended in the total rout of the insurgents, the appointment of General Cavaignac as dictator, and the declaration that Paris was in a state of siege—that is, under martial law. This state endured from the 24th of June till the 20th of October. On the 21st of December Prince Louis Napoleon Bonaparte took the oath as president of the French Republic, to continue in office till May, 1852.

The year 1848 will be memorable, not only for the revolution of France, and its great example of extreme democratic opinions terminating, after a sanguinary struggle, in military despotism, but for the universal upheaving of the continental kingdoms in an earthquake of which the tremblings have not yet subsided. To trace these events beyond this general reference to them would be beyond the scope of our history. We could not attempt to narrate the convulsions of Italy ; the war between Austria and Sardinia ; the insurrection of Hungary and the Hungarian war ; the violated promises of sovereigns to their peoples ; the dead calm, which was not peace, that ensued when absolutism had triumphed ; without going into a view of cause and effect, of the merit of contending principles, of the balance of good and evil, in the absence of which a meagre narrative of occurrences would be wholly unsatisfactory.*

Amid the general disquiet of Europe, the session of parliament came to a close on the 5th of September. It was in no boastful spirit that the queen said, that, surrounded by convulsions and wars between neighboring states, she had had the satisfaction of being able to preserve peace for her own dominions, and to maintain our domestic tranquillity. "The strength of our institutions has been tried, and has not been found wanting." In these troublous times the social improvement of the country steadily went forward. The great measure of establishing a general board of health and to create local boards was the timely work of this session. It is unnecessary to point out how the condition of the cities and towns of this kingdom has been essentially changed—how the amount of human suffering has been lessened, and the moral improvement and contentment of the inhabitants in dense and populous districts promoted, by the Public Health Act. The awakening had succeeded to a lethargic sleep. No one was more strenuous in proclaiming how individual energy was to make legislative provisions effectual than Prince Albert. At a meeting of the "Society for Improving the Condition of the Laboring Classes," he uttered words which sank deep into the national mind : "Depend upon it, the interests of classes too often contrasted are identical, and it is only ignorance which prevents their uniting for each other's advantage. To dispel that ignorance, to show how man can help man notwithstanding the complicated state of civilized society, ought to be the aim of every philanthropic person ; but it is more peculiarly the duty of those who, under the blessing of Divine Providence, enjoy station, wealth, and education."

On the 31st of January, 1849, there was a public banquet in the Free-trade Hall at Manchester, to celebrate this triumph of that principle which had so often been advocated in that vast room. Two thousand persons were assembled. The renowned leaders of the league were the chief speakers. Their special vocation was now at an end, but they were ready again to do battle for political truth if a defeated party should attain power and attempt to undo the great work of seven years. The hand of the clock was approaching the hour which was to begin another day, when the band struck up the inspiriting air of "A good time coming, boys." A chorus very solemn in its joyfulness burst from those two thousand voices. As the clock struck twelve the chairman called for silence. "THE GOOD TIME HAS COME," he shouted. Then that multitude stood up, and with the British huzza, which has struck terror into many an enemy, proclaimed that one foe to the well-being of the people was at last laid low. The 1st of February, so hopefully expected, so patiently waited for, had arrived. The millions who earned their daily bread by the sweat of their brow might at last eat "untaxed food."

When the session of parliament was opened by the queen on the 1st of February, the same newspaper contained the speech of her majesty and the report of the great banquet at Manchester. The

* In the Appendix we do not profess to present the occurrences there briefly noticed in their chronological succession with any attempt to digest them historically. We offer those imperfect annals of nineteen years as some aid to the reader, if he should desire to trace the course of very marked events from the close of this history.

royal speech contrasted the tranquillity and loyalty of England with the condition of the continent, convulsed by anarchy or trodden down by absolutism. Who, with any pretence to political philosophy, can now fail to trace this peace and contentment, in a very material degree, to the extinction of that injustice which had been so long perpetrated by delusive legislation, for the supposed interests of an exclusive class? The great statesman who accomplished this work points, with an honest exultation, to those who had been loudest in condemnation of the measures of 1846, who on the 10th of April, 1848, openly rejoiced that provision had been made for the total repeal of the corn laws. Yet, he says, these admissions were retracted, on the removal of all danger from popular disaffection. 'They were retracted without due reflection on the causes which had interfered in the hour of danger to promote loyalty to the throne and confidence in the justice of parliament." *

All these inconsistencies of party feeling have long since passed away. We have no pleasure in recalling the wearisome period of controversy that preceded the common agreement of all, except a few who still pored over their obsolete statistics to enter upon a new era of manly exertion, unimpeded by class prejudices and unembittered by class animosities. We were becoming an united people, even in that dawning of a brighter day when the queen met her parliament on the 1st of February, 1849, and said, "I observe with satisfaction that this portion of the United Kingdom has remained tranquil amid the convulsions which have disturbed so many parts of Europe. . . . It is with pride and thankfulness that I advert to the loyal spirit of my people, and that attachment to our institutions which has animated them during a period of commercial difficulty, deficient production of food, and political revolution. I look to the protection of Almighty God for favor in our continued progress, and I trust you will assist me in upholding the fabric of the constitution, founded as it is upon the principles of freedom and of justice."

END OF THE HISTORY.

POSTSCRIPT.

I HAVE thus completed a labor of seven years in writing the history of my country from the Roman period to a remarkable epoch of the reign of Queen Victoria. With a reverent heart I thank the Supreme Controller of all human designs that he has permitted me, in reaching a prolonged term of the life of man, to carry forward my purpose to its close.

In referring from time to time to the irrevocable results of this long-continued occupation—irrevocable, because this history of four thousand pages has been produced at periodical intervals, thus precluding the power of revising it as a whole—I am conscious of errors that might have been corrected under other circumstances. But I am not conscious of any material want of harmony between the earlier and the later portions—certainly of no essential discordance of principles and feelings. Whatever may be the defects of this narration—stretching over nineteen hundred years of recorded time, and comprehending a vast body of facts, of whose quantity and varied character the indexes, full as they are, will give an inadequate conception—I am warranted in saying that it is the only complete history of England—a library history and not a school history—which is the production of one writer. With the exception of three chapters, the "Popular History" has been wholly written by myself.† This unity of thought, whatever may be the knowledge and ability of a historian, must have a certain value beyond what may be attained by a division of labor. Being the production of one mind, the due proportions of the narrative from the first chapter to the last have, I trust, been maintained.

Having undertaken, perhaps somewhat rashly, to write a history of England that, regarding only its chronological extent, involved a large range of research—more especially so as it was intended from the first to embrace the social as well as the political history of many ages—it is scarcely necessary for me to apologize for not having plunged into the great ocean of unpublished State Papers, which have, in very recent days, afforded most valuable materials for the authors of special histories of particular eras. Such an employment would have rendered it impossible for me to have completed my undertaking in double or treble the years during which it has been my continued occupation. At the same time I may conscientiously state that I have not taken upon trust the facts or opinions of any previous writers of the general history of our country or of the history of any detached regnal periods. I have consulted no inconsiderable number of books that are the essential foundations of the English historical library; and for modern times I have not neglected that vast field of memoirs and letters, English and foreign, in which there are always fruits to be gathered by the writer who will diligently seek for them.

Of the spirit which has animated me during the progress of this work, and has sustained me through the difficulties of my task, I will venture to say a few words. I had a fixed purpose in view when I commenced it. I addressed myself, not exclusively, but with a steady regard, to those of either sex who were entering upon the serious duties of life. Passing from the elementary works that had been used in the course of ordinary education, there were hundreds to whom a fuller history—not dry, not didactic, not written with the prejudices of party or sect—would be an acquisition. Feeling my responsibilities to be increased by the fact that my duty was to impart knowledge and not to battle for opinions, my desire has been to cherish that love of liberty which is best founded upon a sufficient acquaintance with its gradual development and final establishment among us; to look with a tolerant judgment even upon those who have sought to govern securely by governing absolutely; to trace with calmness the efforts of those who have imperilled our national independence by foreign assault or domestic treason, but never to forget that a just love of country is consistent with historical truth; to carry forward, as far as within the power of one who has watched joyfully and hopefully the great changes of a generation, that spirit of improvement which has been more extensively and permanently called forth in the times of which this concluding volume treats, than in the whole previous period from the revolution of 1688. I doubtless have failed in many cases in the accomplishment of my leading purposes; but the wish to effect these objects has been always present.

In the introduction to my first volume I have stated the circumstances which led me to entertain the idea of writing a book that might be recommended for purposes of instruction, "when a young man of eighteen asks for a history of England." With a pardonable pride, I may presume to mention that my desire to produce such a book has been welcomed in a manner far beyond my hope—I fear beyond my desert. While the Prince of Wales was pursuing his studies at the University of Cambridge, my history was used as a text-book, and was quoted and recommended by the Reverend Charles Kingsley, the professor of modern history, in the course of lectures which his royal highness attended. The exalted rank of the student—the literary eminence of the professor—combine to render this compliment most grateful to me. It affords me the consolation of believing that, whatever may be the errors and deficiencies of my undertaking, it has been recognized by one whose opinion is of no ordinary value, as a well-meant endeavor to write the history of the kingdom and of the people with a due sense of my responsibility to be just and truthful, and with a catholicity of mind that may be preserved without the suppression of honestly-formed opinions.

I am writing the concluding sentences of this postscript in my birthplace—in Windsor. In solitary walks of my boyhood—by the windings of the Thames, or looking from the gentle hills of the forest—the "proud keep" seldom rose to my view but I connected it with some historical memory. To me those majestic towers were interpreters of heaven's o'erpast decrees. They formed my mind to look upon the history of my country as the most interesting of studies; to endeavor to draw from that study a just guide to the public duties of a youth who had the happiness to be born a Briton. If what I have written in these volumes should inspire similar feelings;

* "Memoirs by Sir Robert Peel," p. 319.

† Those three chapters are chap. clxvi. of vol. v., chap. clxxx. of vol. vii., and chap. ccxvi. of vol. viii. Being confined to the subject of the fine arts, I felt that they required technical knowledge and a peculiar judgment to which I could not pretend. I therefore confided them to Mr. James Thorne, who has for some years contributed many articles on art to works in which I have been engaged.

if this history should be found more calculated for truthful instruction that the histories which were accessible to me in my early days, I have not written in vain.

In the "Faery Queen"—passages of which present themselves to my memory as I ramble among the scenes where I first read that noble poem—a man "of ripe and perfect age" unrolls the ancient book of "Briton Moniments" to two youthful champions, who burn with fervent fire to attain a knowledge of "their country's ancestry." As the old man of Spenser unfolded the "records from ancient times derived," to induce that feeling of patriotism which would make his chivalrous visitors brave and courteous maintainers of England's honor, I would point to the earliest and to the latest of our annals, to exhort the rising generation to a grateful sense of the blessings of which they are the heirs. To the young man who is passing into active life at a season in which his country has attained a position of greatness unprecedented, and of security not easily to be shaken, while I look back to early days of national danger and difficulty, but nevertheless days in which the true Englishman rarely lost heart or hope—to him especially I would say, in the words of the poet who now wears the laurel which Spenser wore,

"Love thou thy land, with love far-brought
From out the storied past, and used
Within the present, but transfused
Thro' future time by power of thought."

CHARLES KNIGHT.

APPENDIX.

ANNALS, 1849-1867.

1849.

INDIA.—At the opening of parliament on the 1st of February the royal speech announced the beginning of a war of a very serious nature: "A rebellion of a formidable character has broken out in the Punjaub, and the Governor-General of India has been compelled, for the preservation of the peace of the country, to assemble a considerable force, which is now engaged in military operations against the insurgents."

[To make the narrative of Indian affairs in 1849 intelligible, we must trace the origin and progress of the war during 1848.]

On April 18th, 1848, Mr. Van Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, in company with Khan Singh, the newly appointed governor of Mooltan, had reached the town of Mooltan, and had been killed in a quarrel with the troops of the old governor, Dewan Moolraj, who immediately broke out into open rebellion. On June 18th Lieutenant Edwardes, with a small British force, having joined the forces of the Rajah of Bhawalpoor, engaged and defeated the army of Moolraj, who retreated to the town. General Whish undertook to besiege it, but was compelled, by the desertion of Shere Singh with his troops, to raise the siege on Sept. 22. He fell back a few miles, while Lord Gough with a relieving army assembled at Ferozepoor, and another large force was concentrating at Roree. On Oct. 9 Shere Singh separated himself from Moolraj, and skilfully led his army to the country north-west of Lahore and south-west of Wuzeerabad. Here he was joined by Chuttur Singh. On Nov. 21 Lord Gough found them intrenched on the left bank of the Chenab, behind Ramnuggur, with nearly 40,000 men and 28 guns, and attacked them. On the 23d the Sikhs withdrew; on Dec. 3 Major-General Thackwell crossed the Chenab at Wuzeerabad, a fight took place, and on the 4th the rebels retreated to Jailam, a little beyond which place they strongly intrenched themselves. Lord Gough had also crossed the Chenab, but stopped all further fighting till Mooltan should have been taken, which place was then being besieged by General Whish. On Dec. 21 the British troops with their Indian allies advanced to the attack, they cleared the suburbs, and established themselves within 500 yards of the walls. The place was heavily cannonaded till the 29th, when several breaches were made, a granary was set on fire, and several small magazines exploded. On the 30th the principal magazine, containing nearly 800,000 lbs. of powder, blew up, killing the Dewan's mother, many of his principal officers, and destroying a great number of houses, mosques, and other public buildings. On the 31st the garrison made a sortie, but the attack was repulsed with great loss to the assailants.

[To connect the notices of foreign affairs in 1849, we give the following very brief abstract of events in 1848.]

ITALY.—Insurrection in Sicily. January 12. Provisional government proclaimed in Palermo. March 18. Insurrection in Milan against the Austrians. March 19. The Italian flag hoisted in all towns of north Italy. March 23. The King of Sardinia espouses the cause of Italian regeneration against Austria. May 15. Fighting at Naples between the royal troops and the national guard; the city given up to pillage and massacre upon the defeat of the people. May 29. The Austrians defeated at Goito by the Sardinian army under King Charles Albert. June 12. The whole of the Venetian territory, except the city of Venice, was in the hands of the Austrians. July 27. Retreat of the Sardinian army, after six days' fighting with the Austrians. August 4. They capitulated to the Austrian Field-Marshal Radetsky. Sept. 21. Armistice between Sardinia and Austria.

GERMANY.—March 13. Revolution at Vienna—Prince Metternich flies from the city—Constitutional government to be established. March 18. A week of commotion and fighting at Berlin—A new ministry appointed—An amnesty proclaimed. June 16. Renewed conflicts in Berlin. July 12. The Archduke Johann of Austria installed at Frankfort as Lieutenant-General of Germany. Oct. 6. Insurrection in Vienna—Count Latour, the minister of war, assassinated. Oct. 16. The Emperor of Austria issues a proclamation appointing Prince Windischgrätz commander-in-chief, and announces his determination to put down by force the party in rebellion. Oct. 28. Windischgrätz attacks Vienna with 75,000 men. Nov. 7. The imperial troops in possession of the city—Hungarian troops sent to assist the insurgents are defeated. Dec. 2. Ferdinand II., Emperor of Austria, abdicates in favor of his nephew. To the end of the year continued fighting between the Hungarians and Austrians.

Jan. 5. Buda-Pesth taken by the Austrians, and Kossuth, the Hungarian president, retires to Debreczin.

Feb. 1. Parliament opened by the queen in person. She said in her speech that she hoped the joint intervention of England and France would produce a permanent settlement of the troubles in Sicily, and stop any further effusion of blood. Feb. 6. The ministers brought in a bill to continue the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act in Ireland for six months, which was opposed by Mr. J. O'Connell and some other Irish members, but carried through all its stages by large majorities, and received the royal assent on the 27th. Feb. 7. The chancellor of the exchequer proposed a grant of 50,000*l.* for the relief of the distress in Ireland, which met with some opposition, but ultimately passed the House of Lords on March 6.

Feb. 8. The Roman national assembly adopts a republican form of government, and divests the pope of all temporal power; against these decrees the pope published a protest on the 14th, and on the 18th appeals to the Roman Catholic powers for protection.

March 6. The Emperor of Austria issues the charter of a new constitution for the whole empire. It contained many improvements, but was only accepted by some of the states.

March 8. The Sardinian government recommences hostilities against Austria, and on the 23d the Sardinian army was utterly routed at Novara. On the 25th Carlo Alberto resigned his crown in favor of his son Victor Emmanuel.

March 12. The second reading of the Navigation Bill was carried in the House of Commons by 266 against 210; it passed the House of Lords with little opposition, and received the royal assent on June 26.

March 30. Haynau, the Austrian commander, takes Brescia, in Italy, with great slaughter of the inhabitants, and nearly the total destruction of the city.

April 2. Trial of the Paris insurgents. Barbes, Albert, Blanqui, Sobrier, and Raspail transported for various periods.

April 18. Prince Albert laid the first stone of the Great Grimsby docks.

April 24. The Austrians defeated at Gran by the Hungarians, who likewise reoccupy Pesth.

April 26. Civita Vecchia occupied by French troops under General Oudinot.

April 29. The King of Prussia, who had been elected hereditary Emperor of Germany by the national assembly at Frankfort, on this day declined by his plenipotentiary the proffered dignity, and rejected the Frankfort framed constitution.

May 1. Meeting of protectionists held in the Hall of Commerce, Threadneedle Street, London, under the presidency of the Duke of Richmond, to form an association for the purpose of "arresting the progress of free-trade, of opposing the repeal of the navigation laws, and of re-establishing protection.

May 7. The second reading of the Parliamentary Oaths Bill, relieving Jews and other dissenters from certain parts of the existing oath, was carried by 278 to 185. After passing the Commons, the bill was thrown out by the Lords on June 26, by a majority of 95 to 70.

May 7. An insurrection having broken out in Dresden on the 3d, the city was on this day bombarded by Prussian and Saxon troops, and the insurgents were driven out of the town.

May 11. On the appeal by writ of error to the House of Lords by W. Smith O'Brien and three others, the judgment was confirmed, and they were all sentenced to transportation.

May 16. Prince Albert addressed a public meeting of the Servants' Provident and Benevolent Society, pointing out and recommending the advantages of vesting savings in government annuities. He told them that their society was founded on the correct principle, "which requires every man by personal exertions, and at his own choice, to work out his own happiness."

May 19. A large meeting held at Cape Town, to express the indignation of the whole colony against the attempt of the Colonial Office to make the Cape a penal colony. The same feeling had been expressed at previous meetings. Subsequently the inhabitants combined to refuse supplies to the public departments, and at length the intention was abandoned.

May 27. The legislative assembly of the French Republic holds its first sitting.

June 3. The French army, commanded by General Oudinot, commences its attack on Rome. After a brave defence it was surrendered on July 3.

June 4. The Incumbered Estates, Ireland, Bill, passed the House of Commons after a slight opposition; it received the royal assent on July 28.

June 13. A red republican procession visit the national assembly in Paris, ostensibly to present a petition, but in a threatening attitude. They were dispersed by the troops without violence; but Paris is thereupon declared in a state of siege by the assembly, and on the 14th several of the newspapers were ordered to be suppressed, and Ledru-Rollin and others to be prosecuted for conspiracy, and endeavoring to excite a civil war. Several of the leaders in the movement succeeded in making their escape.

June 21. The Russians, who had entered Hungary in aid of the Austrians, take Kronstadt, and having joined the Austrian army under General Wohlgemuth, defeat the Hungarians at Szered, and on the 23d defeat them again at Eperies. On August 2 the Russians captured Debreczin.

June 27. A public meeting held at the London Tavern, London, to receive a deputation from Ireland, on the subject of the distress in that country.

July 6. The German army, which had been sent to the aid of the Schleswig-Holstein insurgents, and was besieging Fredericia, defeated by the Danes, who took 1800 prisoners. An armistice for six months between Denmark and Prussia was concluded on the 10th.

July 12. Serious affray between the Orangemen and the Roman Catholics at Dolly's Brae, near Castlewellan, in Ireland. Several of the Roman Catholics were killed, and some of their houses wrecked and burned. On Sept. 13 a majority of the magistrates in petty sessions, by their chairman, the Earl of Roden, refused to take informations against the Orangemen accused of the offence. The refusal was repeated on Oct. 9, for which the Earl of Roden and two other justices were discharged from the magistracy.

July 27. An insurrection broke out in Cephalonia and Corfu, which was suppressed, and the instigators punished.

Aug. 9. The Hungarians, after various alternations of success and defeats, were utterly routed at Temeswar; and on the 13th the remains of the army and Görgey surrendered to the Russians at Grosswardein.

Aug. 22. Venice surrendered to the Austrians, after an energetic defence.

Sept. 8. Louis Napoleon, President of the French Republic, publishes a letter to Colonel Ney, insisting on a general amnesty, a secular administration, and other improvements for the subjects of the pope.

Sept. 16. Prayers offered up in all the churches for the removal of the cholera, which was raging with great intensity. It continued to prevail during the autumn, till, on Nov. 15, thanksgivings were offered on its cessation.

Oct. 30. The President of the French Republic dismisses his ministry.

Nov. 3. Sir James Ross returns from an unsuccessful search after Sir John Franklin.

Nov. 5. Russia and Austria require Turkey to withdraw her protection from the Hungarian refugees who had fled into her territory; this is refused. Turkey appeals to England, and on this day the British fleet entered the Dardanelles, where, however, it returned on the 13th to Besika Bay.

Nov. 7. The inauguration of the Queen's College at Cork took place on this day.

Dec. 1. The Queen-Dowager Adelaide died at Bentley Priory, Stanmore, Middlesex, aged 57.

Dec. 16. At Mullinahone, in Tipperary, a vast assemblage of tenant farmers and cottiers met to petition in favor of tenant-right, which included lower rents determined by a valuation, compensation on quitting for permanent improvements, and a lease. This meeting was followed by many others with the same object.

Dec. 28. Letter appeared from Sir Robert Peel to his tenantry on "the present state and prospects of agriculture."

INDIA.—On Jan. 2, 1849, a breach was made near the Delhi gate, but the entrance was not found practicable; but the Bombay column had forced an entrance on the opposite side of the town, which was ultimately taken possession of by the British troops; the fort having been captured on the following day, while the citadel still remained in possession of Moolraj. On Jan. 13 Lord Gough, having advanced toward the Jhelum with 22,000 men and 130 guns, found himself in front of the Sikh army, which, under the command of Shere Singh, occupied a long line from Moong to Russool. Here the British troops were halted, in order to give them a day's rest before attacking the enemy. The Sikh batteries, however, some of which were within range, commenced firing on the British position, some of the shot falling close to the commander-in-chief. This occasioned him to change his plan, and a cannonade was ordered on the enemy's centre, which was kept up on both sides for an hour or two. Lord Gough ordered a flank movement of infantry to be made on the left, but it was met by a concealed battery. The repulse occasioned some confusion. A regiment of light dragoons retreated in consequence of a misunderstanding of orders, and one cavalry regiment turned and fled. Night put an end to the combat; the British bivouacked near the field of battle, and the Sikhs withdrew. This was the battle of Chillianwallah, in which the British loss was 731 men killed and 1446 wounded. That of the Sikhs was far greater. On the 22d, Moolraj, the citadel of Mooltan having become untenable, surrendered himself and his garrison unconditionally.

On Feb. 15, Lord Gough having discovered that Shere Singh, with the main body of his army, instead of leaving, crossed the Jhelum, was on his march to Lahore, advanced in pursuit. General Whish had in the mean time arrived at Ramnuggur with a brigade of his force, and learning that Shere Singh was approaching Wuzeerabad dispatched Col. Byrne with a detachment of men and guns to prevent or delay his crossing the Chenab. This was effected, and the Sikh army encamped itself near Goojerat. The British forces under General Whish and brigadiers Markham and Hervey were then enabled to cross the Chenab and co-operate with Lord Gough, who continued to advance. On Feb. 21 took place the battle of Goojerat. Lord Gough, with 25,000 men and 100 guns, attacked the strongly posted Sikh army of 60,000 men and 59 guns. After nine hours of obstinate fighting the Sikhs were totally routed, and Shere Singh escaped to the Salt Range Hills with only 8000 men. On March 8 he came to the British camp to propose a capitulation, but was told that nothing but an unconditional surrender would be accepted. On the 14th this was made, and the Sikh forces laid down their arms.

The Afghans under Dost Mahomed had taken a hostile part against the British during this contest. They had taken the fort of Attock and captured several British officers. Sir William Gibert was sent against them, and, after some other successes, on March 21 Dost Mahomed and the remnant of his army reached the Khyber Pass, through which they were able to retreat unmolested. On March 29 the Governor-General of India issued a proclamation that the Punjaub was annexed to the British dominions. In July Moolraj was tried and found guilty of the murder of Mr. Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, but was recommended to mercy, and in September he was sentenced to be transported for life.

LEGISLATION. SESSION 12 & 13 VICTORIÆ.

Cap. 29. An Act to amend the Laws in force for the Encouragement of British Shipping and Navigation.

Cap. 77. Further to facilitate the State and Transfer of Incumbered Estates in Ireland.

Cap. 106. To amend and consolidate the Laws relating to Bankruptcy.

Cap. 111. To amend the Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Act, 1848.

Revenue, 52,951,749*l.*; expenditure—army and ordnance, 8,881,-141*l.*; navy, 6,942,397*l.*; for all objects, 50,853,623*l.*; debt, 790,-927,017*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce and manufactures, 63,596,025*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 41,367; to the United States, 219,450; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 32,191; to all other places, 6490: total, 299,498.

Railway traffic: miles open, 6031; number of passengers, 63,841,-539; traffic receipts, 11,806,498*l.*

Number of paupers in England and Ireland on Jan. 1, 1,555,166.

1850.

Jan. 3. A proclamation issued by the queen, appointing a commission for the promotion of the works of industry of all nations, to be holden in 1851, of which Prince Albert became the acting chief. In pursuance of this object a numerous meeting was held at the Mansion House, London, on the 25th.

Jan. 10. The Enterprise and Investigator leave Woolwich in search of Sir John Franklin.

Jan. 17. A meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce took place, in order to consider the important question of how best to insure a more certain and steady supply of cotton. Several suggestions were offered, but no important mode of action was decided on.

Jan. 31. Parliament opened by commission. The speech announced the happy continuance of peace and amity with foreign powers; that the differences which had arisen between Austria and Turkey respecting the reception of the Hungarian refugees was peacefully terminated; that the United States and Sweden had granted reciprocity to British ships; the speech then referred to the cholera, and to the loyal reception of her majesty in Ireland; it congratulated the houses on the improved condition of commerce and manufactures, and upon the freedom of the kingdom from the wars and convulsions which had prevailed during the last two years on the continent of Europe.

Feb. 4. Social riots in Paris occasioned by the orders for the police to cut down the trees of liberty; this continued for two days, but the mobs were dispersed by the troops.

Feb. 6. The King of Prussia takes the oaths to the new constitution agreed upon for that kingdom.

March 15. The chancellor of the exchequer made his financial statement. He showed that there would be a surplus of revenue, with which he proposed to remove the duty on bricks, and to make loans for purposes of drainage and agricultural improvement to England, Scotland, and Ireland.

March 15. The King of Würtemberg opens his states assembly with a speech attacking the insidious ambition of Russia, and announcing the formation of a league, under the sanction of Austria, between Würtemberg, Bavaria, and Saxony.

March 21. A grand banquet was given at the Mansion House by the Lord Mayor of London to the mayors of 188 towns, to the foreign ambassadors, the ministers, and Prince Albert, to promote and forward the project of the great international exhibition. In his speech to the meeting Prince Albert said, "It must indeed be most gratifying to me to find that a suggestion which I had thrown out, as appearing to me of importance at this time, should have met with such universal concurrence and approbation."

June 17. In the House of Lords a resolution was moved by Lord Stanley condemnatory of the foreign policy of ministers in relation to the affairs of Greece, which was carried, after some debate, by a majority of 37 against ministers. On the 20th Mr. Roebuck gave notice in the House of Commons of his intention to move a resolution approving the whole foreign policy of the government. The debate on this resolution commenced on the 24th, and was continued on the 25th and the 28th, when the house divided—for the resolution, 310; against it, 264; majority in favor of ministers, 46.

July 2. Sir Robert Peel died in consequence of a fall from his horse on June 29, aged 62. On July 4 Lord John Russell pronounced a panegyric on the deceased statesman, and suggested a public funeral, which was declined, on the ground of his own expressed wish, "to be interred without ostentation or parade of any kind." On July 22 a numerous meeting was held at Willis's Rooms to consider of means to perpetuate his memory. On the 10th a meeting had been held at Bury to promote the erection of a monument to his memory at his native place; and, on the 15th, one in the city of London for a national testimonial.

July 4. A protocol, signed in London, on the part of Great Britain, France, Prussia, and Sweden, guaranteeing the integrity of the territories of Denmark. A peace had been concluded between Denmark and Prussia on the 2d respecting the duchies, but the Schleswig-Holsteiners refused to submit. On the 25th the Danish army totally defeated the insurgents at Idsted, and entered the town of Schleswig.

July 22. Lord John Russell withdrew in the House of Commons the Jews' Oath of Abjuration Bill. On the 26th the Baron de Rothschild presented himself at the table of the house to take the oaths as member for the city of London, but, on saying that he desired to be sworn on the Old Testament, a stormy debate arose, which was adjourned. It was resumed on the 29th, and on the motion of Mr. Hume, that the clerk be directed to swear the baron on the Old Testament, the house divided after a debate—for the motion 113, against it 59.

Aug. 18. The parliament was prorogued by her majesty in person.

Aug. 28. The submarine telegraph wire was sunk between Dover and Cape Grisnez, near Calais.

Aug. 30. Prince Albert laid the foundation-stone of the National Gallery at Edinburgh. In his address on the occasion he said: "Let us hope that the impulse given to the culture of the fine arts in this country, and the daily increasing attention bestowed upon it by the people at large, will not only tend to refine and elevate the national tastes, but will also tend to the production of works which, if left behind us as the memorials of the age, will give to after generations an adequate idea of our advanced state of civilization."

Sept. 1. The Elector of Hesse Cassel declares his dominions in a state of siege in consequence of the chamber requiring to have a regular budget laid before them, in concordance with the constitution of 1831. An insurrection takes place, and on the 13th the elector fled to Hanover. He is restored by Austrian and Bavarian troops, although Prussia declared her intention of supporting the constitution against the elector, advanced troops, and even took possession of Cassel, but ultimately withdrew them on December 5th; and on December 10th an order was issued by the prime minister of Hesse for the immediate payment of the taxes refused by the chamber, under pain of fine and imprisonment.

Sept. 10. The Roman Catholic Synod, which had met at Thurles in Ireland on August 22d, closed its labors by condemning the establishment of the Queen's colleges, and proposing a Roman Catholic university.

Oct. 25. A return banquet for the purpose of promoting the great International Exhibition of 1851 was given by the Lord Mayor of York to the Lord Mayor of London and the mayors of the principal cities and boroughs of the United Kingdom, at which Prince Albert was present. On his health being drunk, he pronounced a warm eulogium on the late Sir Robert Peel. In the course of it he said: "If he has had so great an influence over this country, it was from the nation recognizing in his qualities the true type of the English character, which is essentially practical. Warmly attached to his institutions, and revering the bequests left to him by the industry, wisdom, and piety of his forefathers, the Englishman attaches little value to any theoretical scheme. It will attract his attention only after having been for some time placed before him; it must have been thoroughly investigated and discussed before he will entertain it. Should it be an empty theory, it will fall to the ground during this time of probation; should it survive this trial, it will be on account of the practical qualities contained in it; but its adoption in the end will entirely depend upon its harmonizing with the national feeling, the historical development of the country, and the peculiar nature of its institutions."

Dec. 6. Cardinal Wiseman was enthroned as an archbishop. The act caused an extreme agitation throughout the country. On the 10th various addresses were presented to her majesty on the subject of this aggression.

LEGISLATION. Session 13 & 14 Victoriæ.

Cap. 2. An Act to restrain Party Processions in Ireland.

Cap. 33. To make more effectual Provision for regulating the Police of Towns and populous Places in Scotland, and for paving, draining, cleansing, lighting, and improving the same. This is the first general and comprehensive act for the management of towns in Scotland.

Cap. 52. To make better Provision for the Interment of the Dead in and near the Metropolis. This gives power for the formation of extramural cemeteries, and forbids, after certain orders have been issued, the burial in any of the parish churches or churchyards within the metropolitan district.

Cap. 59. For the better Government of her Majesty's Australian Colonies, forming the colony of Victoria, giving a representative constitution, and empowering the legislative body to levy customs, duties, and other taxes.

Cap. 65. For enabling Town Councils to establish Public Libraries and Museums.

Cap. 93. For improving the Conditions of Masters, Mates, and Seamen, and maintaining Discipline in the Merchant Service.

Cap. 99. For the better assessing and collecting the Poor Rates and Highway Rates in respect of small Tenements. The act gives power to vestries to determine whether tenements of a ratable value of not more than 6*l.* shall be rated to the owners or the occupiers.

Revenue, 52,810,680*l.*; expenditure—army and ordnance, 8,955,-061*l.*; navy, 6,437,883*l.*; for all objects, 50,231,874*l.*; debt, 787,029,-162*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce and manufactures, 71,367,-885*l.*; total of exports, 73,300,951*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 32,961; to the United States, 223,078; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 16,037; to all other places, 8773: total, 280,849.

Railway traffic: miles open, 6221; number of passengers, 72,-854,422; traffic receipts, 13,204,668*l.*

Number of paupers in England and Ireland, 1,228,513.

1851.

Jan. 2. The French ministry resigned; on the 10th the "Moniteur" contained the official list of the new ministry appointed by the prince president. The new ministers were on the evening of the 10th defeated in the Legislative Assembly on a point of minor importance by 330 to 258. On the 18th the assembly passed a vote of want of confidence in the ministry, by 417 to 278. On the 24th a message from the prince president was received, communicating the formation of a cabinet composed of persons not members of the assembly.

Jan. 10. General Changarnier deprived of his offices as commander of the national guard and of a division of the army.

Jan. 27. Earl Grey, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in a dispatch to the Governor of Canada, relinquished to the provincial legislature the right of disposing absolutely of the clergy reserves in Canada.

Feb. 4. Parliament opened by the queen in person, who in the royal speech initmated that a bill in reference to ecclesiastical titles would be introduced to parliament in consequence of the bull recently issued by the Pope, appointing certain dioceses in England.

Feb. 20. Mr. Locke King obtained leave to bring in a bill to extend the 10*l.* franchise to counties. This was carried against the government by a majority of 100 to 52, which circumstance coupled with the smallness of the majority (281 to 267) in favor of government against a protectionist motion of Mr. Disraeli on the 13th, led to the resignation of the ministry on the 22d. Lord Stanley and the Earl of Aberdeen were each requested to form a government, but neither being able to do so, the former ministers were, by the advice of the Duke of Wellington, reinstated in office, and resumed their places on the 3d of March.

March 10. Public meetings of English Roman Catholics held in Freemasons' Hall, London, to petition parliament against the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill. A meeting of Irish Roman Catholics for the same object was held in Dublin on the 30th of April.

March 13. Opening of Owen's College, Manchester, an educational institution founded in accordance with the will of Mr. John Owen, who bequeathed 100,000*l.* for the purpose, with the condition that no religious test should be applied in the admission of students.

March 31. The decennial census of Great Britain and Ireland taken this day.

May 1. The great exhibition of the industry of all nations opened in Hyde Park by the queen. On the 9th of July a grand entertainment was given at the Guildhall in celebration of the great exhibition, when the queen and Prince Albert attended. The exhibition was closed to the public on the 11th of October. On the 15th the awards of the juries were announced, and the closing ceremony took place. The total number of admissions to the exhibition was 6,007,944, being a daily average of upward of 43,500. The largest attendance was on Tuesday, the 7th of October, when 109,915 persons were admitted. The gross receipts were about 506,000*l.*; the expenses about 330,000*l.* The number of exhibitors was about 15,000.

May 3. Prince Albert, at the Royal Academy dinner on this day, in responding to the toast proposed by the president, remarked that "We have now on the one hand the eager competition of a vast array of artists of every degree of talent and skill, and on the other as judge, a great public, for the greater part wholly uneducated in art, and thus led by professional writers, who often strive to impress the public with a great idea of their own artistic knowledge by the merciless manner in which they treat works, which cost those who produced them the highest efforts of mind and feeling."

May 22. Proclamation issued by the government of New South Wales, claiming the royalty of the newly-discovered gold-fields for the crown. The amount of gold exported from New South Wales to the end of 1851 was 468,336*l.*

June 17. Mr. Cobden moved an address to the crown, praying her majesty to direct the foreign secretary to enter into communication with the French government to promote a mutual reduction of armaments. Lord Palmerston objected to the adoption of the address, while he expressed the general concurrence of the government in its principle and object. The motion was withdrawn.

Aug. 1. The Lord Mayor of London, the commissioners of the great exhibition, and many other distinguished persons, visited Paris by invitation, and were entertained for several days by the municipality.

Aug. 18. Death of the King of Hanover in his 81st year. He was succeeded by his son, George V.

Aug. 27. Submersion of the great cable telegraph between England and France. It was opened for public use on the 13th of November.

Nov. 4. Opening of the session of the French Legislative Assembly, when the prince president in his message recommended the restoration of universal suffrage. On the 13th the assembly (by 353 votes against 347) threw out the bill, which had been proposed by the ministry in accordance with the president's message, for the repeal of the existing electoral law and the substitution of universal suffrage.

Dec. 2. The prince president of the French Republic issued a decree dissolving the Legislative Assembly, establishing universal suffrage, proposing the election of a president for ten years and the establishment of a second chamber; also declaring Paris in a state of siege. MM. Thiers, Changarnier, Bedeau, Cavaignac, Lamoricière, and Charras were arrested, and placed in confinement in the Castle of Vincennes. About 180 members who attempted to constitute a meeting of the assembly, with M. Berryer at their head, were likewise arrested.

Dec. 18. At this date thirty-four departments of France were under martial law.

Dec. 21. On this and the preceding day the votes of the people were taken, on the principle of universal suffrage, on the question of the election of a president of the republic for ten years.

Dec. 22. Viscount Palmerston quitted office. [See parliamentary explanation, February 3d, 1852.]

LEGISLATION. Session 14 & 15 Victoriæ.

Cap. 19. An Act for the better Prevention of Offences, inflicting punishments for attempts at crime, and authorizing the apprehension of persons found in possession of house-breaking instruments at night, and of suspected persons.

Cap. 28. For the well-ordering of Common Lodging-houses, regulating the number of lodgers, and all other matters conducing to cleanliness and health.

Cap. 61. For providing a Metropolitan Market and Conveniences connected therewith in lieu of the Cattle Market at Smithfield. The market is now held in the Caledonian Road, Islington.

Cap. 79. To consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Regulation of Steam Navigation, and to Boats and Lights to be carried by Sea-going Vessels.

Cap. 83. To improve the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery, and in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. This is the act by which the Court of Appeal in Chancery was established.

Cap. 99. To Amend the Law of Evidence. Parties to a suit enabled to give testimony, and documents to be produced in courts of common law.

Cap. 100. For further improving the Administration of Criminal Justice. Enabling the judges to correct errors in the indictment not material to the merits of the cause; removing certain minute details from indictments, and giving juries the power of convicting for a crime though not precisely the one proved, as in case of a charge for misdemeanor or embezzlement which may turn out to be a larceny, the criminal may be found guilty in the form charged.

Revenue, 52,233,006*l.*; expenditure—army and ordnance, 8,723,-940*l.*; navy, 5,849,917*l.*; for all objects, 49,506,610*l.*; debt, 782,869,-382*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 74,448,722*l.*: total of exports, 115,821,092*l.*; imports, 152,889,053*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 42,605; to the United States, 267,357; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 21,532; to all other places, 4472: total, 335,966.

Railway traffic: miles open, 6890; number of passengers, 85,391,-095; traffic receipts, 14,997,459*l.*

Number of paupers in England and Ireland, 1,070,080.

1852.

Jan. 1. Installation of Prince Louis Napoleon as President of the French Republic for ten years. On the 10th eighty-three members of the late Legislative Assembly were banished from France, and 575 persons, arrested for resistance to the coup d'état of December 2d, were conveyed to Havre to be transported to the penal settlement of Cayenne, in Guiana.

Jan. 9. The principal engineering firms of London and Lancashire discharged their workmen, and closed their works, rather than submit to the demands of the Amalgamated Society of Operative Engineers for the abolition of piece-work and overtime. This unhappy dispute lasted several months, at great cost both to masters and operatives, and occasioned much distress among the families of the workmen.

Feb. 3. Parliament opened by the queen. The royal speech recommended the reconsideration of the Reform Act of the late reign, with a view to its amendment on some points. In the House of Commons, in the debate on the address, Lord John Russell, in answer to a question, explained the circumstances under which Lord Palmerston had quitted office. Lord Palmerston, as foreign secretary, had sent a dispatch of importance, in which his colleague had not concurred, and he had hastily expressed his approbation of the proceedings of the prince president of the French Republic in the coup d'état of December 2d.

Feb. 9. New Reform Bill introduced into the House of Commons by Lord John Russell, by which the franchise was proposed to be 5*l.* rated yearly value in boroughs, and 20*l.* occupation, or 10*l.* copyhold rated yearly value in counties.

Feb. 20. Defeat of government on the Local Militia Bill, an amendment by Lord Palmerston that the force should be general instead of local being carried by 136 votes to 125. In consequence of this vote Lord John Russell's ministry resigned on the 21st.

Feb. 27. The Earl of Derby, having accepted the premiership, explained in the House of Lords the intended policy of his cabinet. He said that the question of protection to agriculture was one to be solved only by a reference to the well-understood and clearly-expressed opinion of the people. The members of Lord Derby's cabinet were as follows: Earl of Derby, first lord of the treasury; Earl of Lonsdale, president of the council; Lord St. Leonards, lord high chancellor; Marquess of Salisbury, lord privy seal; Rt. Hon. B. Disraeli, chancellor of the exchequer; Rt. Hon. S. H. Walpole, secretary of state for home affairs; Earl of Malmesbury, foreign secretary; Rt. Hon. Sir J. S. Pakington, colonial secretary; Duke of Northumberland, first lord of the admiralty; Rt. Hon. J. C. Herries, president of the board of control; Rt. Hon. J. W. Henley, president of the board of trade; Lord J. J. R. Manners, commissioner of woods and forests.

March 2. Reorganization of the Anti-Corn League in consequence of the accession to power of a protectionist ministry.

June 1. Electric telegraph opened throughout from London to Dublin.

July 1. Parliament closed by the queen in person, and dissolved by proclamation. A new parliament called.

July 14. Death of the Duke of Wellington at Walmer Castle, Dover, in his 84th year, after a slight illness. His death took place as if he had fallen asleep in his chair. On the 18th of November his remains were interred in St. Paul's Cathedral near those of Nelson, being conveyed thither by military procession along the streets of London. On the 6th of December the House of Commons voted 80,000*l.* for the expenses of the funeral.

Oct. 7. At a public dinner at Bordeaux the prince president of the French Republic delivered a speech, in which he made the declaration that "The empire is peace."

Nov. 4. The French Senate received a message from the prince president recommending the re-establishment of the empire.

Nov. 11. The queen opened parliament in person. The Earl of Derby stated that he was prepared to bow to the decision of the country in favor of free-trade, as indicated by the result of the elections for the present parliament.

Dec. 1. The French Corps Législatif proclaimed the definitive result of the voting on the plebiscite respecting the re-establishment of the empire, as follows: Ayes 7,864,189; noes, 253,145; null, 63,326. The prince president, in accepting the imperial dignity, took the title of Napoleon III.

Dec. 6. Ministers announced in both Houses of Parliament that the government had recognized the re-establishment of the empire in France, and Napoleon III. as emperor.

Dec. 16. On the debate on the ministerial budget, which continued through four sittings of the House of Commons, the government was left in a minority of 19—the votes in favor of ministers being 286; against, 305. In consequence of this vote, the Earl of Derby's ministry resigned office on the 17th, and the Earl of Aberdeen accepted the premiership. The new cabinet was composed as follows: Earl of Aberdeen, first lord of the treasury; Earl Granville, president of the council; Lord Cranworth, lord high chancellor; Duke of Argyll, lord privy seal; Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, chancellor of the exchequer; Viscount Palmerston, secretary of state for home affairs; Earl of Clarendon, foreign secretary; Duke of Newcastle, colonial secretary; Sir James Graham, first lord of the admiralty; Sir Charles Wood, president of the board of control; Rt. Hon. Sidney Herbert, secretary at war; Sir W. Molesworth, commissioner of parks and public buildings; Marquess of Lansdowne, and Lord John Russell, without office.

Dec. 20. Proclamation issued by the Governor-General of India, annexing Pegu as a province to the British territory in India.

Dec. 31. The amount of gold exported from the colony of New South Wales during 1852 was 2,660,946*l.*

LEGISLATION. Session 15 & 16 Victoriæ.

Cap. 12. Copyright Amendment Act, for carrying into effect a convention with France on the subject of copyright, by which the right of translation is mutually reserved on publishing a notice to that effect with the work.

Cap. 31. To legalize the formation of Industrial and Provident Societies, enabling them to pay officers, sue for subscriptions, to carry on trades, etc., on being registered. This is the act under which co-operative societies are formed.

Cap. 51. Enfranchisement of Copyholds. By this act any lord of the manor or tenant may compel or require enfranchisement on certain defined terms.

Cap. 56. For regulating the Qualifications of Pharmaceutical Chemists, enabling examiners appointed by the Pharmaceutical Society to grant certificates to persons who have satisfactorily passed an examination, who may then assume the title of pharmaceutical chemists; a penalty of 5*l.* is imposed on any one assuming the title without having a certificate.

Cap. 76. To amend the Process, Practice, and Mode of Pleading in the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, and in the Superior Courts of the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham. An important act, making great alterations in and simplifying the proceedings in the common law courts.

Cap. 83. For amending the Law for granting Patents for Inventions. Reducing the payment of fees on the first grant of a patent, and regulating the periods of payment for lengthened terms of years.

Revenue, gross receipts, 56,576,840*l.*; expenditure—army and ordnance, 9,023,940*l.*; navy, 5,849,917*l.*; for all objects, 53,850,445*l.*; debt, 780,869,382*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 78,076,854*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 32,873; to the United States, 244,261; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 87,881: to all other places, 3749: total, 368,764.

Railway traffic: miles open, 7336; number of passengers, 89,135,729; traffic receipts, 15,710,554*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,080,953.

1853.

Jan. 30. The Emperor Napoleon III. married to Mdlle. de Montijo, Duchess of Teba.

Feb. 17. The Duke of Newcastle stated in the House of Lords that the transportation of convicts to the Australian Colonies would no longer be resorted to, except in the case of Western Australia. Termination of the Kafir war by the submission of the chiefs Macomo, Sandilli, and Kreili.

March 4. Inauguration of General Pierce as President of the United States of North America.

March 22. A treasury minute issued authorizing the establishment of mints in Australia.

April 1. Manchester constituted a city by royal charter.

April 8. The chancellor of the exchequer brought forward his plans for a modification of the form of the national debt, the object being to lay the foundation of a permanent irredeemable 2½ per cent stock. The resolutions embodying this plan were adopted by the House of Commons.

April 18. The chancellor of the exchequer introduced his budget, in which he proposed to repeal the duties leviable on 105 articles, of which the principal item was soap; and to make important reductions in the duties leviable on 126 articles, including the stamp duties on receipts and life assurance policies, and the duties on advertisements and on tea. He proposed also to extend the income-tax to Ireland, and to widen its range, so as to include incomes between 100*l.* and 150*l.*, and to bring real property within the operation of the legacy duty.

May 12. The great exhibition of industry of Ireland opened in Dublin by the lord lieutenant.

June 20. Peace with Birmah proclaimed by the Governor-General of India.

Nov. 7. Thirty-three persons tried at Paris for plotting to assassinate the Emperor Napoleon. Ten received sentence of transportation for life; the others were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

Nov. 15. Death of Donna Maria II., Queen of Portugal. She was succeeded by her eldest son, Don Pedro VIII.

Dec. 31. The amount of gold exported from New South Wales in 1853 was 1,781,172*l.*

The following events are preliminary to the war with Russia in 1854–55:

On the 3d of May Prince Menzikoff, the Russian Ambassador to the Porte, presented the ultimatum of the Russian government on certain matters in dispute between the Czar and the Sultan. On the 22d Prince Menzikoff left Constantinople. On the 4th of June orders were transmitted by the English and French governments to the commanders of their Mediterranean fleets to approach the Dardanelles without delay. On the 16th of June the Porte finally rejected the Russian ultimatum. On the 26th the Emperor of Russia issued a manifesto against the Porte, in which he announced the marching of Russian armies upon the Danubian provinces of Turkey. On the 2d of July the Russian army crossed the Pruth, thus invading the Turkish territory. On the 27th of September the Porte declared war against Russia; and on the 1st of October appealed to France and England for material aid in the war. The English and French fleets entered the Bosphorus on the 22d of October. On the 3d of November the Russians placed Moldavia and Wallachia under martial law. On the 4th the Turks were attacked at Oltenitza by General Dannenberg, with 9000 Russians, when the Russians were repulsed with a loss of 1200 men. On the 30th the Turkish fleet lying in the harbor of Sinope, with the citadel and town of Sinope, were destroyed by the Russian admiral, Nachimoff. On the 3d of December the combined fleets of England and France entered the Black Sea, on the demand of the Porte, on which the Russian fleet retired within the harbor of Sebastopol. On the 5th a protocol was signed at Vienna by the representatives of France, England, Austria, and Prussia, for the re-establishment of peace between Russia and Turkey, and for the maintenance of the integrity of the Ottoman Empire as an essential condition of the balance of European power.

LEGISLATION. Session 16 & 17 Victoriæ.

Cap. 15. An Act to limit the time of taking the Poll in Counties at contested Elections for Knights of the Shire to serve in Parliament in England and Wales to one day.

Cap. 51. For granting to her Majesty Duties on Succession to Property, and for altering certain Provisions of the Acts charging Duties on Legacies and Shares of Personal Estates. Succession duties are laid on real estates by this act, the rate varying according to the nearness of consanguinity.

Cap. 73. For the Establishment of a Body of Naval Coast Volunteers, and for the temporary transfer to the Navy, in case of need, of seafaring Men employed in other Services. Enables volunteers to enter for a period of five years, during which period they are to be trained to the navy for a time not exceeding 28 days in each year, and in case of imminent danger to be called into actual service, but not to be sent more than 100 leagues from the coast during exercise and actual service. They are to receive the same allowances as able seamen. While volunteers they are exempt from serving in the navy or militia, and a regulated bounty is given, which is not to exceed 6*l.*

Cap. 99. To substitute, in certain Cases, other Punishment in lieu of Transportation. Penal imprisonment is substituted by this act.

Cap. 137. For the better Administration of Charitable Trusts. Commissioners are appointed, with powers to investigate the affairs of any charitable trusts, and authorize legal proceedings to enforce the proper fulfilment of the trust if it should be necessary.

Revenue, 57,535,215*l.*; expenditure—army and ordnance, 9,876,962*l.*; navy, 6,625,944*l.*; for all objects, 51,044,986*l.*; debt, 770,923,001*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 98,933,781*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 34,522; to the United States, 230,885; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 61,401; to all other places, 3129: total, 829,937.

Railway traffic: miles open, 7686; number of passengers, 102,286,660; traffic receipts, 18,035,879*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,016,081.

1854.

[The principal events of the war with Russia, which will fill so large a space in the history of the years 1854 and 1855, will be given separately from other events in our annals of those two years.]

Jan. 31. In opening parliament Queen Victoria, in the speech from the throne, expressed her regret that the endeavors made by her in conjunction with the Emperor of the French had failed to procure an amicable settlement of the differences which had arisen between Russia and Turkey. On the 6th of February the Russian ambassador withdrew from Paris, and on the 8th Baron Brunnow, the Russian ambassador at the British court, left England. On the 20th the Grenadier and Coldstream Guards embarked at Southampton for Turkey. Other troops followed in rapid succession. On the 11th of March the queen reviewed at Spithead the fleet under the command of Admiral Sir Charles Napier, previous to its sailing for the Baltic. On the 12th a treaty of alliance between France, England, and Turkey was signed at Constantinople. March 25. England and France, having sent an ultimatum to the Russian emperor, received an answer to the effect that the czar had no answer to send. War against Russia declared on the 27th by France, and on the 28th by Great Britain. On the 21st of April Odessa was bombarded by the French and English fleets. On the 10th of May the Tiger war-steamer ran ashore near Odessa in a dense fog; in this position she was attacked by the Russians, who disabled her and took her crew of two hundred men prisoners. On the 17th Silistria was invested by the Russians, who, after a siege of forty days, abandoned their operations against the place. Two British officers, Captain Butler and Lieutenant Nasmyth, encouraged and directed the Turks in their heroic defence. On the 29th of May the allied troops disembarked at Varna, where, during the period of their encampment, they suffered greatly from disease and insufficient accommodation. On the 29th of June the Russian batteries at the Sulina mouth of the Danube were destroyed by two British steamers. In the Baltic the fortress of Gustafsvaern was bombarded by the British fleet on the 22d of May. The British force was reinforced by ten thousand French troops, who left Boulogne on the 15th of July in British ships of war. On the 16th of August the fort of Bomarsund, with a garrison of 2000 men, surrendered to the allied fleet, after three days' bombardment. On the 15th of September the Russians evacuated Moldavia, after which the Danubian provinces were garrisoned by the Austrians. On the 14th of September the allied forces landed in the Crimea, on the western shore, near 45° N. lat., without opposition. The army included 23,000 French, 25,000 British, and 8000 Turks. On the 20th the first conflict with the Russians in the Crimea took place in the battle of the Alma, in which the Russians were completely worsted. On the 26th, after a forced march of fourteen hours, the allied forces occupied Balaklava, and subsequently encamped before Sebastopol. On the 29th Marshal St. Arnaud, the commander-in-chief of the French forces, fell a victim to disease, after having transferred his command to General Canrobert. On the 17th of October the bombardment of Sebastopol by the allied armies and fleets commenced. On the 25th the Russians attacked the allies at Balaklava, but were repulsed with loss. By an unhappy misreading of an order of Lord Raglan, the Earl of Lucan directed the light cavalry to charge the overwhelming Russian force. Of 607 men who went into the action, only 198 returned. On the 5th of November the battle of Inkerman was fought, in which the Russians, in immense numbers, attempted a surprise before daybreak, but were obliged to retire with a loss of about 10,000 killed and wounded. The struggle lasted the entire day. On the 14th a violent storm occurred in the Black Sea, which destroyed many store-ships and caused great calamities on shore. This was followed by a season of intense suffering among the troops; the roads were impassable; the weather was bitterly cold; men and horses, ill supplied with food and shelter, perished in large numbers, while medical attention and hospital accommodation were woefully deficient. This being known at home from the reports of the correspondents of the newspapers, gave rise to great dissatisfaction with the management of affairs, and private subscriptions to a large amount were speedily raised to mitigate the distress. Miss Nightingale organized a numerous staff of nurses, and proceeded with them to Constantinople to superintend the hospitals, which were principally at Scutari, and to attend the sick and wounded, by which attention the lives of many hundreds were saved.

June 10. Crystal Palace at Sydenham opened by Queen Victoria.

Sept. 1. The Emperor Napoleon entertained at Boulogne the King of the Belgians, the King of Portugal, and the Prince Consort of England.

Sept. 9. The deaths from cholera in London for the week ending this day were 2050. In three months, August, September, and October, 10,500 persons died of cholera in London.

LEGISLATION. Session 17 & 18 Victoriæ.

Cap. 5. An Act to admit Foreign Ships to the Coasting Trade. Foreign vessels are admitted on paying the same duties as British ships.

Cap. 38. For the suppression of Gaming Houses.

Cap. 74. To render Reformatory and Industrial Schools in Scotland more available for the benefit of Vagrant Children. Young persons under fourteen found begging, and without visible means of subsistence, may be sent to these schools without being charged with crime.

Cap. 114. To extend the Rights enjoyed by the Graduates of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, in respect to the Practice of Physic, to the Graduates of the University of London. Bachelors and doctors of medicine are privileged to practise as physicians in the same manner as graduates of Oxford and Cambridge, but this privilege does not extend to surgery, pharmacy, or midwifery.

Revenue, 58,903,495*l.*; expenditure—army and ordnance, 9,685,079*l.*; navy, 6,640,596*l.*; for all purposes, 55,647,991*l.*; debt, 771,335,801*l.

Exports of British and Irish produce, 97,184,726*l.*: total exports, 115,821,092*l.*; imports, 152,389,053*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 43,761; to the United States, 193,065; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 83,237; to other places, 3366: total, 323,429.

Railway traffic: miles open, 8054; number of passengers, 111,206,707; traffic receipts, 20,215,724*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,004,068.

1855.

Jan. 25. Lord John Russell retired from office in consequence of an approaching discussion in the House of Commons, on a motion of which Mr. Roebuck gave notice on the 23d for a select committee to inquire into the condition of our army before Sebastopol, and into the conduct of the commissariat and medical departments of the army.

Jan. 31. Resignation of Lord Aberdeen's cabinet, in consequence of the defeat of the government on the 29th, in the division on Mr. Roebuck's motion; the votes being 305 against ministers and 148 in their favor. The Earl of Derby was invited by the queen to undertake the formation of a government, but declined; Lord Palmerston accepted the responsibility, and the members of his cabinet were sworn into office on the 8th of February. The ministry stood thus: Viscount Palmerston, first lord of the treasury; Earl Granville, president of the council; Lord Cranworth, lord high chancellor; Duke of Argyll, lord privy seal; Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, chancellor of the exchequer; Sir George Grey, secretary of state for home affairs; Earl of Clarendon, foreign secretary; Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, colonial secretary; Lord Panmure, war secretary; Right Hon. Sir James Graham, first lord of the admiralty; Right Hon. Vernon Smith, president of the board of control; Sir B. Hall, commissioner of works and public buildings; Earl of Harrowby, chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; Marquess of Lansdowne, without office.

Feb. 20. Lord John Russell left London to attend the conferences of the representatives of the great powers, on the terms of peace between Russia and Turkey, as the British plenipotentiary.

Feb. 22. Withdrawal from office of Mr. Gladstone, Sir James Graham, and Mr. Sidney Herbert, on account of the House of Commons insisting upon the appointment of a select committee in terms of Mr. Roebuck's motion. Their places in the cabinet were filled up by the appointment of Sir G. C. Lewis, Sir Charles Wood, and Lord John Russell.

April 17. Arrival of the Emperor and Empress of the French at Windsor on a visit to the queen. On the 19th they were entertained by the lord mayor at a splendid fête in the Guildhall of London. They took leave on their return home on the 21st.

April 20. The chancellor of the exchequer made his financial statement, in which he intimated that the deficiency occasioned by the Russian war was about twenty-three millions, of which he proposed to raise sixteen millions by loan, and the rest by a readjustment involving an increase of taxation.

June 13. The new Metropolitan Cattle Market opened. Prince Albert attended the opening, and, in replying to the address read to him by the recorder, after remarking on the enormous growth of London, said that this growth "imperatively requires that those establishments which are to minister to the common wants of the whole should keep pace with its growth and magnitude. This can only be undertaken by public bodies, they can only be carried out by public spirit. . . . I hail the spirit which is rising among us."

July 13. Lord John Russell resigned his office of colonial secretary, in consequence of discussions in the House of Commons in reference to the part taken by him in the Vienna conferences. He was succeeded by Sir William Molesworth.

Aug. 1. Viscount Canning was entertained at a public banquet by the East India Company, previous to his departure to assume the functions of Governor-General of India.

Aug. 18. Queen Victoria and Prince Albert visited the Emperor of the French in Paris, remaining till the 27th, when they embarked at Boulogne on their return to England.

Nov. 22. The first stone of the Birmingham and Midland Institute laid by Prince Albert. At the banquet afterward, in the Town Hall of Birmingham, in replying to the toast of his health, he dwelt on the advantages to be derived from the higher branches of education; he remarked on the error of considering scientific knowledge as antagonistic; and said, "Far be it from me to undervalue the creative power of genius, or to treat shrewd common-sense as worthless without knowledge. But nobody will tell me that the same genius would not take an incomparably higher flight, if supplied with all the means

* Up to this date the financial year ended on January 4th; all after end on March 31st.

which knowledge can impart, or that common-sense does not become, in fact, only truly powerful when in possession of the materials upon which judgment is to be exercised."

Nov. 30. The King of Sardinia arrived at Windsor on a visit to the queen.

RUSSIAN WAR.—On the 6th of January conferences were opened at Vienna between the plenipotentiaries of Great Britain, France, Austria, and Russia, with a view to the restoration of peace. These conferences continued till the 21st of April, when they were suspended without any practical result. On the 10th of January Victor Emmanuel, King of Sardinia, joined the allies, and undertook to send 15,000 men to the Crimea to aid in the war against Russia. On the 12th of February an imperial ukase ordered the organization and arming of the entire militia of the Russian empire for the defence of the "orthodox faith." On the 17th the Russians attacked Eupatoria, but were repulsed by the Turks who formed the garrison of the place. On the 2d of March Nicholas, Emperor of Russia, died, and was succeeded by his son, Alexander II. The event was announced to the British houses of parliament within five hours of the emperor's decease, the intelligence being transmitted by telegraph. On the 4th of April the British fleet, under Rear-Admiral Dundas, sailed for the Baltic. The Baltic coast was blockaded from the 19th of April. The French fleet in the Baltic was under the command of Admiral Pénaud. On the 9th of April the second bombardment of Sebastopol commenced, and was continued, with little effect, till the 28th. On the 16th of May General Canrobert resigned the chief command of the French army in the Crimea to General Pelissier, but continued to serve as a general of division. On the 24th of May Kertch was occupied by the allies, whose fleets swept the sea of Azoff, captured and garrisoned Yenikali, and bombarded Taganrog, Mariapol, Gheisk, and other towns, destroying public buildings, government magazines, and provision stores. On the 7th of June, at Sebastopol, the French troops captured the Mamelon, two redoubts, and 62 guns, and took 130 officers and 400 men prisoners. On the 18th the French attacked the Malakhoff and the English the Redan, but were repulsed by the Russians with considerable loss. On the 28th Lord Raglan, the British commander-in-chief in the Crimea, died of cholera, in his sixty-eighth year; he was succeeded by General Simpson, as next in command. On the 11th of July, in the Baltic, the fortifications of Sweaborg were bombarded by the allied fleets of England and France. On the 16th of August the battle of the Tchernaya, near Sebastopol, took place, in which the Russians were defeated by the French and the Sardinians. On the 5th of September the third bombardment of Sebastopol commenced, and on the 8th the French took the Malakhoff; the English who attempted to take the Redan were repulsed. The Russians, who had suffered to a frightful extent from the effects of the shot and shells which had been poured upon the city and its defences—about 17,000 officers and privates having been killed, wounded, and missing in three days—evacuated the south side of Sebastopol at night, after sinking their ships and blowing up the defences. On the 9th the allies took possession of the place, which they found in a ruinous condition. On the 17th of October Kinburn, at the mouth of the Dnieper, surrendered to the allies. On the 18th the Russians blew up the fortress of Oczakoff. On the 10th of November the Emperor Alexander visited his army near Sebastopol. On the 11th of November General Sir William Codrington assumed the command of the British army in the Crimea. On the 26th the fortress of Kars surrendered to the Russians, after a protracted and gallant defence, continued for several months amid severe privations; General Williams and the other English officers, his companions, who became prisoners of war, were treated with great kindness by the Russian general. On the 16th of December Austria sent proposals for peace, the terms of which had been sanctioned by the allies, to the Emperor Alexander at St. Petersburg. On the 19th the United Kingdom of Sweden and Norway joined the alliance of the Western powers.

LEGISLATION. SESSION 18 & 19 VICTORIÆ.

Cap. 27. An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Stamp Duties on Newspapers, and to provide for the transmission by Post of printed Periodicals and Publications. By this act the stamp duty was removed except for purposes of transmission by post.

Cap. 88. To facilitate the erection of Dwelling-Houses for the Working Classes in Scotland. Granting powers under supervision for small associations to hold land and build houses suitable for the working classes.

Cap. 116. For the better Prevention of Diseases. In case of any endemic, epidemic, or contagious disease occurring in any part of England, the privy council and the general board of health are empowered to issue rules and directions for the removal of nuisances, the speedy interment of the dead, for house to house visitation, the dispensing of medicines, etc., the expenses to be paid out of the rates or funds administered by the local authorities.

Cap. 120. For the better Local Management of the Metropolis. By this act the construction of sewers, and such matters as cannot be effected by parishes singly, are confided to a board, the members of which are elected by the various parishes contained in the metropolitan district.

Cap. 126. For diminishing Expense and Delay in the Administration of Criminal Justice in certain cases. Offenders charged with simple felony where the thing stolen does not exceed 5*s.* in value, may be dealt with summarily by a police magistrate, if they consent; and if the value exceeds 5*s.* it may be so dealt with on the offender pleading guilty; if he does not, the case must go for trial.

Cap. 132. For facilitating the Erection of Dwelling-houses for the Working Classes. This, with some variation in detail, is for a similar purpose to that for Scotland, stated above.

Cap. 133. For limiting the Liability of Members of certain Joint-Stock Companies. Enables joint-stock companies to be formed, of which the individual liabilities are limited, but they must be registered, and the word "limited" must form the last word of the name of the company, and must always appear where the title is given.

Revenue, 62,815,952*l.*; expenditure—army and ordnance, 15,631,-602*l.*; navy, 14,490,105*l.*; for all purposes, 65,721,755*l.*; debt, 801,-978,763*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 95,688,085*l.*: total exports, 116,691,300*l.*; imports, 142,542,850*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 17,966; to the United States, 103,414; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 52,309; to all other places, 3118: total, 176,807.

Railway traffic: miles open, 8280; number of passengers, 118,595,-135; traffic receipts, 21,507,599*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,018,075.

1856.

Jan. 31. The queen, in opening parliament, announced that Russia had accepted as a basis for negotiation the proposals for a general peace put forth by Austria, with the sanction of the other allied powers.

Feb. 1. Protocol signed at Vienna by the representatives of Russia, France, Great Britain, Austria, and Turkey, accepting the Austrian propositions as a basis for peace.

Feb. 1. Dispatch from General Codrington announcing that the destruction of the Sebastopol docks had been completely effected.

Feb. 5. A new order of merit, "The Victoria Cross," instituted, the decoration of which is to be conferred upon inferior officers and privates in the army and navy for distinguished gallantry.

Feb. 7. The Governor-General of India announced by a proclamation the deposition of the King of Oude, and the annexation of his territory to the British possessions in India. The king was allowed a pension of 120,000*l.* a year.

Feb. 25. The peace conferences opened at Paris, attended by the representatives of France, Austria, Great Britain, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey. Prussia was subsequently admitted.

Feb. 29. Suspension of hostilities in the Crimea.

March 16. Birth of the Prince Imperial of France. On this occasion the emperor issued an amnesty in favor of upward of a thousand political exiles.

April 25. The queen reviewed a fleet of more than 300 men-of-war at Portsmouth. At the commencement of the review the fleet extended in an unbroken line of anchorage for about five miles.

April 29. Peace with Russia officially proclaimed by a herald in the streets of London.

May 3. An amnesty granted to political exiles, in virtue of which Frost, Williams, Jones, and Smith O'Brien were permitted to return to England. On the 11th of November a free pardon was granted by the queen to these political offenders.

May 29. Public celebration of the conclusion of peace. Magnificent fireworks in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin. A general illumination took place.

June 1. Disastrous inundations in France. For the relief of the sufferers subscriptions were raised in England to the amount of more than 40,000*l.*

July 12. Evacuation of the Crimea by the allied troops.

Oct. 8. Seizure by the Chinese authorities of a lorcha, or small trading vessel, which bore the British flag. This led to hostilities between Great Britain and China.

Oct. 13. Surrender of the city of Herat to the Persians, when the governor and his family were put to death. The Persians having thus violated a treaty to which Great Britain was a party, war was proclaimed against Persia at Calcutta on the 1st of November.

Oct. 24. Canton attacked by the British, who bombarded it on the 3d of November.

Oct. 27. Railway opened between Montreal and Toronto.

Nov. 22. An insurrection in Sicily suppressed by the military.

Dec. 9. Bushire, in the Persian Gulf, taken by the British expedition.

Dec. 10. Mr. Sheepshanks presented to the nation his collection of drawings and paintings. The collection has been placed in the South Kensington Museum.

Dec. 16. The queen went to Spithead to receive from the representative of the United States government the Arctic discovery ship Resolute, which having been abandoned in the ice by its crew, was recovered by an American ship, and having been completely repaired by the American government, was now restored to Great Britain.

LEGISLATION. SESSION 19 & 20 VICTORIÆ.

Cap. 47. An Act for the Incorporation and Regulation of Joint-Stock Companies and other Associations. One of the most important parts of this act is that relating to the winding-up of companies.

Cap. 64. To Repeal certain Statutes not in use. One hundred and welve statutes, most of them obsolete, but hitherto unrepealed, are once swept away.

Cap. 65. To Encourage the Providing of Improved Dwellings for the aboring Classes in Ireland.

Cap. 69. To render more effectual the Police in Counties and Boroughs England and Wales. This empowers the justices assembled in uarter sessions to adopt and enforce a more general system than had therto taken place; the divisional police of a county was to be consolidated, unless the secretary of state authorizes a division; and unty constables are empowered to act in any borough within the unty; and boroughs may be consolidated with the county for the rposes of police.

Cap. 83. To Provide for the better Defence of the Coasts of the Realm, d the more ready Manning of the Navy, and to transfer to the Admilty the management of the Coast Guard. The coast-guard men are to ve the privilege of making allotments of wages, and of pensions, seamen in the navy, and the officers are to have the training of the oyal Naval Coast Volunteers.

Cap. 98. To amend the Laws relating to the Burial of the Dead in eland. This establishes burial boards in Ireland as in England.

Revenue, 70,262,882*l.*; expenditure—army, including ordnance, 0,006,603*l.*; navy, 19,654,585*l.*; for all purposes, 88,453,385*l.*; debt, 9,579,798*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 115,826,948*l.*: total exports, 9,220,353*l.*; imports, 172,544,154*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 16,378; to the United tates, 111,837; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 44,584; to l other places, 3755: total, 176,554.

Railway traffic: miles open, 8707; number of passengers, 129,347,- 2; traffic receipts, 23,165,491*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,030,823.

1857.

[This year was remarkable for the mutiny of the native army in ritish India, which was not finally subdued till 1858. It may be nvenient to give the events connected with this alarming outbreak nder a separate head in each of these years, after the general chrology.]

Feb. 3. Parliament opened by commission.

March 3. A motion proposed by Mr. Cobden censuring the governent for the war with China, was carried, after four nights' discuson in the House of Commons, by 263 to 247 votes.

March 3. Treaty of peace between Great Britain and Persia, signed Paris by Lord Cowley and Ferukh-Khan.

March 3. Election of Mr. Buchanan as President of the United tates of North America.

March 13. The chancellor of the exchequer brought forward his udget, which contained proposals for the remission of taxation to ne extent of eleven millions.

March 14. Treaty signed at Copenhagen for the abolition of the ound dues. The share of indemnity money payable by Great ritain was 1,125,206*l.*

March 19. Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, pened new schools in Golden Lane, Barbican. In the course of his nswer to the address presented to him, he said, "You have not been ontent with the bare attempt to force, perhaps upon unwilling recients, a boon, the value of which might not be appreciated, but you ave wisely sought to work upon the convictions of the parents of ne children you wish to benefit, by extending your assistance only those who, by a small contribution out of their hardly-won earngs, have proved that they are awake to a sense of the vast imporance it is to their offspring that the means of being fitted to pass succssfully through life, and, by honest industry, to better their conition, should be brought within their reach."

March 21. Parliament dissolved, and a new parliament summoned.

April 21. Departure of the Earl of Elgin on a special embassy to ne Emperor of China at Pekin.

May 5. Prince Albert opened the Exhibition of Art Treasures at Manchester. In addressing the committee, he remarked on the generous feeling of mutual confidence and good-will between the ifferent classes of society, of which it [the exhibition] affords so ratifying a proof."

May 7. Parliament opened by commission. Mr. J. Evelyn Denison lected Speaker of the House of Commons.

May 21. The House of Commons agreed to grant to the princess oyal an annuity of 8000*l.* per annum, and a dower of 40,000*l.*, on ccasion of her marriage with Prince Frederick William of Prussia.

June 1. A number of war junks taken from the Chinese in the anton River.

June 22. Educational conference in London, at which Prince Albert resided. In his speech he detailed some of the statistics of the state f education, but he said, "You will probably trace the cause of ur social condition to a state of ignorance and lethargic indifference n the subject among parents generally; but the root of the evil will, suspect, be found to extend into that field on which the political conomist exercises his activity—I mean the labor market—demand nd supply." He pointed out how this acted. Of the laborer he aid, "His children are not only his offspring, to be reared for a uture independent position, but they constitute part of his produc ive power, and work with him for the staff of life." He therefore xhorted the meeting to work "upon the minds and hearts of parents, to place before them the irreparable mischief which they inflict," by keeping their children from the "right of knowledge."

June 25. An order in council conferred the title of Prince Consort on Prince Albert.

July 11. Failure of the Atlantic telegraph cable, the cable having snapped after 335 miles length had been given out.

July 25. Public meeting at the Mansion House, London, in aid of the sufferers from the Indian mutiny. In the course of three months upward of 260,000*l.* was raised for this purpose.

Nov. 12. In consequence of a severe commercial panic, the government authorized the Bank of England to extend its issues, which had the effect of mitigating the pressure upon the money market, and restoring confidence. An estimate was made to the effect that the aggregate liabilities of commercial houses, which had fallen during the panic, amounted to about forty-five millions sterling. At this time there was great distress in the manufacturing districts.

Nov. 18. Ambassadors from the two kings of Siam received by Queen Victoria at a court held at Windsor.

Nov. 18. Great distress in Kafirland. About 30,000 destitute Kafirs brought in as servants to the Cape Colonists.

Dec. 3. Parliament opened by the queen in person, having met at this season chiefly for the purpose of passing a bill of indemnity, exonerating the government in regard to the permission given to the Bank of England to extend its issues for the purpose of mitigating the pressure of the recent commercial panic. On the 12th the royal assent was given to the bill of indemnity, and the houses adjourned.

Dec. 29. Canton taken by the British forces, and Commissioner Yeh made prisoner.

India.—Jan. 24. A mutinous spirit began to manifest itself among the Sepoys of the East India Company's army at Barrackpoor, Berhampoor, Lucknow, Meerut, and elsewhere. The origin of the disaffection was said to be the use of cartridges made up in paper which had been greased with a mixture of cow's fat and hog's lard—a composition offensive to the Hindoo, who regards the cow with religious veneration, and also to the Mohammedan, who looks upon the hog with abhorrence. On the 10th of May the mutiny broke out at Meerut, from which place the insurgents marched to Delhi, where, on the 11th, being joined by several native regiments, they proclaimed the King of Delhi as emperor, and massacred many of the English residents. Lieutenant Willoughby blew up the magazine, and made his escape. On the 20th General Anson arrived before Delhi with a small force of British and native troops. On the 27th General Anson died of cholera, which also struck down his successor, Sir H. Barnard. General Reed, who took the command on July 5th, was obliged, from ill health, to transfer it to General Wilson on the 22d. General Nicholson having arrived with reinforcements, Delhi was taken by assault on the 14th of September, the fight being continued in the city till the 20th. The British lost about 1200 killed and wounded. General Nicholson died on the 23d. The native troops, at Lucknow, broke out in mutiny on the 31st of May. They were dispersed by the troops under Sir Henry Lawrence. On the 5th of June the Europeans at Allahabad were besieged in the fort by the mutineers. The small British force in Cawnpore were in like manner hemmed in, and were compelled to surrender to Nana Sahib on the 26th of June, General Wheeler having died on the 21st from a wound received in making a sally on the previous day. The English were embarked in boats on the Ganges, to be conveyed to Allahabad, in accordance with the terms of surrender. They were fired upon with cannon, many boats were sunk, and those persons who got on shore were cut down. Colonel Havelock, who had arrived at Calcutta from the Persian Gulf on the 17th of June, was immediately dispatched, with the rank of brigadier-general, in command of the troops intended for the relief of Cawnpore. On the 1st of July General Havelock left Allahabad with a force of 2000 Europeans, on the 16th he defeated Nana Sahib before Cawnpore, and on the 17th entered the town. On the 19th he again defeated Nana Sahib at Bithoor. At Lucknow, in a sortie against the Sepoy besiegers, on the 2d of July, Sir Henry Lawrence was wounded, and died on the 4th—Major Banks took the command, and held possession of the Residency and fort. On the 15th General Neill defeated the mutineers at the Pundoo Nuddee, south of Cawnpore. On the 16th Nana Sahib murdered the women and children who were in his custody at Cawnpore, and flung their bodies into a wide and deep well. On the same day General Havelock gained his ninth victory between Cawnpore and Lucknow. On the 25th of September he reached Lucknow with 2500 troops, and relieved the Europeans besieged in the Residency. On the 26th he forced the mutineers to abandon their intrenchments. On the 3d of November Sir Colin Campbell, who had been appointed commander-in-chief of the army in India on the 11th of July, and left London for Calcutta on the 12th, arrived at Cawnpore. On the 17th of November he delivered the Europeans from their confinement in the Residency, which was evacuated by the 23d. On the 25th of November Sir Henry Havelock died, eight days after he received the tidings of his having been created a Knight Commander of the Bath. On the 6th of December Sir Colin Campbell defeated the Gwalior contingent, and on the 8th Sir Hope Grant also defeated them higher up the Ganges.

LEGISLATION. Session 20 & 21 Victoriæ.

Cap. 3. An Act to Amend the Act of the 16 & 17 Victoria, cap. 95, to substitute in certain Cases other Punishment in lieu of Transportation.

No offender in future to be sentenced to transportation, but persons under sentence of penal servitude may be sent to places beyond sea, the privy council appointing the places; and magistrates may commit convicts whose licenses are revoked to penal servitude in any convict prison.

Cap. 14. An Act to Amend the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856. Much of this act relates to the duties of officials, but it also enacts that where more than 20 persons are engaged in partnership, and are not registered, each is declared separately liable for the debts of the firm. When a winding-up order has been obtained against any company, the liquidator may obtain a warrant for the arrest of any shareholder whom he may have reason to suspect of being about to abscond or to conceal his property, and his books, papers, moneys, and other property may be seized.

Cap. 48. To make better Provision for the Care and Education of Vagrant, Destitute and Disorderly Children, and for the Extension of Industrial Schools. Parents may be compelled to pay toward the support of their child a sum of not more than 3*s.* per week.

Cap. 54. To make better Provision for the Punishment of Frauds committed by Trustees, Bankers, and other Persons intrusted with Property. After detailing the various frauds enacted against—as appropriating property, making false statements with intent to deceive; keeping fraudulent accounts, etc.—the offender is declared liable to penal imprisonment for three, or by imprisonment with or without hard labor for two, years, or by fine as the court shall direct.

Cap. 71. For the Regulation of the Care and Treatment of Lunatics, and for the Provision, Maintenance, and Regulation of Lunatic Asylums in Scotland. Private asylums are to be licensed; district asylums are to be provided in the large towns, and commissioners to be appointed who are to inspect and make an annual report.

Cap. 72. To render more effectual the Police in Counties and Burghs in Scotland. This act in effect is for organizing a general police in Scotland, which had previously been only local.

Cap. 77. To Amend the Laws relating to Probate and Letters of Administration in England. This important act removes the jurisdiction in all such matters, from the ecclesiastical courts to a special court instituted by this act; cap. 79 was a similar act for Ireland.

Cap. 83. An Act for more effectually Preventing the Sale of Obscene Books, Pictures, Prints, and other Articles. On information given upon oath, magistrates may issue search warrants, authorizing the use of force in the day-time, in order to search the suspected premises.

Cap. 85. To Amend the Law relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England. This, like cap. 77, removes all such matters from the ecclesiastical courts to a court especially appointed, of which the judge holds the same office in the Probate Court; the lord chancellor, the chief judges, and the senior puisne judges of the law courts may sit with him; and in suits for annulling marriage, applications for new trials, etc., they must be heard by three or more judges, the judge of the probate court being always one.

Revenue, 72,334,062*l.*; expenditure—army, 20,811,242*l.*; navy, 13,459,012*l.*; for all objects, 71,371,533*l.*; debt, 834,722,963*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 122,066,107*l.*: total of exports, 146,174,301*l.*; imports, 187,844,441*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 21,001; to the United States, 126,905; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 61,248; to all other places, 3721: total, 212,875.

Railway traffic: miles open, 9094; number of passengers, 139,008,888; traffic receipts, 24,174,610*l.*

Number of paupers, 979,117.

1858.

Jan. 14. An attempt was made to assassinate the Emperor and Empress of the French by an explosion of hand grenades. The emperor and empress escaped unhurt, but five persons were killed and about sixty wounded. For this attempt five persons were tried and convicted, of whom two, Orsini and Pieri, were guillotined at Paris.

Jan. 25. Marriage of the Princess Royal of England with Prince Frederick William of Prussia, in the chapel of St. James's Palace.

Jan. 31. Completion of the launch of the Great Eastern steamship, the commencement having been made about three months previously.

Feb. 10. The blockade of Canton raised.

Feb. 22. Lord Palmerston's cabinet resigned, in consequence of an adverse vote (234 to 215) of the House of Commons, proposed by Mr. Milner Gibson, expressing regret that her majesty's government, previously to inviting the house to amend the law of conspiracy, had not made some reply to the dispatch received from the French government dated January 20th, 1858. On the retirement of Viscount Palmerston the Earl of Derby was intrusted with the formation of a ministry. The new cabinet was constituted as follows: Earl of Derby, first lord of the treasury; Marquess of Salisbury, president of the council; Lord Chelmsford, lord high chancellor; Earl of Hardwicke, lord privy seal; Rt. Hon. B. Disraeli, chancellor of the exchequer; Rt. Hon. Spencer Walpole, secretary of state for home affairs; Earl of Malmesbury, foreign secretary; Rt. Hon. Sir E. B. Lytton, colonial secretary; Major-General Peel, secretary for war; Earl of Ellenborough, president of the board of control; Rt. Hon. Sir J. S. Pakington, first lord of the admiralty; Rt. Hon. J. W. Henley, president of the board of trade; Lord John Manners, president of the board of works.

March 14. A proclamation was issued by the Governor-General of India to the people of Oude, threatening confiscation of the lands of such talookdhars as do not submit to the government. This proclamation was disapproved by Lord Ellenborough, the president of the board of control, and the publication in this country of his dispatch to the governor-general upon the subject led to Lord Ellenborough's withdrawal from the cabinet.

March 15. Lord Malmesbury, the foreign secretary, laid on the table of the House of Lords the correspondence that had taken place between her majesty's government since its accession to office and the French government, and said that the correspondence had concluded in all honor and good feeling on both sides.

March 30. Conference at Shanghai of the representatives of Great Britain, France, Russia, and the United States. The reply of the Chinese government to the communications of the ambassadors being considered unsatisfactory, it was resolved to proceed to Tien-tsin.

May 15. Massacre of the English and French consuls, and about 20 other Europeans, at Jeddah, the port of Mecca.

May 20. Arrival of the British and French expedition at Tien-tsin, after having captured the Pei-ho forts.

May 26. Treaty of Tien-tsin concluded between the Chinese government and Great Britain, represented by the Earl of Elgin. Separate treaties with the Chinese were made by France, Russia, and America.

July 23. Jeddah bombarded by the British ship Cyclops, and again on the 5th of August.

Aug. 5. The queen and prince consort visited the Emperor Napoleon at Cherbourg on occasion of the opening of the Napoleon Docks.

Aug. 12. The Earl of Elgin landed at Jeddo, the capital of Japan, and negotiated a favorable treaty with the emperor, which was signed on the 26th.

Aug. 22. Congratulatory message sent by Queen Victoria to President Buchanan by the Atlantic Telegraph and responded to in a friendly manner by the president. The telegraph soon ceased to transmit messages, and the efforts made to effect a communication by telegraph between the opposite shores of the Atlantic have been unsuccessful.

Sept. 1. The East India Company's government transferred to the crown by act of parliament, which was announced throughout India by a royal proclamation on the 1st of November.

India.—On the 2d of January Sir Colin Campbell defeated the rebels at Futtehghur, and established an artillery depot there. On the 9th the first party of ladies and children, and of sick and wounded officers from Lucknow, arrived at Calcutta. They landed under a royal salute, amid the cheering of several hundreds of Europeans. On the 29th Saugor, in Central India, which had been invested by the rebels for upward of six months, was relieved by Sir Hugh Rose. March 2. Sir Colin Campbell commenced the siege of Lucknow, taking possession of the Dilkoosha Palace and park. On the 19th Lucknow fell into the hands of the British, the rebels, to the number of 50,000, seeking safety in flight. On the 13th of April the garrison of Azinghur was relieved by Sir E. Lugard. On the 13th of May Sir Hope Grant defeated the rebels at Nawabgunge, near Lucknow, and on the 23d the strong fortress of Calpee was taken by Sir Hugh Rose. On the 19th of June Sir Hugh Rose retook Gwalior from the rebels, and reinstated the Maharaja Sindia in his capital and possessions.

LEGISLATION. Session 21 & 22 Victoriæ.

Cap. 26. An Act to abolish the Property Qualifications of Members of Parliament. Repealing all the acts requiring a property qualification for a member of parliament.

Cap. 48. To substitute one Oath for the Oaths of Allegiance, Supremacy, and Abjuration, and for the relief of her Majesty's Subjects professing the Jewish Religion. Preserves the form of oath, allows Quakers to "affirm" instead of "swear," and Jews to omit the words, "on the faith of a Christian."

Cap. 49. To provide for the Relief of her Majesty's Subjects professing the Jewish Religion. This act admits Jews to sit in parliament, but they are restricted from presenting to any ecclesiastical benefice, and from holding the offices of lord chancellor, lord lieutenant of Ireland, or high commissioner of the general assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Cap. 90. To regulate the Qualifications of Practitioners in Medicine and Surgery. Councils are appointed to examine applicants as to qualifications, and on approval they receive certificates entitling them to practise. The act also regulates the Royal College of Physicians, and the College of Surgeons in London, and other medical colleges.

Cap. 91. To enable Joint-Stock Banking Companies to be formed on the Principle of Limited Liability. Repeals so much of a former act as prevented the formation of such companies; but only on condition of not issuing notes in the United Kingdom.

Cap. 99. To provide for the Government of British Columbia. By this act British Columbia was constituted a distinct colony.

Cap. 106. For the better Government of India. This act transferred the government of India from the board of directors to her majesty, with a new secretary of state for its management.

Revenue, 67,881,513*l.*; expenditure—army, 14,405,850*l.*; navy, 10,590,000*l.*; for all objects, 68,128,859*l.*; debt, 826,134,640*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 116,608,756*l.* : total exports, 139,782,779*l.* ; imports, 164,588,832*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 9704 ; to the United States, 59,716 ; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 39,295 , to all other places, 5257 : total, 113,972.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 9,064,763*l.* ; total imported, 22,793,126*l.

Railway traffic : miles open, 9542 ; number of passengers, 139,-193,699 ; traffic receipts, 23,956,749*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,037,967.

1859.

Jan. 9. The Governor-General of India published decrees constituting the Punjaub a lieutenant-governorship and ordering the general disarming of Upper India.

Jan. 25. At this date the entire pacification of Oude was reported.

Jan. 30. Prince Napoleon, cousin of the emperor, married at Turin to Princess Clothilde, daughter of the King of Sardinia.

Feb. 3. Parliament opened by the queen in person.

March 1. Mr. Walpole and Mr. Henley stated to the House of Commons their reasons for withdrawing from Lord Derby's government on account of some of the provisions of the Reform Bill proposed by the government.

March 31. The debate in the House of Commons on the Government Reform Bill, which had continued for several days, terminated in the defeat of ministers by a majority of 330 against 291 votes.

April 18. Tantia Topee, one of the leaders of the Indian Mutiny, executed at Seepree by sentence of a court-martial.

April 19. Parliament dissolved.

June 7. Queen Victoria opened parliament in person. On the address in answer to the queen's speech the ministers were left in a minority of 13—the votes being 323 to 310—and in consequence resigned the office. Viscount Palmerston was intrusted with the formation of a new cabinet. The ministry, as arranged by him, was as follows : Viscount Palmerston, first lord of the treasury ; Earl Granville, president of the council ; Lord Campbell, lord high chancellor ; Duke of Argyll, lord privy seal ; Rt. Hon. W. E Gladstone, chancellor of the exchequer ; Rt. Hon. Sir G. C. Lewis, secretary of state for home affairs ; Lord John Russell, foreign secretary ; Duke of Newcastle, colonial secretary ; Rt. Hon. Sidney Herbert, secretary for war ; Rt. Hon. Sir C. Wood, secretary for India ; Duke of Somerset, first lord of the admiralty ; Rt. Hon. E. Cardwell, chief secretary for Ireland ; Earl of Elgin, postmaster-general ; Rt. Hon. T. M. Gibson, president of board of trade ; Rt. Hon. C. P. Villiers, president of poor-law board ; Rt. Hon. Sir George Grey, chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

June 25. The allied forces accompanying the English and French ambassadors to the Chinese court, being obstructed in their passage up the Pei-ho River, on their way to Pekin, attempted to force their way, but were repulsed with the loss of about 450 men.

Aug. 13. Parliament prorogued by commission.

Oct. 30. For several months a large proportion of the workmen employed in the building trades of the metropolis continued on strike, their demand being chiefly for the establishment of nine hours as the time of a working day : much distress prevailed in the families of the workmen. Many of the employers having adopted the rule of payment by the hour, the men gradually returned to work.

Italy.—On the 1st of January the emperor of the French, at his new year's day reception of the foreign ambassadors, said to M. de Hubner, the Austrian representative : "I regret that our relations with your government are not so good as they were, but I request you to tell the emperor that my personal feelings for him have not changed." These words reported in the newspapers caused a great sensation throughout Europe. On the 10th the King of Sardinia, in opening the Piedmontese Chambers in Turin, said : "The horizon in which the new year rises is not perfectly serene. . . . While we respect treaties, we are not insensible to the cry of grief which reaches us from so many parts of Italy." On the 11th of February Count Cavour, the Piedmontese prime minister, in a speech to the Turin Chamber of Deputies, charged Austria with assuming an offensive attitude toward Sardinia by placing large bodies of troops along the frontier. On the 27th Lord Cowley arrived at Vienna, as an envoy from the British government, with a view to mediate between the Austrian government on the one hand and France and Sardinia on the other. This mission was unsuccessful. On the 1st of April the French government decided to send an army of 60,000 men to the Sardinian frontier. On the 19th the Austrian government sent an ultimatum to the Court of Turin, requiring Sardinia to disarm immediately, and to disband the Italian volunteers. Three days were allowed for an answer. Sardinia rejected this ultimatum, and Great Britain, Prussia, and Russia protested against the conduct of Austria. France proceeded to prepare for war. Peaceful revolutions took place on the 27th in Tuscany, and on the 31st at Parma, provisional governments being formed in both cases. On the 29th the Austrian army crossed the Ticino. On the 20th of May the French and Piedmontese, under the command of the Emperor Napoleon and Victor Emmanuel, defeated the Austrians at Montebello. On the 27th Garibaldi, at the head of the Italian Volunteers, took possession of the city of Como, after defeating the Austrians in several engagements. On the 30th the Emperor of Austria put himself at the head of his army at Verona. On the 31st the Austrian army was defeated by the Sardinians at Palestro. On the 1st of June the French troops occupied Novara. On the 4th was fought the battle of Magenta, in which the Emperor of the French commanded the Imperial Guard and the zouaves. The Austrians were defeated with immense loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners. On the 5th Milan and on the 7th Pavia were evacuated by the Austrians. On the 8th the Emperor Napoleon and Victor Emmanuel entered Milan in triumph. On the 22d the Austrian army retreated across the Mincio. On the 24th the battle of Solferino took place, in which the Austrians, 170,000 in number, were commanded by the Emperor Francis Joseph, and the allied French and Sardinians, numbering about 150,-000, by the Emperor Napoleon. The battle, which lasted from five o'clock in the morning till eight at night, was attended with enormous slaughter. An armistice was agreed to on the 8th of July, and on the 11th a personal interview took place at Villafranca, between the emperors of France and Austria, who came to an agreement as to the terms of peace. The treaty of peace was signed at Zurich, on the 11th of November, by the representatives of Austria, France, and Sardinia. On the 18th of November General Garibaldi published a proclamation to the Italians, intimating his withdrawal from the service in consequence of the obstacles placed in his path by the demands of a crafty policy, but exhorting the Italians to rally round Victor Emmanuel.

LEGISLATION. Session 22 & 23 Victoriæ.

Cap. 27. An Act to facilitate Grants of Land to be made near Populous Places for the Use of Regulated Recreation for Adults, and as Play-grounds for Children. Enabling lands given for such purposes to be held by trustees, empowering corporations and parishes to grant lands, for the purchase or maintenance of which personal property of not more than 1000*l.* in value may be bequeathed.

Cap. 34. To amend and explain the Act of the 6 Geo. IV. cap. 129, to repeal the Laws relating to the Combination of Workmen, and to make other Provisions in lieu thereof. Allows workmen to unite for the purpose of regulating their wages or other matters, peaceably and in a reasonable manner, and without threat or intimidation, direct or indirect, but not to break or to induce another to break any contract.

Cap. 56. To amend the Act 5 and 6 Wm. IV. cap. 63, relating to Weights and Measures. Imperial standards are to be furnished, and inspectors appointed in counties and towns who are to examine beams, scales, weights, and measures ; false ones being subject to forfeiture and fine. Owners of markets are to provide such articles for general use, and to have their accuracy tested at least twice a year.

Cap. 66. For regulating Measures used in the Sale of Gas. A general act by which inspectors are appointed, and meters are to be examined and stamped, and no meter to be considered legal unless stamped.

Revenue, 65,477,284*l.* ; expenditure—army, 13,294,814*l.* ; navy, 9,215,487*l.* ; for all objects, 60,147,914*l.* ; debt, 823,934,880*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 130,411,529*l.* : total exports, 155,692,795*l.* ; imports, 179,182,355*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 6689 ; to United States, 70,303 ; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 31,013 ; to all other places, 12,427 : total, 120,432.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 8,624,566*l.* : total imported, 22,297,698*l.* ; exported, 18,081,139*l.*

Railway traffic : miles open, 10,002 ; number of passengers, 149,-807,148 ; traffic receipts, 25,743,502*l.*

Number of paupers, 983,837.

1860.

Jan. 24. Parliament opened by the queen in person. The speech stated that a conference of the great powers of Europe had been proposed with reference to the affairs of Italy, but the conference had been postponed—whether in congress or in separate negotiation, her majesty would "endeavor to obtain for the people of Italy freedom from foreign interference by force of arms in their internal concerns."

Feb. 10. The chancellor of the exchequer brought forward his budget, which included, among other measures, an extension of the license system to refreshment houses for the sale of wines, the abolition of the duties on paper and numerous other articles, with the income-tax at sevenpence in the pound on incomes between 100*l.* and 150*l.*, and tenpence in the pound on incomes above 150*l.* a year.

March 1. Lord John Russell introduced a bill to amend the representation of the people of England and Wales. Similar reform bills were introduced for Scotland and Ireland.

Feb. 12. By votes recorded on the 11th and 12th, the people of Tuscany and the Romagna decided on annexation to Sardinia.

Feb. 15. General rising of the people of Sicily against the Neapolitan government.

Feb. 24. Treaty between France and Sardinia signed at Turin, by which Savoy and Nice were annexed to France.

May 1. War between the Maoris of New Zealand and the British, in consequence of a dispute about the sale of some lands.

May 3. Lord John Russell's Reform Bill was read a second time in the House of Commons, after being debated for four nights.

* The imports of bullion were not registered at the Custom House until November, 1857.

May 16. Garibaldi's troops defeated those of the King of Naples at Lioppo. On the 17th Garibaldi issued a proclamation announcing that he had assumed the responsibility of the dictatorship of Sicily.

May 21. In the House of Lords, on the motion of Lord Monteagle, the Paper Duties Repeal Bill was thrown out by 193 votes to 104.

May 22. Garibaldi defeated the Neapolitan forces, and on the 27th entered Palermo. On the 29th the ministers of the King of Naples resigned their functions.

June 1. Armistice agreed to between Garibaldi and the Neapolitan troops in Sicily.

June 11. Lord John Russell stated in the House of Commons that, in consequence of the large number of amendments on the proposed Reform Bill of which notice had been given, and the lateness of the session, the government had resolved to withdraw the bill.

June 23. The queen reviewed 18,000 volunteers in Hyde Park.

July 5. The House of Commons, on the motion of Lord Palmerston, passed three resolutions in vindication of the privileges of the house against the recent aggression of the Lords, in throwing out the Paper Duties Repeal Bill, the rejecting of which, being a money bill, was not within the province of the Lords.

July 9. The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Duke of Newcastle, secretary of state for the colonies, embarked at Plymouth on a visit to Canada and the United States. On the 18th of August the prince was at Quebec. On the 20th of September he entered the United States on his way to Washington to visit the president, travelling under the title of Baron Renfrew. On the 15th of November he landed at Plymouth on his return home.

July 16. Opening of the fourth annual congress of the International Statistical Congress in London, when the prince consort, as president, delivered an address.

July 21. England, France, and other European powers united in sending an expedition to Syria to protect the life and property of Europeans, and arrest the effusion of blood, in the conflicts which might occur and were still threatened between the Druses and the Maronites.

Aug. 7. The queen reviewed about 20,000 volunteers in the Queen's Park, Edinburgh.

Aug. 20. Fuad Pasha, the commissioner sent to Syria by the sultan, caused 167 persons implicated in the massacres in Syria to be executed in Damascus, and many others to be sent to Constantinople to be imprisoned and put to hard labor.

Aug. 21. The Taku forts at the mouth of the Pei-ho River taken by the British and French troops, after a determined resistance by the Tartars forming the garrison. The allies proceeded to occupy Tien-tsin, the ambassadors and the main body of the army going on toward Pekin.

Aug. 28. Parliament closed by commission.

Sept. 7. The King of Naples left his capital in a Spanish ship for Gaeta. Garibaldi entered Naples on the 8th, accompanied only by his staff, and immediately organized a government. On the 9th he proclaimed Victor Emmanuel King of Italy, and on the 11th handed over the Neapolitan fleet to the Sardinian admiral.

Sept. 29. Ancona capitulated to the Sardinians. The papal army, with their commander, General Lamoricière, surrendered themselves prisoners of war.

Oct. 1. Garibaldi defeated the Neapolitans in the battle of the Volturno.

Oct. 24. Peace concluded between Great Britain and France on the one hand and China on the other. The allies were represented by the Earl of Elgin and Baron Gros ; China was represented by Prince Kung, brother of the emperor. On the 5th of November the allied forces left Pekin.

Nov. 7. The King of Sardinia entered Naples, and was received with general enthusiasm. On the 9th Garibaldi retired to his small property on the little island of Caprera.

Dec. 13. Death of the Earl of Aberdeen, aged 77.

Dec. 14. Message of President Buchanan to the United States Congress, deprecating the threatened secession of the Southern States.

Dec. 20. Secession of South Carolina from the United States of North America.

LEGISLATION. Session 23 & 24 Victoriæ.

Cap. 8. An Act to amend the Law relating to the unlawful Administering of Poisons. Administering poisons or noxious substances with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy, is made punishable as a misdemeanor for three years, with or without hard labor ; if endangering life or causing bodily harm, by penal servitude for not more than ten nor less than three years. Persons indicted for the felony may be convicted of the misdemeanor.

Cap. 11. To amend the Law relating to Endowed Schools. Provides for the admission of children of parents not in communion with the Church of England, were not expressly required by the endowment.

Cap. 27. For granting to Her Majesty certain Duties on Wine Licenses and Refreshment Houses, and for regulating the licensing of Refreshment Houses, and the granting of Wine Licenses. Licenses for the retailing of foreign wine to be drunk on the premises to be granted by the commissioners of inland revenue, within certain limited hours, and under certain regulations.

Cap. 78. To place the Employment of Women, young Persons, and Children in Bleaching Works and Dyeing Works, under the Regulations of the Factory Acts.

Cap. 84. For preventing the Adulteration of Articles of Food or Drink. Articles of food adulterated with anything prejudicial to health subjects the seller, if aware of it, to a penalty of 5*l*. Chemical analyzers are to be appointed, and purchasers may have a suspected article analyzed on payment of a fee varying from 2*s*. 6*d*. to 10*s*. 6*d*.

Cap. 151. For the Regulation and Inspection of Mines. Forbids the employment of boys under the age of twelve, or not under ten, with a certificate of having attended school for a certain period. Penalties are imposed for giving false certificates, and inspectors are appointed.

Cap. 154. To consolidate and amend the Law of Landlord and Tenant in Ireland. Several acts are repealed, and fixtures of trade and agriculture erected by a tenant at his own expense are made removable, if not injuring the freehold. Compensation is to be made for the crops or manuring the land on the removal of the tenant.

Revenue, 71,089,669*l*. ; expenditure—army, 14,915,243*l*. ; navy, 11,823,859*l*. ; for all objects, 69,502,289*l*. ; debt, 819,079,310*l*.

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 9786 ; to United States, 87,500 ; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 24,302 ; to all other places, 6881 : total, 128,469.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 6,719,000*l*. : total imported, 12,584,684*l*. ; exported, 10,393,512*l*.

Railway traffic : miles open, 10,433 ; number of passengers, 163,483,572 ; traffic receipts, 27,766,622*l*.

Number of paupers, 973,255.

1861.

Jan. 1. The French government abolished the passport system in respect of British subjects travelling in France.

Jan. 3. President Buchanan received commissioners from South Carolina, who requested that the troops should be removed from the forts of the United States in Charleston Harbor. The president, in accordance with the views of the majority of his cabinet, refused to withdraw the troops.

Jan. 12. Famine in North-western India, owing to want of rain. Besides money granted by the government, and raised by subscription in Calcutta, upward of 100,000*l*. was transmitted from London and Liverpool, the contributions of the people of Great Britain for the relief of the starving millions of the Indian rice country.

Feb. 4. The Emperor Napoleon, in opening the French legislative chambers, invited free discussion on the topics submitted to their consideration, and intimated that the newspapers would now be permitted to publish the debates.

Feb. 5. Parliament opened by the queen in person, who in the royal speech expressed her concern at the unhappy differences which had arisen between the States composing the North American Union, and her heartfelt wish that these differences might be susceptible of a satisfactory adjustment.

Feb. 14. Gaeta surrendered to the Piedmontese general, Cialdini, after suffering severely from the prolonged siege and bombardment. The ex-King and Queen of Naples left the harbor on board the French ship Mouette.

Feb. 26. Mr. Bruce took up his residence at Pekin as British plenipotentiary at the Chinese court.

April 8. The decennial census of Great Britain and Ireland taken this day.

1.	England and Wales	20,061,725
2.	Scotland	3,061,329
3.	Ireland	5,764,543
4.	Islands in the British Seas	143,779
5.	Army, navy and merchant seamen	303,412
	Total	29,334,788

The males and females numbered in each case as follows : (1) 9,758,852 males and 10,302,873 females ; (2) 1,447,015 m. and 1,614,314 f. ; (3) 2,804,961 m. and 2,959,582 f. ; and (4) 66,394 m. and 77,385 f. ; the total consists of 14,380,634 of the one sex, and 14,954,154 of the other.

April 8. Disturbances in Warsaw, in which in a few days about a thousand persons were killed and wounded by the Russian troops.

April 15. The chancellor of the exchequer brought forward his budget, in which he proposed to reduce the rate of income-tax from 10*d*. to 9*d*. in the pound, to abolish the paper duties, and to re-enact the existing duties on tea and sugar for one year.

April 15. Proclamation of Mr. Lincoln, the new President of the United States, calling out the militia of the several States, and summoning an early session of Congress, to meet on July 4th.

April 18. At Harper's Ferry the commissioners of the Federal government, being pressed by a superior force, destroyed the armory, the arsenal, and 15,000 stand of arms, and retired to Pennsylvania.

April 29. In the House of Lords it was stated by Lord Wodehouse that her majesty's government had decided not to intrude advice or counsel on the government of the United States, but that Lord Lyons, the British ambassador at Washington, had been instructed to express on every fitting occasion the earnest desire of her majesty's government that the differences between the North and the South might be amicably arranged.

April 29. Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States, sent a message to the Confederate Congress respecting the war with the Federal States. In this message he announced that a permanent constitution of the Confederate States had been ratified.

May 8. Messages from the queen to both Houses of Parliament intimated her majesty's sanction to a marriage between the Princess Alice and Prince Louis of Hesse. On the 6th parliament voted to the Princess Alice a dower of 30,000*l.* and an annuity of 6000*l.*

June 1. Death of Count Cavour, Prime Minister of Victor Emmanuel, King of Italy.

June 10. Repulse of the Federal American troops by the Confederates at Great Bethel, between James River and York River.

July 4. The Federal American Congress, in extraordinary session, authorized the employment of 500,000 volunteers, and voted a supply of 500 million dollars to carry on the war.

July 21. The Federal army beaten by the Confederates at Bull Run, near Manassas Junction, after nine hours' severe fighting.

Aug. 6. Parliament prorogued.

Oct. 25. Death of Sir James R. G. Graham, Bart., aged 69.

Nov. 8. The Trent, West-India mail steamer, which left Havana on the 7th, was boarded by the San Jacinto, United States man-of-war, commanded by Captain Wilkes, and four passengers—Messrs. Slidell and Mason, Confederate commissioners to London and Paris, with their secretaries—were forcibly abducted, the commander of the Trent, and the admiralty agent in charge of the mail energetically protesting against the outrage, which they had no power to prevent.

Nov. 30. Earl Russell, secretary of state for foreign affairs—having received information on the 27th of the seizure of the confederate commissioners on board the Trent—dispatched instructions to Lord Lyons to demand the restoration of the four passengers taken from the Trent by Captain Wilkes. On the 13th of December the first draft of troops was sent off from this country for Canada, followed by several detachments in the next ten days. On the 27th of December, Mr. Seward, the American secretary of state, informed Lord Lyons that the four prisoners would be cheerfully given up by the United States government, which had not authorized or sanctioned the act of Captain Wilkes in capturing them. They were accordingly given up to Lord Lyons on the 2d of January, 1862, and sent by him immediately to England.

Dec. 14. Death of the prince consort at Windsor Castle, in his 43d year.

LEGISLATION. Session 24 & 25 Victoriæ.

Cap. 14. An Act to grant additional Facilities for depositing Small Savings at Interest with the Security of the Government for the due Repayment thereof. This act enables a depositor of any amount not less than a shilling to deposit his savings in any money-order office which he may withdraw from any other office, and which, while it remains, receives an interest of 2½ per cent per annum.

Cap. 47. To facilitate the Construction and Improvement of Harbors, by authorizing Loans to Harbor Authorities, to abolish Passing Tolls, and for other purposes. The chief purposes are to abolish tolls, unless facilities are afforded to equalize the dues on foreign ships with those of British, and to abolish passing tolls.

Cap. 55. To amend the Laws regarding the Removal of the Poor, and the Contribution of Parishes to the common Funds in Unions. Reduces the power of removing poor persons to a residence of three years without receiving parish relief. The contribution of parishes to the common fund is to be computed on the rental, and not on the payment to its own poor. A similar act was passed for Ireland. (Cap. 76.)

Cap. 109. To amend the Laws relating to Fisheries of Salmon in England. This insures the preservation of salmon in English rivers by many detailed precautions.

Cap. 117. To place the Employment of Women, young Persons, Youths, and Children in Lace Factories under the Regulation of the Factory Acts.

Cap. 133. To amend the Law relating to Agricultural Drainage. Enables parties to join in effecting drainage that could not be accomplished by individuals.

Cap. 134. To amend the Law relating to Bankruptcy and Insolvency. Abolishes the courts of the commissioners of bankruptcy and the court of insolvency, and enacts the course of procedure before new judicatures.

Revenue, 70,283,674*l.*; expenditure—army, 18,013,896*l.*; navy, 13,331,668*l.*; for all objects, 72,792,059*l.*; debt, 818,048,896*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 125,102,814*l.*; total exports, 159,632,498*l.*; imports, 217,485,024*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 12,707; to United States, 49,764; to Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 28,738; to all other places, 5561: total, 91,770.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 6,331,225*l.*: total imported, 12,163,937*l.*; exported, 11,238,372*l.*

Railway traffic: miles open, 10,869; number of passengers, 173,773,218; traffic receipts, 28,565,355*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,019,539.

1862.

Jan. 5. Garibaldi accepted the presidency of the Rifle Association of Genoa, and advised the members, in a letter, "to hasten to prepare themselves to take up arms, for the moment was approaching when they would have to give fresh proofs of their valor."

Feb. 23. The Greek insurgents, who had for some time held possession of Nauplia, capitulated to the Greek government.

March 1. The Earl of Elgin arrived at Calcutta to succeed Earl Canning as Governor-General of India.

March 4. President Lincoln, in a message to the Federal Congress, proposed a plan for co-operation with the Slave States for the gradual emancipation of slaves by means of pecuniary compensation. It was approved of by the House of Representatives on March 10, by 88 votes to 31, and by the Senate, on April 3, by 32 votes to 10.

March 8. The Merrimac, Confederate iron-clad war-steamer, attacked the Federal fleet at Newport News, and disabled and sunk several vessels. The Monitor, Federal iron-clad steamer, arrived in the evening, and on the following day maintained a close fight with the Merrimac for several hours, the contest ending in a drawn battle.

March 9. A meeting of 300 Italian delegates held at Genoa, at which Garibaldi presided. On the 12th the provisional committee received a warning from the government to be calmer in tone, or the authorities might find it necessary to suppress the association.

March 21. Garibaldi received at Milan with enthusiastic cries of "Rome and Venice."

March 25. The pope pronounced an allocution in favor of the temporal power of the papacy. At the same time the canonization commenced of twenty-three martyrs, who had been put to death in the Philippine Islands in the sixteenth century. It lasted till June 8th, and was attended by upward of 200 prelates and about 6000 other ecclesiastics.

March 25. The Italian government ordered the amalgamation of the southern army, consisting principally of Garibaldi's volunteers, with the regular troops.

March 27. The Prince of Wales arrived at Cairo. He subsequently visited Jerusalem and other places in the Holy Land.

April 6. Battle between the Federals and Confederates at Pittsburg Landing.

May 3. The Tae-ping rebels in China defeated with great loss. On the 21st Ningpo was taken by the Imperialists.

May 25. The Federal American troops, under General Banks, defeated at Winchester by the Confederates, who, however, had to abandon Corinth on the 29th.

June 19. The Federal House of Representatives passed a bill confiscating the slaves of rebels.

July 1. Marriage of the Princess Alice to Prince Louis of Hesse-Darmstadt.

July 10. Freedom of the city of London presented to Mr. Peabody, for his munificent gift of £150,000 for the benefit of the poor of London.

Aug. 3. A proclamation issued by Garibaldi, addressed to the young men in his army, exhorted them to be ready for an approaching combat against "arrogant foreign oppressors." A proclamation from Victor Emmanuel followed, warning the young men of Italy against being led into a dangerous and disloyal course of action by illusions, "forgetful of the duty of gratitude due to our best allies."

Aug. 20. Garibaldi took possession of the town of Catania, in Sicily. On the 21st the Italian government proclaimed Sicily in a state of siege.

Aug. 25. Garibaldi landed in Calabria. The royal troops were marched against him, and on the 29th, after a skirmish at Aspromonte, in which he and his son Menotti were wounded, both were taken prisoners and conveyed to Spezia.

Aug. 30. The Federal American army under General Pope defeated a second time at Bull Run by the Confederates. General Pope retired, and took up a position on Arlington Heights, near Washington.

Sept. 8. At this date, in 24 poor-law unions in the cotton districts, there were 140,165 persons receiving out-door relief, at a cost of 7922*l.* per week. The pauperism in these districts amounted to 7.3 per cent of the entire population.

Sept. 17. The Confederate army defeated by General McClellan at Antietam, after several previous encounters in which it had been worsted, and forced to evacuate Maryland, into which it had advanced.

Sept. 22. President Lincoln issued a proclamation declaring all slaves to be free after Jan. 1, 1863, whose owners may be in insurrection against the Federal government at that date.

Oct. 5. Riot in Hyde Park between the adherents of the pope and the sympathizers with Garibaldi. Several persons were severely injured.

Oct. 6. The King of Italy publishes a decree of amnesty for Garibaldi and his associates in the recent rising, except such as had deserted from the royal army.

Oct. 13. The Prussian representative chamber closed by the king in consequence of its refusal to vote a large estimate for military expenditure proposed by the military

Oct. 23. The Tae-pings, in China, driven out of Kah-sing by the imperialists.

Oct. 24. Peaceful revolution in Greece. King Otho had to quit the kingdom, and a provisional government was appointed.

Nov. 7. The financial estimates of Austria for 1863 were laid before the Chamber of Deputies, thus practically acknowledging the right of the representatives of the people to control the finances of the empire.

Nov. 9. An address sent to the pope, signed by 8943 members of the Italian clergy, praying him to give up Rome as the capital of the new kingdom, and to restore peace to Italy.

Nov. 23. Prince Alfred proclaimed King of Greece at Athens, but the choice declined by the British government, as all the protecting powers had agreed that none of their families should accept the crown. He received 230,000 votes on Feb. 3, 1863.

Dec. 20. From this date the distress in the cotton districts began slowly to decrease. Up to this time 407,830*l.* had been raised for its relief by the Central Relief Fund, and 236,926*l.* by the London Mansion House Fund. The number of persons on the relief books was 275,000 at the time.

LEGISLATION. Session 25 & 26 Victoriæ.

Cap. 8. To prevent the Employment of Women and Children during the Night in certain Operations connected with bleaching by the open-air Process. They are not to be employed in any of the operations of dyeing, bleaching, or finishing, between eight in the evening and six in the morning, of yarn or cotton cloth, silk, wool, or flax, or any mixture of them, in any building where steam, water, or other mechanical power is used.

Cap. 18. To amend the Law as to Whipping of Juvenile or other Offenders. The number of strokes is to be specified, and if the offender be not more than fourteen years old, they are not to exceed twelve, to be inflicted with a birch rod. In Scotland no one above sixteen is to be whipped for theft or offences against property.

Cap. 40. To carry into effect the Treaty between her Majesty and the United States of America for the Suppression of the African Slave Trade. A mutual right of search is given within certain limits, the slaves captured are to be freed, mixed courts of justice are to be appointed, the captains and crews of condemned vessels are to be given up to the government to which they belong, as also any other subjects found on board.

Cap. 43. To provide for the Education and Maintenance of Paupers' Children in certain Schools and Institutions. Guardians are empowered to send children from the union to any properly certified school, and to pay for them; but no child to be sent without the consent of its parent, unless it has been deserted or is an orphan, and no child to be kept against its will beyond the age of fourteen.

Cap. 53. To facilitate the Proof of Title to and the Conveyance of Real Estate. This act is almost entirely professional, but it establishes a registry, and the registration is a warranty of the title, except in cases of fraud.

Cap. 61. For the better Management of Highways in England. This long act gives permission to districts to form a board for the management of the road, and to levy a rate on the occupiers.

Cap. 66. For the safe-keeping of Petroleum. Not more than forty gallons may be kept within fifty yards of a dwelling-house without a license. The penalty for transgressing the law is 20*l.* a day.

Cap. 68. For amending the Law relating to Copyright in Works of the Fine Arts, and for repressing the commission of Fraud in the Production and Sale of such Works. The act mainly aims at repressing the reproduction of such works by means of photography, in the violation of the rights of the possessors of the originals.

Cap. 79. To amend the Laws relating to Coal Mines. No new mine is to be opened from the passing of this act, and no existing mine to be worked after Jan. 1, 1865, with less than two shafts, well separated by natural strata.

Cap. 86. To amend the Law relating to Fraudulent Marking of Merchandise. Every person selling merchandise with forged trade-marks is liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* or less than 10*s.* on each article so sold, beside the value of the article itself.

Cap. 93. For Embanking the North Side of the river Thames from Westminster Bridge to Blackfriars Bridge, and for making new Streets in and near thereto. This marks the commencement of the great improvements that have been made and are making on the banks of the Thames.

Cap. 114. For the Prevention of Poaching. Constables or police officers are empowered to search any person suspected of coming from any land where he may have been in quest of game, or of having game in his possession, or of having a gun or nets for the taking of game. If any such are found, the offender to be taken before justices, where he may be fined 5*l.*, with the forfeiture of the game or such instruments for procuring game as may be found in his possession.

Revenue, 69,674,479*l.*; expenditure—army (including ordnance), 16,854,290*l.*; navy, 12,598,042*l.*; for all purposes, 72,792,059*l.* In this year commenced an expenditure for fortifications which is not included, as it was provided for by the creation of terminable annuities.

Exports of British and Irish produce, 123,992,264*l.*; total of exports, 166,168,134*l.*

Imports, 225,716,976*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 15,522; to the United States, 58,706; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 41,843; to other places, 5146: total, 121,214.

Gold imported from Australia, 6,704,753*l.*; total imported, 19,903,704*l.*; exported, 16,011,963*l.*

Railway traffic: miles open, 11,551; number of passengers, 180,485,727; traffic receipts, 29,128,558*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,084,651.

1863.

Jan. 9. The British legation at Rio Janeiro having demanded in vain an indemnity for the plunder of a British vessel wrecked on the coast of Brazil, and also an apology for the imprisonment of some naval officers who were taken not in uniform, and accused of a riot, caused five Brazilian merchant vessels to be seized. They were given up on an undertaking to pay the indemnity to be settled in London; the other question was referred to the arbitration of the King of the Belgians.

Jan. 14. The Prussian Chambers opened their session at Berlin. The king's message stated that their sanction would be asked for expenses incurred without their previous sanction, and hoped that a mutual good understanding might be arrived at. On the 22d an address was prepared and carried after several days' debate, complaining that "the ministers had carried on the administration against the constitution, and without a legal budget." During the debate the prime minister, Count von Bismarck, said, "The Prussian ministry is quite different from the English. The latter, call it what you will, is only the ministry of the parliament, but we are the ministers of the king."

Jan. 22. The insurrection in Poland commenced, in consequence, it is said, of its being discovered that the conscription taking place in Warsaw, instead of being carried out on the usual plan, was used to remove all the young men of education suspected of liberal tendencies. The young men withdrew to the woods, provided themselves with arms, and prepared for resistance. The insurrection rapidly spread: detached parties of Russian soldiers were killed; the railways were broken up, the telegraph wires cut; and dividing themselves into small parties, the insurgents were frequently successful in defeating detachments of Russian troops sent against them.

Feb. 3. The King of Prussia replied to the address of the lower chamber, refusing to acknowledge the right of the people to control the financial expenditure through their representatives.

March 7. The Princess Alexandra landed at Gravesend, and was married to the Prince of Wales on the 10th.

March 18. Langiewicz, the principal leader of the Polish insurgents, who had been proclaimed dictator on the 10th, after two successful encounters with the Russians on the 16th and 17th, was attacked by them at Zagoscie, and defeated after a desperate contest. The insurgent force was dispersed, but Langiewicz and some of his adherents escaped across the Austrian frontier into Galicia. They were there disarmed and imprisoned at Cracow.

March 18. Prince William George of Denmark was elected King of Greece by the national assembly, and proclaimed under the title of George the First, France and England approving of the choice.

March 31. The French entered Puebla after a bombardment of four days. The citadel, with the whole town, surrendered on May 17.

April 3. The Sultan of Turkey left Constantinople on a visit to Egypt. He arrived at Alexandria on the 8th, when he declared that he came but as a guest, but he had previously declared his disapproval at the large grant of land to the Suez Canal Company, and had forbidden forced labor.

April 7. Great Britain, France, and Austria sent separate notes to St. Petersburg, remonstrating against the cruelties practised by Russia in Poland. On the 14th Prince Gortschakoff replied, ascribing the revolt to the revolutionary principles with which Europe was infested, and that in England was organized the conspiracy which was armed abroad to keep up disorder in the empire.

April 16. The German Federal Diet debated on the ordinance of the King of Denmark of March 30, by which he gave a constitution to all his European dominions exclusive of the members of the confederation, and by which Holstein was to have an independent army, and to share with the rest of the kingdom in the general burdens. The diet would not recognize it, and protested against the assumption of the king that the diet had no right to interfere in the question of the duchies.

April 22. Prince Christian of Denmark announced that he accepted the crown of Greece for his son George; and the King of Denmark informed the Rigsraad that the ordinance of March 30 had been opposed by the great powers of Germany, but that he should persist in his adoption of it.

April 22. An earthquake at Rhodes by which 2000 houses were destroyed, killing and injuring some thousands of its inhabitants.

May 12. Radama, King of Madagascar, assassinated, and his widow proclaimed queen.

May 26. Herat captured by Dost Mohammed Khan of Afghanistan, who died on June 9, after which the succession was contested by his sons.

June 10. General Forey with the French army entered the city of Mexico; they were received, as was stated, with great enthusiasm. The president, Juarez, retired to San Juan Potosi.

June 18. The King of the Belgians, by his award in the case of the imprisonment of the British naval officers, declared that there was no intentional offence given by the Brazilians.

June 24. After a trial in the court of exchequer lasting three days, the case of the Alexandria, seized on behalf of the United States for an infringement of the Foreign Enlistment Acts, was decided in favor of the defendants and against the seizure.

July 1, 2, and 3. Battle of Gettysburg, in which the Confederates failed to defeat the Federals, and were forced to retire on the 4th. On the same day Fort Hudson, on the Mississippi, after a long siege, was surrendered to the Federals.

July 15. An insurrection broke out in New Zealand, near Auckland. On the 17th, General Cameron had an action with a large force of the natives, who, availing themselves of rifle-pits, fought desperately, but were defeated with great loss. On the 22d the native settlement of Kiri-Kiri was attacked, and taken after a vigorous defence. From this time the natives would not meet the British in the field, but through July and August continued to ravage the province. The colonists rose in their own defence, and within a few weeks had 4000 volunteers and militia under arms.

July 20. Mexico proclaimed as an empire by an assembly of notables, with the Archduke Maximilian as emperor. A deputation was appointed to wait on him and tender the crown.

Aug. 15. In September, 1862, Mr. Richardson had been murdered in Japan by the attendants of the Prince of Satsuma, and as no satisfaction could be obtained from any of the Japanese authorities, Admiral Kuper had been sent with a British squadron to reduce the prince's fortified port of Kagosima. On this day the bombardment commenced, which was vigorously replied to; but in two days the fort, the palace, the arsenal, and a great part of the town, were reduced to ruins, and three steam-vessels destroyed. The British loss was two captains and eleven seamen killed, and thirty-nine wounded.

Aug. 17. The Frankfort Congress of Princes assembled at the desire of the Emperor of Austria to consider of a plan for the reformation of the Federal Constitution of Germany. Prussia declined to appear. On Sept. 1 it was terminated without any result, although the emperor hoped that a second congress would be more satisfactory.

Sept. 3. A body of 700 Poles under Lelewel attacked a much superior force of the Russian army, who were compelled to retreat, although the Poles had 100 men killed. On the 6th another battle was fought, Lelewel was killed, and the insurgents, after a gallant defence, had to fly for refuge into Galicia.

Sept. 7. Prince Gortschakoff rejected the proposal of France for a conference respecting Poland, the welfare of which, he said, was, in common with all his other dominions, the object of the czar's devoted solicitude.

Sept. 23. The Ionian Assembly voted in favor ofuniting themselves to Greece, thanked Queen Victoria for surrendering the protectorship and for the benefits conferred, and the other powers also for their ready concurrence in the surrender, but declined the pecuniary stipulations.

Oct. 30. The King of Greece, after having visited France and England, arrived at Athens, where he was enthusiastically received.

Nov. 4. The Emperor of the French addressed the sovereigns of Europe, proposing a general congress for the purpose of regulating the questions now agitating their peoples, and thus avoiding war. It was declined on the part of England by Earl Russell as leading to no practically good result; and by Austria, unless with a stipulation that there should be no territorial alterations adopted. The project was then abandoned. On the 5th the French chambers were opened by the emperor, who announced the sending of the proposal for a congress, congratulated them on the prosperity of the country, and on the success of the armies in Mexico and Cochin China, and alluded to the distressing position of Poland.

Nov. 6. Czaschkowski, who had maintained a desultory war against the Russians in the government of Radom in Poland, was defeated on this day, his force dispersed, and himself taken prisoner; but he died of his wounds within a few days.

Nov. 15. Frederick VI., King of Denmark, died, aged 55, and was succeeded by Christian IX., the father of the Princess of Wales and of the King of Greece, in virtue of a treaty signed in May, 1852, by which the Princess Christiana and the Prince of Holstein-Augustenburg resigned their claims in his favor for a pecuniary consideration, in order to avoid a separation of the kingdom. The treaty was signed on behalf of Great Britain, France, Prussia, Austria, and Russia. On the 17th the young Duke of Holstein-Augustenburg claimed the duchy, announcing that his father, who was still alive, could not sell his rights, and his claim was admitted by the Frankfort Diet, but his representative was not admitted to sit.

Dec. 8. At Santiago, in Chili, on the last evening of a long festival, in honor of the Immaculate Conception, in the Church de la Compania (a Jesuit church), some of the muslin drapery of the image of the virgin caught fire. The interior of the church, with the roof, was chiefly of wood; there was but one available exit, and this was at once rendered impassable by the rushing crowd who choked the passage, and in fifteen minutes 2000 corpses, mostly females, were all that remained of the congregation inclosed within that fiery furnace. Some of the priests subsequently preached that all who there died were martyrs, but the government forbade any building to be erected on the site.

Dec 24. The Saxon and Hanoverian troops, acting under the orders of the Frankfort Diet, marched into Altona, and took possession of it, "without prejudice to the only temporarily suspended rights of the sovereign." The Danish forces withdrew without offering any opposition.

LEGISLATION. Session 26 & 27 Victoriæ.

Cap. 13. For the Protection of certain Gardens in Ornamental Grounds in Cities and Boroughs. Where land has been set apart for the use of the public, and where trustees or other authorities neglect to keep it in proper order, this act enables the governing corporations of the place to take possession, and a rate may be imposed for its due maintenance.

Cap. 14. To amend the Law relating to Post-Office Banks. This act provides that money deposited in the post-office savings bank at one place may be transferred at the desire of the depositor, so as to be paid at any other savings bank, and also for the transference of the deposits of the former savings banks to the post-office savings banks.

Cap. 27. To amend the Law relating to Marriages in Ireland. The details of the forms to be observed in the civil celebration and registration of Protestant marriages in Ireland. Cap. 90 does the same for Roman Catholic marriages; and cap. 11 provides for the establishment of a registrar-general and assistants, for the registration of births and deaths in Ireland.

Cap. 41. To amend the Law respecting the Liability of Innkeepers, and to prevent certain Frauds upon them. No innkeeper is to be liable to any guest for the loss of property, or injury to goods (except horses or other live animals, or carriages) to a greater amount than 30*l.*, unless expressly deposited with the said innkeeper.

Cap. 44. For the further Security of the Persons of her Majesty's Subjects from Personal Violence. In awarding punishments for robbery committed with violence, the court may order any convicted male offender, in addition to other punishment, to be twice or thrice privately whipped; if under 16 a birch rod to be used, and the strokes not to exceed twenty-five; if above that age the strokes not to exceed fifty, and the exact number, with the instrument to be used, to be stated in the sentence.

Cap. 52. To further extend and make compulsory the practice of Vaccination in Ireland. Within six months from the time of birth every child is to be vaccinated, under a penalty of 10*s.* for neglect of the parent or guardian. Registrars are appointed, and the vaccinator is to be paid. A similar act (cap. 108) was passed for Scotland, but the penalty for neglect is here 20*s.*

Cap. 70. To facilitate the execution of Public Works in certain manufacturing districts; to authorize for that purpose advances of Public Money to a limited amount upon Security of Local Rates; and to shorten the period for the adoption of the Local Government Act 1858, in certain cases. Numbers of the laboring and manufacturing classes still remaining out of employment, the loan commissioners are authorized to advance sums not amounting in the whole to more than 1,200,000*l.* to such local boards as may wish thus to effect sanitary or other works of public improvement. No sum advanced to exceed one year's ratable value of the district to be improved.

Cap. 124. For the more effectual Condensation of Muriatic Acid Gas in Alkali Works. All works for the manufacture of alkali are by this act compelled to take measures for condensing and preventing the diffusion of the destructive gas that might escape. Inspectors are appointed to see that effective means are used under penalties of not exceeding 50*l.* for a first offence, and 100*l.* for every subsequent offence. The owner to be proceeded against in the first instance, but if it be proved that the offence was committed without his knowledge, by a servant, he may be proceeded against. No alkali works are to be opened until registered with the inspector.

Revenue, 70,003,501*l.*; expenditure—army, 16,204,790*l.*; navy, 11,370,588*l.*; for all objects, 69,302,008*l.*; debt, 817,559,322*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 146,602,342*l.*; total of exports, 196,902,409*l.*

Imports, 248,919,020*l.*

Emigration— to North American Colonies, 18,083: to the United States, 146,813; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 53,054; to other places, 5808: total, 223,758.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 5,995,368*l.*: total imported, 19,142,665*l.*; exported, 15,303,279*l.*

Railway traffic: miles open, 12,322; number of passengers, 204,699,466: traffic receipts, 31,156,397*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,329,136.

1864.

Jan. 8. The Princess of Wales gave birth to a son, who was baptized on March 10 as Albert Victor Christian Edward.

Jan. 31. The proposal of Austria and Prussia that the troops of the German Confederation should be restricted to the occupation of Holstein, and should not interfere with Schleswig, having been rejected in the diet at Frankort by ten votes to five, the two powers announced that they should take the matter into their own hands, as parties to the treaty of 1852, and they summoned Denmark to annul the constitution by which Schleswig had been incorporated into the kingdom. Denmark applied for time to obtain the sanction of the Rigsraad, which was refused, and Marshal Wrangel, at the head of 70,000 men, summoned General de Aleza to evacuate Schleswig, to which the reply was that he was ordered to defend it.

Feb. 12. The King of Ashantee having made war on the Fantees (an African territory under the protection of the British at Cape Coast), who had refused to give up two fugitives claimed by him, Governor Pine ordered a force to be marched to repel and punish the Ashantees. The wet season set in much earlier than was anticipated, and, without seeing an enemy or firing a shot, the force of above 1200 men, chiefly colored men officered by Europeans, were prostrated by fever. The loss by death, independent of the suffering, was fearful, and the remains of the expedition were ordered to return. The affair gave rise to a sharp discussion in parliament on June 17.

Feb. 25. The four Italians, who were arrested on the previous

Dec. 29, charged with an intention of assassinating the Emperor of the French, were this day tried in Paris. Their names were Greco, Imperatori, Trabuco, and Scaglioni. Greco and Trabuco stated that the money, the explosive bombs, and the weapons had been furnished by Mazzini (who in London denied it). The other two pleaded that they had been drawn into the conspiracy. All were found guilty. Greco and Trabuco were sentenced to transportation; Imperatori and Scaglioni to twenty years' imprisonment.

March 10. Maximilian II., King of Bavaria, died, and was succeeded by his son, Ludwig II.

March 11. At nearly midnight the town of Sheffield and its neighborhood was overwhelmed by the bursting of the large water reservoir at Bradford. Within the space of two or three hours 250 human beings, from the man of eighty to the baby in arms, were drowned in their beds, or in the attempt to escape, or crushed beneath the falling dwellings. The destruction of property was immense.

March 16. The King of Dahomey defeated in an attack on Abeakutah, with a loss of 1000 killed and 2000 taken prisoners.

April 3. Garibaldi landed at Southampton, where he was received with great enthusiasm. On the 11th he made his entry into London, amid an immense crowd, and took up his abode with the Duke of Sutherland at Stafford House.

April 14. The Chincha Islands, of which the guano had been pledged for the security of the Peruvian public debt, seized by a Spanish squadron.

April 18. The Prussians captured Dybböl by assault, after a siege of nearly two months. The Danes in their resistance lost nearly 5000 men, killed, wounded, or taken prisoners; but they succeeded in removing the greater part of their force to the neighboring isle of Alsen, after which the bridge was destroyed. The loss of the Prussians was estimated at 2000 killed and wounded.

April 25. A conference on Danish affairs commenced in London, attended by the representatives of France, Russia, Austria, Prussia, Denmark, Sweden, and the German Confederation. The representatives of Great Britain were the Earl of Clarendon and Earl Russell.

April 27. Three tribes of Caucasians, having been subdued by Russia, commenced leaving the country to the number of 300,000, to take refuge in Turkey. Through the want of means of conveyance to Trebizond, numbers perished on the shores of the Black Sea; others arriving at Trebizond in crowded ships, in greater crowds than were expected, and insufficient means having been provided for their transport to places of permanent settlement, fever and smallpox broke out, and occasioned an enormous loss of life before their removal could be effected.

May 6 to 10. General Grant having advanced to attack General Lee, preparatory to the further advance upon Richmond, the fighting was continued from the Friday till Tuesday, the struggle on the last day having lasted for fourteen hours. General Lee maintained his position, but the loss on both sides was terrific. On Thursday, the 12th, the Federals again attacked General Lee at Spottsylvania, where he had taken up a strong position. Here the Federals claimed the advantage, as they captured some cannon and took some prisoners, but the loss of life was great, "the men on both sides falling like grain." On the 20th, having been strongly reinforced, finding he could not dislodge General Lee from his position, General Grant made a flank movement, and gained a position south of the North Anna River, where he was furiously attacked by the Confederates, but maintained his ground.

June 19. The Alabama, a Confederate steamer which had inflicted enormous loss on the Federal commerce, was on this day met, on leaving Cherbourg, by the Federal turret-armed frigate, the Kearsarge. After an engagement lasting for about an hour, the Alabama, in a sinking state, made for the French coast, which she was unable to reach. Captain Semmes, with a portion of the crew, was picked up by an English steam-yacht, and landed at Southampton.

June 25. William, King of Würtemberg, died, aged 83, and was succeeded by his son Charles.

June 25. The London conference on Danish affairs held its last sitting, Denmark and the German powers alike rejecting the proposals of the neutral mediators.

June 26. The Prussians attacked and took the Isle of Alsen.

July 19. Nanking stormed and captured by the Imperialists, aided by a disciplined force under Major Gordon. The two chief leaders of the Tae-pings surrendered to Major Gordon, stipulating that their lives should be spared; but as soon as the Imperialists obtained possession of them they were executed; upon which Major Gordon withdrew from the service.

July 31. At Petersburg, near Richmond, a mine containing seven tons of gunpowder was sprung, a breach was made, and about 500 of the Confederate garrison killed. The Federals then made an assault with 18,000 men, but after a contest of some hours were forced to retire.

Aug. 6. The Maori war in New Zealand brought to a conclusion by the unconditional submission of most of the tribes: the revolt was punished only by the forfeiture of a small portion of their lands.

Aug. 8. The statue of Daniel O'Connell installed in Dublin; on the same day his effigy was burned by the Orangemen in Belfast, and the ashes were buried with mock solemnity on the following day. The Roman Catholics assembled and attacked the procession, and from this day to the 19th the rioting was almost incessant. The two factions fought in large bands. The police were powerless; they were pelted with stones and driven away. Additional policemen and a military force were sent for, but 3000 soldiers and 1000 policemen were unable to suppress the rioting. Chapels and houses were wrecked; and the windows were broken throughout whole streets. The military had to fire on the crowd, and many of the ringleaders on both sides were captured. Before the riots were ended there were nine persons killed, and 176 wounded were attended to in the general hospital, besides many who received surgical assistance in their own houses.

Sept. 4. General Sherman, the commander of the Federal Army of the Potomac, having beaten the Confederates in several encounters, had at length cut off the communications of General Hood with the South; and on this day took possession of Atlanta in Georgia, which General Hood had felt himself compelled to abandon. This was a most serious loss to the Confederates, as it contained the arsenals, the foundries, and the manufactories, which had chiefly supplied the Confederate armies during the contest. General Hood retreated toward Virginia.

Sept. 15. A treaty concluded between France and Italy, by which it was agreed that the French troops should be withdrawn from Rome within two years, the Italian government undertaking to protect the pope against any attacks from without, and that Florence should be the seat of the Italian government. On this arrangement becoming known at Turin, a riot broke out, which was promptly quelled by the military, but an immediate change of ministry was the consequence.

Oct. 30. A treaty of peace between Denmark, Prussia, and Austria, signed at Vienna, by which Denmark consented to surrender the duchies to the two powers, to pay a large sum of money, and to submit to a rectification of the frontiers of Jutland.

Nov. 1. A violent cyclone in the Bay of Bengal, which extended along the coast from Calcutta to very near Madras. The waters of the Ganges were driven back by the wind, and submerged a large portion of the Sunderbunds; the island of Saugor was inundated, and 7000 persons out of a population of 8500 were drowned. At Masulipatam the sea broke into the land, along a distance of more than eighty miles, and in some instances penetrated inland for seventeen miles, destroying villages, their inhabitants, crops, and cattle, and filling up the wells. The total loss of life during this terrible night was estimated at not less than from 70,000 to 80,000 souls. On the flood returning the number of bodies of men and animals left behind was so great, that but for the exertions of the English authorities in burying and burning them, and providing food and shelter for the unfortunate survivors, an infectious fever would have followed close on the previous calamity.

Dec. 6. Abraham Lincoln elected President of the United States for a second time and Andrew Johnson elected Vice-President.

Dec. 21. General Sherman, having marched from Atlanta in Georgia to Savannah in South Carolina, took possession of that town without any resistance being made, General Hardee, the commander of the Confederates, retreating, as not being strong enough to resist.

Dec. 24, 25. The Federal fleet attacked Wilmington in North Carolina, which had been the great depot for the blockade-running vessels from the Bahamas. After having ineffectually exploded on the 24th a vessel with 215 tons of gunpowder under the walls of Fort Fisher, the outer fort which guarded the harbor, and bombarding it on the 25th, a party of men were landed to storm it, but they were repulsed with considerable loss, and the fleet retired.

LEGISLATION. Session 27 & 28 Victoriæ.

Cap. 44. To amend the Act relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, 20 & 21 Vict. cap. 85. Where a wife has obtained a protecting order from one magistrate, and the husband or a creditor may have applied for the discharge of such order, the cause may be heard, and the order discharged, by the successor of the magistrate who made the order, should he have died or been removed.

Cap. 47. To amend the Penal Servitude Act. No convict to be sentenced to a less period than five years, and where any previous conviction has taken place, for not less than seven years. Corporal punishment may be inflicted for offences within the prison. Licenses are to be granted in a prescribed form; the holder must report himself within three days to the police of the locality where he intends to reside, and once in every three months afterward the license to be produced whenever called for by a magistrate or police officer. Any constable or police officer may apprehend, without a warrant, any licensed holder reasonably suspected of a breach of the conditions indorsed on the license, and the breach forfeits the license.

Cap. 48. For the extension of the Factory Acts. With some modifications, the provisions of previous acts are extended to the manufacture of earthenware (except bricks and tiles, not being ornamental tiles), lucifer matches, percussion-caps and cartridges, the employments of paper-staining and fustian-cutting.

Cap. 108. To explain the Statutes of her present Majesty for amending the Laws relating to the Removal of the Poor. The period of settlement within which a person likely to become chargeable to the parish or union may be removed, is altered from five years to three.

Cap. 113. To amend the Laws relating to the Conservancy of the River Thames, and for the purposes relating thereto. Six additional conservators are to be elected. The right of taking ballast from the Thames is taken from the Trinity House and given to the conservators. The privileges of the Watermen's Company are restricted, and certificates are to be granted by the conservators to persons above twenty years of age, who upon examination are found capable of navigating lighters or steamboats. Barges navigated from above Teddington Lock, and not descending below London Bridge, are exempt from having a licensed waterman on board. The conservators are empowered to regulate the tolls for steamboats, and to provide rules for fishing-boats as to their nets and lines. No gravel, stones, mud, or earth, or other refuse may be thrown, or so placed as to be carried by floods, into the Thames, nor any substance produced in making gas, nor any other offensive matter, is to flow into the Thames, under a penalty not exceeding 20*l.* for each offence.

Cap. 116. For making provision for distributing the Charge of Relief of certain classes of Poor Persons over the whole of the Metropolis. The expense of providing a refuge for the houseless poor is by this act ordered to be divided in certain proportions among all the unions and parishes within the metropolitan district; and proper wards, or places of reception, are to be provided, to be approved of by the poor-law board, at the mutual expense.

Cap. 117. To render permissive the use of the Metric System of Weights and Measures. Legalizes contracts made under the French decimal system.

Revenue, 70,208,964*l.*; expenditure — army, 14,723,976*l.*; navy, 10,821,596*l.*; for all objects, 67,056,286*l.*; national debt, 813,230,-152*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 160,449,053*l.*; total of exports, 212,619,614*l.*

Imports, 274,952,172*l.*

Emigration—to North American Colonies, 12,721; to United States, 147,042; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 40,942; to all other places, 8195: total, 208,900.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 2,656,971*l.*: total imported, 16,900,951*l.*; exported, 13,279,739*l.*

Railway traffic: miles open, 12,789; number of passengers, 229,-348,664; traffic receipts, 33,911,547*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,198,129.

1865.

Jan. 13. On this day the attack on Fort Fisher, the advanced fort of Wilmington Harbor, was renewed, and a bombardment continued until Sunday, the 15th, when the works were stormed, and the garrison, amounting to 1200 men, were compelled to surrender. The resistance was obstinate and the Federal loss severe. Within a day or two of the capture the powder magazine of the fort exploded, and 300 of the Federal troops perished.

Feb. 15. The Emperor of the French opened the session of the legislature with a speech, in which he congratulated them on the increased probability of a continued peace, with its accompanying prosperity; spoke of the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome; promised farther progress in free trade by a removal of the French navigation laws; an extension of the powers of communes and departments to manage their local affairs without the intervention of the state; to give the right of provisional release even in criminal cases, with or without bail; and to suppress altogether personal arrest in civil or commercial matters.

Feb. 17. The Confederates were forced to evacuate Charleston. Preparations had been made for several days preceding; all the wealthy inhabitants had removed; the guns were spiked, military stores destroyed, and the troops, about 14,000, retreated northward The Federals, on entering the town, found about 200 pieces of cannon, and the fortifications uninjured. After they had obtained possession a fire broke out, which destroyed 5000 bales of cotton, and the explosion of a depot occurred, by which several hundred lives were lost.

March 11. A strike of the iron-workers in North Staffordshire against a reduction of wages, rendered necessary by a fall in the price of iron, had taken place. An endeavor was made to obtain the means of resistance by those on strike by allowing the workers in other districts to accept the terms of the masters on condition of subscribing to their support; upon which the ironmasters throughout the kingdom agreed to lock out all the men unless those of North Staffordshire accepted the offered terms. They were refused, and on this day the lock-out commenced. It continued till April 5, when the men of South Staffordshire submitted to the condition of not subscribing, and the works were opened. It was calculated that the total weekly wages amounted to 120,000*l.*, the withdrawal of which occasioned extreme general distress, while the foreign trade was interrupted, and to some extent thrown into other channels.

March 13. The President of Paraguay, F. S. Lopez, addressing his council and deputies, stated that Brazil and the Argentine Confederation, by their armed interference in the domestic affairs of Uruguay and their claims as to the right of navigation on the Paraná and the Paraguay, justified the commencement of hostilities against them. He had been preparing an army and a fleet for some time, and he had fortified Humáyit, on the Paraguay River. Early in April he invaded the province of San Pedro in Brazil, and Corrientes, a state of the Argentine Confederation. As the attack was unexpected, he carried all before him for a time.

March 20. On the appeal of Dr. Colenso, Bishop of Natal, against the sentence of Dr. Grey, the Bishop of Cape Town, who had deposed him from his bishopric, the judicial committee of the privy council decided that the Bishop of Cape Town had no jurisdiction over the Bishop of Natal, and had, therefore, no power to remove him from his office, and that the proceedings against Dr. Colenso were null and void in law.

April 2. The Federals under General Grant having broken through the Confederate defences around Petersburg, General Lee evacuated both Petersburg and Richmond, retreating northward toward Lynchburg. Thus ended a siege which, with some interruptions, had lasted for three years. On the 9th, General Lee, with his army, surrendered to General Grant.

April 14. President Lincoln was shot through the head by an assassin while sitting in his private box in the theatre at Washington. The murderer leaped upon the stage, exclaiming, "Sic semper tyrannis," and succeeded for the time in making his escape. President Lincoln died early on the following morning. On the same evening a murderous attack was made on Mr. Seward in his own house, the assassin stabbing him in several places, killing one of his servants, and fracturing the skull of Mr. Frederick Seward, who endeavored to save his father. Andrew Johnson, the vice-president, succeeded to Mr. Lincoln's office.

April 26. Wilkes Booth, the assassin of President Lincoln, having been tracked to a barn near Port Royal, on the Rappahannock, Maryland, was summoned to surrender by a troop of horse; he refused, fired at the sergeant of the troop, who returned the fire, and shot him through the head, of which wound he died in about three hours. His companion, named Harrold, was taken prisoner.

May 1. Addresses of condolence for and of horror at the crime of the assassination of President Lincoln voted in the Houses of Lords and Commons. On the immediately following days similar addresses were voted in public meetings in every considerable town in the United Kingdom.

May 10. Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States, with his wife, sister, brother, and some members of his staff, captured at Irwinsville, in Georgia, by a detachment of Federal cavalry. The troops were divided into two parties, the more effectually to surround the place and prevent the escape of Davis; but when meeting they mistook each other for hostile troops, and before the mistake was rectified two men were killed and several wounded. Mr. Davis was placed in close confinement.

May 22. President Johnson issued a proclamation for opening the blockaded ports of the United States from and after July 1st, except those in the State of Texas; and on June 2d Earl Russell, in a letter to the admiralty board, announced that the Confederates would no longer be recognized as belligerents in British ports.

June 11. War having been declared against Paraguay by Brazil and the Argentine Confederation, an army and a fleet had been dispatched to repel the attack of the Paraguayans, and to carry the war into their own country. The fleet ascended the Paraná river, and on this day were attacked by the Paraguayan steamers. They were repulsed, five out of eight were destroyed, and five heavily-armed gunboats were taken.

June 17. The Prussian parliament was prorogued. During the sitting the financial and military proposals of the government had been rejected, and in dismissing them, the minister, Von Bismarck, accused them of placing difficulties in the way of the ministry, which were detrimental to the welfare of the country; told them that the government would be carried on in the way indicated by itself, and trusted that ultimately the house and the nation would approve and thank the king for the course pursued. The president of the house, Von Grabow, addressing the assembled representatives, said that the effort to transform a constitutional government into an absolute police and military despotism had been carried to the utmost limit, and would be wrecked on the loyalty of the people, manifested by their choice of constitutional representatives.

July 7. Mrs. Surratt, Messrs. Payne, Azteroth, and Harrold were hung at New York, after a trial before a court-martial which lasted for many days, as guilty accomplices and conspirators with Booth in the murder of the late President Lincoln.

July 22. Instructions were issued by the privy council for taking precautions against the introduction of cholera at the seaports. Hospitals were formed at several of them, to which seamen suffering from the disorder might be immediately removed on their arrival.

Aug. 2. An order was issued by the privy council, including regulations for guarding against the cattle plague, which had begun to spread rapidly and fatally, in consequence of which another order was issued on the 11th, commanding the destruction of infected beasts, and imposing a penalty of 20*l.* for infractions of the regulations. This was followed by other orders appointing inspectors at the ports to examine foreign cattle, and in country districts, to insure the carrying out of the orders in council. On September 22d, in consequence of the plague having extended widely to sheep, a new order was issued, by which the previous orders were made to apply to all infected animals, the word animal to include "any cow, heifer, bull, bullock, ox, calf, sheep, lamb, goat, or swine." In October a government commission was appointed to investigate the cause and the means of repressing the disease.

August 11. An insurrection of the negroes in Jamaica broke out in the parish of St. Thomas-in-the-East, near Morant Bay. The outbreak was accompanied by some atrocious murders, burning of property, and plunder. Military force was rapidly forwarded. Governor Eyre took very decided steps for its repression, and the insurrection was extinguished, but accompanied by some circumstances that excited much discussion in England. The negro troops behaved with great faithfulness and courage.

Aug. 16. A navigation treaty with Prussia was signed.

Aug. 26. Austria and Prussia communicate to the Diet at Frankfort the results of the interview at Gastein: they were—that the Duke of Augustenburg-Holstein had no right to the duchies of Schleswig-Holstein; that the King of Denmark was the legal possessor; and that he had resigned his claim to the two powers by the Treaty of Vienna. They would therefore hold them jointly for the present.

Aug. 29. The French fleet arrived at Portsmouth in return for the visit of the English fleet to Cherbourg, and the officers were magnificently entertained by the English officers and the mayor and corporation of the town.

Sept. 2. A deputation of upward of 2000 inhabitants of Schleswig-Holstein visited Copenhagen, and were received with great enthusiasm by the Danes.

Sept. 15. The Dublin police took possession of the office of the "Irish People" newspaper, and seized the persons found on the premises, charged with being members of the Fenian Brotherhood, and engaged in treasonable attempts against the government. On the same day numerous arrests were made in Cork, the persons arrested being charged with the like offence; but in their cases bail was taken for their appearance at a subsequent investigation, while at Dublin the persons charged were remanded to prison till another hearing. Other arrests followed, and on September 20th some persons were apprehended in Manchester and Sheffield, and conveyed to Dublin charged with complicity in the conspiracy. On November 10th Stephens, alias Power, the reputed chief-centre for Ireland, was apprehended, examined, and committed for trial.

Sept. 21. Valparaiso and other ports of Chili blockaded by a Spanish fleet under Admiral Pareja, upon the refusal of the Chilian government to consent to the claims of the Spanish government, on a summons of only four days; the said claims having been previously arranged by the Spanish ambassador, but who had been withdrawn and his arrangements repudiated.

Oct. 18. Viscount Palmerston, first lord of the treasury, died, aged 81. His lordship had been at the head of the cabinet from February, 1855, with the exception of the short interval of the Derby-Disraeli ministry in 1858, until his death. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. Earl Russell was his successor as chief of the cabinet.

Nov. 6. The Shenandoah, Confederate frigate, which had been active and successful in inflicting damage on the commercial vessels of the United States, arrived in the Mersey, and was surrendered to the British government on the 9th. The captain and crew having been set at large, the ship was delivered over to the consul of the United States.

Nov. 9. The Irish International Exhibition, which the Prince of Wales had opened, was closed on this day.

Nov. 23. Stephens, the head centre of the Fenians, who had been committed for trial to Richmond jail, made his escape. On the 28th the trial of the other conspirators commenced in Dublin; and on December 1st Luby, the first tried, was convicted and sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude. Other trials followed with similar results.

LEGISLATION. SESSION 28 & 29 VICTORIÆ.

Cap. 18. For amending the Law of Evidence and Practice on Criminal Trials. In trials for felony or misdemeanor, if evidence on the part of the accused be not called, the accused or his counsel have the right of addressing the jury last. If witnesses are called, and are adverse, it may be proved that they had made other statements previously.

Cap. 75. For facilitating the more Useful Application of Sewage in Great Britain and Ireland. Enables places not governed under the Public Health Act, or the Local Government Act, to form themselves into districts, levy rates, construct works for draining and cleansing, prevent the pollution of streams within their limits, and make contracts for the use of the sewage.

Cap. 79. To provide for the better Distribution of the Charge for the Relief of the Poor in Unions. The burial of the poor by the guardians, and all charges for vaccination and registration fees, are to be charged on the common fund of the union, and not on the parish; and the period of residence required for a settlement is further reduced from three years to one year.

Cap. 83. For further Regulating the Use of Locomotives on Turnpike and other Roads for Agricultural and other Purposes. When a locomotive is passing along any road, one person must precede it on foot, displaying a red flag, to warn drivers of carriages of its approach; it is not to go at a greater rate than four miles an hour along a highway, or than two miles through any town or village; towns of above 5000 inhabitants may regulate the speed and the hours at which locomotives may pass along the highways under their jurisdiction.

Cap. 90. For the Establishment of a Fire Brigade within the Metropolis. Under the Metropolitan Board of Works a fire brigade is established, to be supported by a rate, to which the fire insurance offices also contribute.

Cap. 99. To confer on the County Courts a limited jurisdiction in Equity. To the county courts are given the powers and jurisdiction of the higher chancery courts in suits which do not involve an amount in value above 500*l.* Evidence to be taken by word of mouth, and plaints to be heard in open court.

Revenue, 70,313,437*l.* Expenditure—army, 14,382,672*l.*; navy, 10,898,253*l.*; for all objects, 66,462,207*l.*; national debt. 808,289,398*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce, 165,835,725*l.*; total exports, 218,831,576*l.*

Imports, 271,072,285*l.*

Emigration to North American Colonies, 17,211; to the United States, 147,258; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 37,283; to all other places, 8049: total, 209,801.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 5,051,170*l.*; total imported, 14,485,570*l.*; exported, 8,493,332*l.*

Railway traffic: miles open, 13,289; number of passengers, 251,959,862; traffic receipts, 35,751,655*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,157,884.

1866.

Jan. 2. The Gazette appointment appeared of Sir H. R. Storks, and a commission to inquire into the disturbances in Jamaica and the means taken for their suppression.

Jan. 16. The county and city of Dublin, in consequence of the discovery of quantities of concealed arms, came under the operation of a government proclamation, by which no person was allowed to appear with firearms, and empowering the police to search for arms in houses where they have reason to think they are concealed.

Jan. 23. General Prim, who had headed an abortive insurrection in Spain on the 3d of January, on this day crossed the frontier into Portugal. He had been pursued by several columns of Spanish troops, but all failed either to intercept him or bring him to action.

Jan. 29. Mr. George Peabody, the American merchant, in addition to the 150,000*l.* previously given, makes a second magnificent donation of 100,000*l.* for the relief of the poor in London. The trustees of the former gift had expended 80,000*l.* in erecting dwellings for the poor, in which very superior accommodation was afforded at rents below what they usually paid, but which gave an interest of three per cent on the capital sunk. In four blocks of buildings accommodation had been provided for 850 persons. The queen wrote a letter of thanks to Mr. Peabody, and regretted that he had not deemed it compatible with his position as an American citizen to accept the honors which she would have been glad to bestow.

Feb. 2. The special commission appointed to try the Fenian conspirators in Ireland finished its task this day. Forty-one persons had been tried, either in Dublin or in Cork, and of these, thirty-six had been convicted or pleaded guilty, three were acquitted, and in one case the jury disagreed and were discharged. The sentences were for various terms of penal imprisonment.

Feb. 20. Prince Couza, the Hospodar of the Danubian principalities, deposed, and the throne offered to the Count of Flanders, who at once declined.

March 31. The Spanish fleet, under Admiral Mendez Nunez, in spite of the remonstrances of the European consuls and the commanders of the English, French, and United States vessels, bombarded the unprotected Chilian port of Valparaiso. For seven hours the ships fired upon the town without a shot in opposition. At the end of that time they withdrew, leaving the town in flames. The inhabitants, of whom only three lost their lives, were then at liberty to extinguish the fire, in which they were assisted by the fire-engines and crews of the foreign vessels. The damage done by this useless and barbarous attack was estimated at 20,000 dollars.

April 7. Mr Johnson, the President of the United States, having passed his veto on the Civil Rights Bill, for conferring on the colored population equal rights with the whites, the Senate, by 33 votes to 15, overruled his veto.

April 16. Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, while entering his carriage at St. Petersburg, was shot at by a Russian named Karakosoff. The pistol was fortunately turned aside by a workman named Kommisaroff, who was ennobled for the act; the assassin was seized, and a military commission appointed to try the criminal and investigate the cause of the attempt. It was found that there was a secret society who had been conspiring against the safety of the state: and numerous arrests were made. Karakosoff was hung on the 16th of September; and thirty-four persons were convicted of having belonged to the secret society, of whom one was sentenced to be hung, and the others to imprisonment for life or for definite periods; but the emperor commuted the punishment of death for that of imprisonment, and reduced the terms of imprisonment of the rest.

May 10. The old-established discount house of Gurney, Overend & Co. (limited) suspended payment, with liabilities to the amount of 10,000,000*l.* This was followed on the 11th by the suspension of several other great firms, among them Peto, Betts & Co., the railway contractors, the English Joint-Stock Bank, and a number of minor ones. This was what became known as the Black Friday, and produced a panic which lasted (although the Bank of England discounted securities to the amount of 4,000,000*l.* at advanced rates of discount) until the bank was authorized by the chancellor of the exchequer to increase the issue of bank-notes at a minimum rate of 10 per cent for discount. This to some extent allayed the panic, but the consequences, immediate and remote, were long felt in all the commercial relations of the country.

May 31. An armed party of Fenians crossed the Niagara River from near Buffalo, possessed themselves of an empty mill called Fort Erie, and cut the telegraph wires. As soon as the fact became known, the Canadian volunteers were marched against them, attacked them on the 2d of June, but were not successful in capturing them. In the mean time the government of the United States had given directions to General Grant to employ military force to prevent reinforcements crossing, as it was known a large number of Fenians had assembled on the United States frontier, and this was effectually done. The Canadian force having been strengthened, again advanced on Fort Erie, which the Fenians abandoned, leaving thirty-two men as a picket, who were captured, and six of them were tried by drum-head court-martial and shot. The main body, about 400, in recrossing the Niagara River, were seized by the Federal gunboats, disarmed, and after a few days' confinement, discharged on recognizances to appear when called on. On the 7th of June President Johnson issued a proclamation against the Fenians, forbidding any assistance being given to them; on the previous day General Sweeney, the organizer of the raid, had been arrested at St. Albans; on the 7th, Roberts, the Fenian civil chief, was arrested in New York; and warrants were issued for the arrest of some of the prominent members of the party.

June 5. The proposed conference at Paris abandoned in consequence of the refusal of Austria to assent to the programme for the settlement of disputes without hostilities, she demanding as a previous stipulation that no territorial addition should be made to any of the contending States.

June 15. The Prussian armies enter Saxony and Hanover, after a proclamation of war against Austria, and all states allied with her, had been issued by the King of Prussia. On the 17th one division took possession of Stade, in Hanover, and on the 18th the other entered Dresden.

June 18. Earl Russell's ministry were beaten by a majority of 315 against 304, on the rating clause of the Franchise Bill. On the 26th it was announced to the two houses that they had resigned, and that the Earl of Derby was to form a new ministry.

June 22. A military insurrection broke out in Madrid, but was repressed after 200 of the insurgents had been killed. Order was not restored until the next day with a total loss of 1000 lives, and 1750 prisoners thrown into jail, many of whom were subsequently executed.

June 23. The Italian army, numbering between 80,000 and 90,000 men, crossed the Mincio, advancing against the Austrians; they were met at Custozza, defeated after a battle of many hours, and forced to retreat across the Mincio with great loss.

June 27 and 28. The Austrians were defeated by the Prussians at Nachod, in Bohemia.

July 3. The main army of the Austrians defeated at Sadowa, near Königgrätz, with great loss. On the 4th the Emperor of Austria applied to the Prussians for an armistice, which was refused. He immediately ceded Venice and the dependent Italian territory to the Emperor of the French, and desired his mediation for the conclusion of a peace with all the belligerents.

July 5. The Princess Helena married to his royal highness Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg.

July 7. The shore end of the new Atlantic cable was fixed at Foilhummerum Bay, near Valencia, and paid out for thirty miles to be spliced on to the main cable on board the Great Eastern, lying ready to receive it. On the 15th it was successfully spliced, and the steamer proceeded to deposit the main cable. On the 27th the shore end was safely landed in Newfoundland, messages were sent, and the cable to connect it with the American Continent, about seventy miles, was at once commenced. Messages passed between Queen Victoria and President Johnson on the 29th and 30th.

July 23. A popular meeting in Hyde Park, London, having been forbidden by Sir R. Mayne, an immense crowd gathered in the evening, and, the gates being closed, the railings were torn down and the crowd entered, greatly damaging the flower-beds and shrubberies. Some forty or fifty persons were captured for rioting and assaults on the police, and on the following days were fined or sentenced to short terms of imprisonment by the police magistrate.

July 26. An armistice and preliminaries of peace agreed upon between Austria and Prussia, and on August 2d an armistice between Prussia and Bavaria. A truce was also agreed upon between Austria and Italy on July 25th.

Aug. 2. Peace signed at Prague between Austria and Prussia; it contained also a provision for the cession of Venetia to Italy. On the 30th the treaty was ratified. Austria consented to be entirely excluded from the German confederation, and to pay 20,000,000 Prussian thalers toward the expenses of the war.

Sept. 2. The sunken end of the Atlantic cable of 1865 recovered by the Great Eastern, spliced, and found to be in good working order. Communications were made to Valencia, and eventually was continued on to Newfoundland.

Sept. 6. The King of Prussia announces to the legislature the annexation of Hanover, Hesse-Cassel, Nassau, and Frankfort, with a part of Hesse-Darmstadt, which has also to pay 300,000*l.* toward the expenses of the war. Schleswig-Holstein had been previously appropriated.

Sept. 21. Treaty between Saxony and Prussia signed, by which Saxony enters the Northern Confederation. On the 26th the King and Queen of Saxony returned to Pillnitz.

Oct. 21. After much opposition and a long negotiation, Prince Charles of Hohenzollern, who had been elected Hospodar of the Danubian Provinces, now united under the name of Roumania, was received at Constantinople by the Sultan on this day with distinguished honors; a palace was assigned for his residence, he paid homage, and received the investiture.

Nov. 13. A remarkable shower of meteors occurred, lasting from 11 P.M. to 3 or 4 A.M. of the following morning.

Dec. 3. President Johnson, in his message to Congress, recommended conciliation toward the Southern States, and their readmission into the Union; stated that the differences with Great Britain respecting the Alabama were not settled; that he had caused the prosecution of the Fenians to be abandoned, considering their offence political; adding that strict neutrality must be preserved and raids prevented; that the French had consented to withdraw from Mexico; and that the finances were entirely satisfactory.

Dec. 11. The French troops evacuated Rome according to the convention of September 18th, and the papal standard replaced that of France on the castle of St. Angelo.

LEGISLATION. Session 29 & 30 Victoriæ.

Cap. 19. To amend the Law relating to Parliamentary Oaths. The oath now prescribed only contains a declaration of allegiance to the reigning sovereign, with an engagement to maintain the succession and the rights and liberties of the subject.

Cap. 28. To enable the Public Works Loan Commissioners to make advances toward the erection of Dwellings for the Laboring Classes. Loans may be made for this purpose, with the approval of the treasury commissioners, to any local or other authority invested with town or local government; to any railway, dock, or harbor company, or to a society or association established for the like purpose. Where such bodies are authorized to purchase lands, if not already a corporate body they are to be deemed such for the purposes of this act. A similar act (Cap. 44) was passed for Ireland.

Cap. 32. To amend the Procedure and Powers of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. On a decree for dissolution of marriage, if the husband has no property on which a gross annual payment can be secured, the court may order a weekly or monthly payment.

Cap. 37. To amend an Act of the 54 George III. Cap. 123, to prevent Frauds and Abuses in the Trade of Hops. Heavy fines are imposed for not marking correctly the pockets or bags with the name of the grower, the place where grown, the date, and the weight; for mixing hops of different growths or dates; for packing foreign hops in British marked bags; or for wilfully defacing or altering the marks or symbols on any packages. Vendors, if required, are to give full information from whom the hops were received.

Cap. 65. To enable Her Majesty to declare Gold Coins to be issued from Her Majesty's Colonial Branch Mints as legal tender for Payments. The title explains itself, and the coinage of the Australian mints has been declared a legal tender. A charge for coining may be made.

Cap. 67. For the union of the Colony of Vancouver Island with the Colony of British Columbia. The separate government of Vancouver Island is abolished, and it is to send representatives to the Legislature of British Columbia.

Cap. 69. For the amendment of the Law with respect to the Carriage and Deposit of Dangerous Goods. Nitro-glycerine or glonoine oil, and other substances as may be determined by an order in council, are to be distinctly marked "specially dangerous" on the outside of each package, under heavy penalties for omission; and no warehouse owner or carrier is bound to receive any such package.

Cap. 85. To facilitate the establishment, improvement, and maintenance of Oyster and Mussel Fisheries in Great Britain. Under the sanction of the Board of Trade owners or occupiers of the sea or river shores may lay down an oyster-bed, within prescribed limits, supply it with oysters or spawn from any natural public oyster-bed, which are then to become private property. Within the limits no one to fish except with a line or a net fitted to catch floating fish only.

Cap. 89. For vesting in the Conservators of the River Thames the Conservancy of the Thames and Isis, from Staines in Middlesex to Cricklade in Wiltshire. This act abolishes the powers of the upper navigation commissioners, transfers all their rights and property in locks, canals, etc., to the Thames conservators, to whom five new members were added, and to them is given the power to make regulations for the navigation, to collect tolls, to repair and maintain the banks, weirs, and locks, to prevent the pollution of the water, and to receive payment for water taken within their limits for the supply of the public.

Cap. 90. To amend the Law relating to the Public Health. This important act is divided into four parts. Part I. empowers the formation in any district of a committee for the formation and due management of the sewers, with power to levy a rate for that purpose; to compel persons to drain into the public sewer or to form a cesspool; to furnish the district with water; to take charge of all wells, pumps, or fountains from which the public supply is furnished; and to dispose of the sewerage. Part II. is for the prevention of nuisances arising from overcrowded or ill-ventilated houses; to prevent nuisances from smoke; to disinfect houses where contagious diseases have prevailed; to empower the local authorities to provide a carriage for the conveyance of persons suffering from contagious disease to the hospital or elsewhere (who may not ride in a public conveyance without notice to the driver). Ships in harbor are subjected to the like regulations. Part III. is miscellaneous, and contains a number of regulations for the purpose of securing or procuring cleanliness, a supply of water, and other details. Part IV. extends the act to Ireland, with certain modifications.

Cap. 114. To amend the Public Libraries Act. A library or museum may now be established in any town or parish, without taking proceedings under the former acts. A majority of assents at a meeting duly called being sufficient.

Cap. 122. To make provision for the Improvement, Protection, and Management of Commons near the Metropolis. All commons within the metropolitan district are no longer liable to inclosure; and, providing compensation for pecuniary rights, a scheme may be furnished to the inclosure commissioners for transferring their care to the local authorities or to the Metropolitan Board of Works.

Revenue, 67,812,202*l.* Expenditure—army, 14,569,279*l.*; navy, 10,259,788*l.*; for all objects, 65,914,357*l.*; national debt, 802,842,949*l.*

Exports of English and Irish produce, 188,917,536*l.*; total of exports, 238,905,082*l.*

Imports, 295,290,274*l.*

Emigration—to the North American Colonies, 13,225; to the United States, 161,000; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 24,097; to all other places, 6530: total, 204,882.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 6,839,674*l.*; total imported, 23,509,641*l.*; exported, 12,742,639*l.*

Railways: miles open, 13,854; number of passengers, 274,403,895; traffic receipts, 38,164,354*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,111,009.

1867.

Feb. 11. Alarm of an attempt of the Fenians to attack the Castle of Chester. The plot had been disclosed by an accomplice, and prompt measures were taken for its defeat, which were effectual. Some 1400 or 1500 suspected persons assembled in the streets of Chester, but the swearing in of special constables, and the arrival of 500 of the Scotch Fusileers compelled them to disperse in scattered groups, without disturbing the public peace.

Feb. 13. On this day another party of Fenians, about 800 in number, assembled at Cahirciveen, in the county of Kerry. They sacked a coast-guard station at Kells, seized the arms, and shot a mounted policeman bearing dispatches, robbing him of his horse and arms. They then cut the telegraph wires, interrupting the messages by the Atlantic cable for about five hours, by which time they were restored. Troops were immediately sent from Cork to Killarney, and on the 14th the insurgents withdrew into the Toomes Mountains by the Gap of Dunlo, whither they were pursued by a strong military force on the 15th. A large number of arrests was made in the next few days, at Dublin and elsewhere, of persons coming by sea, chiefly from the United States.

Feb. 17. The first ship, the Primo, a vessel of eighty tons burden, passed through the Suez Canal, and by a temporary freshwater canal, from the Mediterranean into the Red Sea.

Feb. 24. The first parliament of the North German Confederation was opened at Berlin.

March 5. The Fenians again commenced a rising in several parts of Ireland. The mail-train from Cork to Dublin was sent off the line, and the telegraph wires were cut, destroying the communication with all Munster. The government had been informed of the intention, and were fully prepared. At Tallaght, near Dublin, a party of twelve policemen met about 200 Fenians, and summoned them to surrender, but they fired on the police, who returned the fire, wounding five, and ultimately capturing eighty-three. At Drogheda 1000 Fenians had a combat with the police for the possession of the market-house, and here forty prisoners were taken. At Kilmallock a party attacked the police-station, which was defended; three of the assailants were killed, and fourteen taken prisoners. Dromore police-barrack was burned down, a coast-guard station near Kilrush was plundered of the arms, as also were the police-barracks and several houses at Holy Cross, by different parties of Fenians.

March 23. A secret treaty was laid before the different legislatures, between Prussia and the Southern States of Germany, by which the military contingents of Bavaria, Würtemberg, Baden, etc., are placed at the disposal of Prussia, thus, in fact, incorporating all Germany into one entire empire for defensive military purposes. The treaty had been concluded in the previous July.

April 1. The French great International Exhibition opened in a very incomplete state. By the early part of May it was most effectively completed.

April 10. Commencement of the trial, at the Central Criminal Court, of Colonel Nelson and Lieutenant Brand for the murder of Mr. Gordon, in Jamaica. The charge of the Lord Chief Justice to the grand jury occupied six hours, in which he laid it down as a principle that martial law could not override civil law. The grand jury threw out both the bills of indictment on the following day.

April 27. The trial of General Burke and Patrick Doran, the first two of the Fenians accused of being concerned in the late outbreak, commenced at Dublin. Both were found guilty of high treason on May 1st, and sentenced to be executed on the 29th. The sitting of the commission terminated on May 24th. A number of prisoners had been found guilty of treason-felony, and sentenced to various periods of imprisonment. Doran, after some delay, had his sentence commuted to penal servitude; Burke was left for execution until the 27th, when, in compliance with numerous petitions, his sentence was also commuted.

May 6. A popular demonstration in Hyde Park in favor of reform, which had been at first forbidden by the government, but at the last moment permitted, was held without the slightest disturbance of the public peace.

June 6. Attempt made by a young Pole in Paris to assassinate the Emperor of Russia, while seated in a carriage with his two sons and the Emperor of the French. The pistol burst, blew off the hand of the assassin, without damaging any of the persons in the carriage. He was subsequently tried and sentenced to death, but not executed, in compliance with a desire of the Emperor of Russia.

June 7. The conference for the settlement of the Luxemburg question met in London; it consisted of the representatives of England, Russia, Austria, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, and Prussia. On the 11th the terms were agreed upon: Luxemburg to remain subject to the King of the Netherlands; the fortress to be evacuated by Prussia, and to be demolished as quickly as possible; the neutrality of the whole territory to be guaranteed by the subscribing powers.

June 8. The Emperor of Austria crowned King of Hungary, with great ceremony, swearing to preserve the old Hungarian constitution, which had been a source of contest between the nation and the sovereigns for many years.

June 13. Jefferson Davis, late President of the Southern Confederacy, was admitted to bail at Richmond, United States, and took his departure a few days afterward, for Montreal, in Canada.

June 19. On this day the commission sitting to inquire into the outrages committed against non-union men at Sheffield, were first able to obtain any evidence directly implicating any individual. A man named Hallam, who had been committed to prison for refusing to answer, declared himself willing to disclose all he knew. He then acknowledged the crimes of having been a party to the blowing-up of several places, and to the shooting twice at a man named Linley, who died in consequence, and in whose case a verdict of wilful murder had been found. His evidence was confirmed by a confederate named Crookes, and they said they were hired and paid by one Broadhead, the secretary of the Saw Grinders' Union, and the treasurer of the amalgamated unions. On a subsequent day this man acknowledged the truth of these accusations, and stated that for nineteen years he had been the instigator and the rewarder of most of the offences of rattening and personal outrage committed in Sheffield, but persisted in saying that the unions knew nothing about this; they only knew they were committed, and purposely left the whole management in his hands, and never examined his accounts. These discoveries were made after the announcement that truthful avowal would absolve even the most guilty participators from all personal punishment. On July 8th the investigation closed, and certificates of indemnity were granted to Broadhead, Crookes, and the other witnesses who had made the disclosures.

July 6. The Viceroy of Egypt arrived in London on a visit, and on the 12th the Sultan of Turkey. Both were received by the queen, and entertained with great hospitality by the corporation of London and other public bodies and private persons. The sultan was lodged in Buckingham Palace, the viceroy at Dudley House, the residence of Lord Ward.

July 10. On an invitation to attend the rifle-shooting at Wimbledon, 2000 Belgian volunteers were brought over in the government steamer Serapis, and were warmly welcomed by the British riflemen, the London corporation, etc.

July 17. A grand naval review at Spithead took place, in the presence of the Sultan of Turkey and Viceroy of Egypt, who were received by the queen on board her yacht. She decorated the sultan with the Order of the Garter, but the review was somewhat marred by stormy weather.

Aug. 17. An insurrection broke out in Spain; the provinces of Catalonia and Aragon were entered from France by a few armed men, under Generals Contreras and Pierrad, who were immediately joined by others. General Prim was expected to join them, but did not. Madrid, and nearly the whole of Spain were in a few days declared to be under martial law. It was suppressed with little difficulty.

Aug. 26. The first engine and train passed over the Mont Cenis Railway, the summit elevation being 6700 feet above the sea level. The train was worked on the centre-rail system, and the trip was completely successful.

Sept. 10. The sitting of the North German Parliament was opened with a speech from the King of Prussia, in which a variety of measures were promised to be introduced, most of them tending to a closer unity of the various states.

Sept. 14. Some of the transports sailed from London and Liverpool, conveying stores and ammunition for the Abyssinian expedition, for the purpose of coercing the Emperor Theodore to deliver the British captives. The military force was to be forwarded from India.

Sept. 18. A most daring attack made at Manchester on the police van which was conveying to jail two men, named Kelly and Deasy, charged with being Fenians. Between forty and fifty men had assembled, armed with revolvers and other weapons. They intercepted the van, shot the horses, knocked the driver from his seat, dispersed the few policemen who guarded it, with much difficulty broke it open, and shot the policeman inside, who refused to give up the keys of the separate cells. Ultimately the two Fenians were liberated, and although handcuffed, made their escape, with fifteen other prisoners who were being conveyed to prison. This was about four P.M. Before the following morning William O'Meara Allen, the man who shot the policeman in the van, and Michael Larkin were in custody, charged with wilful murder, and several others charged with riot and murder, who were examined before the magistrates, and remanded. On the 26th the examination was resumed, and on the 5th of October twenty-three were committed for trial. On October 29th a special commission was opened at Manchester, before which W. O'Meara Allen, M. Larkin, W. Gould, T. Maguire, and E. Shore were indicted for the murder of Charles Brett. On November 1st they were all found guilty, and sentenced to death. On November 23d, Allen, Gould, and Larkin were hung. Shore's punishment was commuted, and Maguire was pardoned, as there seemed to have been a mistake as to his identity.

Sept. 23. General Garibaldi was arrested at Sinigaglia, in order to prevent his heading an intended insurrection at Rome, and placed in confinement at Alessandria. A number of persons were also apprehended at Rome as participators in the projected revolt. He was sent, a few days later, to his island of Caprera in a government vessel.

Oct. 20. From the time of the arrest of Garibaldi to this date continual irruptions of insurgents into the papal states were made with varying success; anarchy was prevailing, and it seemed that the Italian government could not prevent the hostilities. France threatened to interfere, and troops were embarked at Toulon; but on the 19th Rattazzi, the Italian minister, resigned, and General Cialdini was nominated in his place. He announced that stringent measures would be adopted. The insurgents, headed by Menotti Garibaldi, withdrew from the papal territories, and the French preparations for intervention were abandoned.

Oct. 28. General Garibaldi having escaped from Caprera, joined the insurgents in attacking the papal troops, and closely approached Rome; the attempt of Victor Emmanuel to form a ministry under Cialdini having likewise failed, although another under General Menabrera had been named, the Emperor of the French had dispatched an expedition from Toulon to support the Pope, and on this day the first division landed at Civita Vecchia. On October 30th a portion of the French troops entered Rome; on the same day a part of the Italian royal army crossed the papal frontier for the purpose of preserving order; and Garibaldi, with his volunteers, retired from the immediate neighborhood of Rome to Monte Rotondo.

Nov. 1. After a trial at Dublin, Colonel John Warren, the first Fenian prisoner indicted at this commission, was found guilty. He had come from the United States, and, with several others, landed near Youghal. He claimed to be a citizen of the United States, but, born in Ireland, the claim was disallowed; and his counsel, by his direction, withdrew. He had other counsel assigned, and was convicted partly on the evidence of an accomplice.

Nov. 3. Garibaldi was attacked by the papal and French troops at Mentana. After a sharp fight his band was scattered, and he fled to Terni, within the Italian territory, where he was arrested by the royal authorities, and, with his two sons, who had also been taken, was placed in confinement.

Nov. 4. A part of the expedition against Abyssinia arrived at Suez from India.

Dec. 13. A daring attempt made to effect the escape of two prisoners, remanded on a charge of having been parties to the murder of Brett, the police constable, at Manchester, by blowing up the wall of the House of Detention in Clerkenwell, London. A barrel of gunpowder was placed against the wall and exploded. About 60 feet of the wall was thrown down between 3 and 4 o'clock P.M., the usual time for exercising the prisoners; but the hour had been changed, and the prisoners were in their cells. The effect, however, was terrible. Six persons were killed, and nearly 50 men, women, and children were more or less injured. Several persons were apprehended on suspicion of having been engaged in the crime. Six were tried at the Criminal Court in April, but only one, named Barrett, was found guilty, and he was hung on May 26th.

LEGISLATION. Session 30 & 31 Victoriæ.

Cap. 3. For the Union of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the government thereof, and for purposes connected therewith. The governments are united into one, under a viceroy, with a general parliament held at Ottawa, now the seat of government. Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick have each a lieutenant-governor, with a provincial legislature.

Cap. 6. For the establishment in the Metropolis of Asylums for the Sick, Insane, and other Classes of the Poor, and of Dispensaries; and for the Distribution over the Metropolis of portions of the Charge for Poor Relief, and for other purposes relating to the Poor Relief in the Metropolis.

Cap. 29. To amend the Law in respect of the Sale and Purchase of Shares in Joint-Stock Banking Companies. Contracts for sale or purchase of such shares are declared to be void, unless the shares to be sold are clearly designated in writing, either by their number or by the name of the holder.

Cap. 35. To remove some Defects in the Administration of the Criminal Law. Persons acquitted, in certain cases may be allowed their costs; persons accused are allowed to summon witnesses, who may have their expenses allowed by the court. Additional powers are given for taking the depositions of persons dangerously ill; and jailers are to bring up persons indicted, without a writ of habeas corpus, upon an order of the court.

Cap. 48. For amending the Law of Auction of Estates. In sales of land by auction it is to be stated in the conditions of sale whether it is to be sold with or without reserve; if it be sold without reserve no one is allowed to bid on behalf of the owner; in sales under orders from the Court of Chancery the practice of opening biddings after a sale is to be discontinued.

Cap. 75. To remove certain Religious Disabilities affecting some of Her Majesty's Subjects, and to amend the Law relating to Oaths of Office. The restriction as to the religion of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland is removed; judicial or corporate officers may attend their places of worship in their official robes without incurring any penalty; and a form of oath is provided to supersede the former ones of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration.

Cap. 102. Further to amend the Laws relating to the Representation of the People in England and Wales. This is the Reform Act of 1867. The act is long, but its details have been made widely known.

Cap. 103. For the Extension of the Factory Acts. The provisions of previous acts are extended to females and young persons employed in blast-furnaces, copper-mills, forges, foundries, or in the manufacture of machinery, or of any article of metal, or of india-rubber, or gutta-percha; and to any premises in which is carried on the manufacture of paper, glass, tobacco, letter-press printing, bookbinding, and any other premises in which fifty or more persons are employed, with exceptions as to night-work in blast-furnaces, iron-mills, and printing-offices; but so as no one is to be employed more than sixty hours in any one week.

Cap. 105. To establish Equitable Councils of Conciliation to adjust Differences between Masters and Workmen. Masters and workmen, in any locality, may call a meeting and agree to form a council of conciliation, and petition the secretary of state for a license; the council may not consist of less than two nor more than ten masters and workmen; they have power to determine questions submitted to them and to enforce their awards; a rate of wages or price of labor may not be established by them; no counsel or attorneys to be heard before the courts unless by consent of both parties.

Cap. 127. To amend the Law relating to Railway Companies. The rolling stock of a railway is protected from seizure by creditors by this act; the remedy is by petition to the Court of Chancery, who may appoint a receiver or manager of the railway.

Cap. 130. For the regulation of Agricultural Gangs. No child under eight years of age to be employed licenses to gang-masters are to be granted by magistrates; no female to be employed in the same gang with males, or without a female licensed as gang-master being present; and the magistrates are to fix the distances within which children are to be allowed to travel to their work.

Cap. 134. For regulating the Traffic in the Metropolis, and for making Provision for the greater Security of Persons passing through the Streets. This is the act now in operation.

Cap. 141. To amend the Statute Law as between Master and Servant. Compensation for breach of contract may be awarded on either side, which, with any fines imposed, are to be recovered by distress, and in default of payment to be punished by imprisonment.

Cap. 146. For regulating the Hours of Labor for Children, Young Persons, and Women employed in Workshops. No child under eight is to be employed in any handicraft; no child to be employed more than six hours and a half on any one day, and such employment to be between 6 A.M. and 8 P.M.; no young person or female to be so employed for more than twelve hours, with time for meals; no person to be employed in any handicraft on Sunday or after two o'clock on Saturday afternoon. There are also regulations for the children attending schools.

Revenue, 69,434,508*l.* Expenditure—army, 14,675,540*l.*; navy, 10,676,101*l.*; for all objects, 66,780,396*l.*; national debt, 800,848,847*l.*

Exports of British and Irish produce and manufactures, 181,183,971*l.*; total exports, 226,057,136*l.*

Imports, 275,249,853*l.*

Emigration—to the North American Colonies, 15,503; to the United States, 159,275; to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, 14,466; to all other places, 6709: total, 195,953.

Amount of gold imported from Australia, 5,801,207*l.*: total imported, 15,800,159*l.*; exported, 7,889,030*l.*

Number of paupers, 1,148,643.

MISCELLANEOUS TABLES.

TABLE OF CONTEMPORARY SOVEREIGNS.

ENGLAND.	SCOTLAND.	FRANCE.	SPAIN.	GERMANY.	PAPAL STATES.
800 Egbert	800 Achaius	800 Charlemagne		800 Charlemagne	800 Leo III.
		814 Louis I.		814 Louis I.	816 Stephen V.
	819 Congale III.				817 Pascal I.
					824 Eugene II.
	824 Dougal				827 Valentine
	834 Alpin				827 Gregory IV.
836 Ethelwolf	836 Kenneth II.	843 Charles the Bald		843 Louis II.	843 Sergius II.
	854 Donald V.				847 Leo IV.
857 Ethelbald	858 Constantine II.				855 Benedict III.
860 Ethelbert			858 Garcia I.		858 Nicolas I.
866 Ethelred I.					867 Adrian II.
872 Alfred	874 Ethus	877 Louis I.		876 Carloman	872 John VIII.
	876 Gregory	879 Louis II.		876 Louis III.	882 Martin I.
		879 Carloman	880 Fortunio	876 Charles le Gros	884 Adrian III.
	892 Donald VI.	884 Charles le Gros		887 Arnold	885 Stephen VI.
		888 Hugh			891 Formosus
		898 Charles the Simple		899 Louis IV.	896 Stephen VII.
900 Edward the Elder					897 Rom. Formosus
	901 Constantine III.				897 John IX.
			902 Sancho I.		900 Benedict IV.
					903 Leo V.
					904 Sergius III.
					911 Anastasius
				911 Conrad I.	913 Lando
		922 Robert		919 Henry I.	914 John X.
925 Athelstan		923 Ralph			928 Leo VI.
			926 Garcia II.		929 Stephen VIII.
					931 John XI.
					936 Leo VII.
	938 Malcolm I.	936 Louis IV.		936 Otho the Great	939 Stephen IX.
941 Edmund					943 Martin II.
					946 Agapet II.
946 Edred		954 Lothaire			956 John XII.
955 Edwy	958 Indulphus				964 Benedict V.
959 Edgar					965 John XIII.
	968 Duffus				972 Benedict VI.
	972 Cullenus		970 Sancho II.		973 Domnus II.
975 Edward the Martyr	973 Kenneth III.			973 Otho II.	974 Benedict VII.
978 Ethelred II.					983 John XIV.
		986 Louis V.		983 Otho III.	985 John XV.
		987 Hugh Capet			986 John XVI.
	994 Constantine IV.		994 Garcia III.		996 Gregory V.
	996 Grimus	997 Robert			999 Sylvester II.
					1003 John XVII.
			1000 Sancho III.	1002 Henry II.	1003 John XVIII.
	1004 Malcolm II.				1009 Sergius IV.
1016 Edmund Ironside					1012 Benedict VIII.
					1024 John XIX.
1017 Canute				1024 Conrad II.	1033 Benedict IX.
1036 Harold	1034 Duncan	1031 Henry I.	1033 Ferdinand I. (Castile)		1044 Gregory VI.
1039 Hardicanute	1040 Macbeth		1035 Garcia IV. (Navarre)	1039 Henry III.	1047 Clement II.
1041 Edward Confessor			1035 Ramirez I. (Aragon)		1048 Damasius II.
			1054 Sancho VII. (Navarre)		1049 Leo IX.

ENGLAND.	SCOTLAND.	FRANCE.	SPAIN.	GERMANY.	PAPAL STATES.
			1054 Peter II. (Aragon)	1056 Henry IV.	1055 Victor II.
					1057 Stephen X.
1066 Harold II.	1057 Malcolm III.	1060 Philip I.	1060 James I. (Aragon)		1059 Nicolas II.
1066 William I.			1061 Henry I. (Castile)		1061 Alexander II.
1087 William II.			1066 Sancho I. (Aragon)		1073 Gregory VII.
			1066 Sancho I. (Castile)		1086 Victor III.
	1093 Donald Bane		1072 Alphonso I. (Castile)		1088 Urban II.
	1094 Duncan		1076 Sancho V. (Nav. and Ar.)		1099 Pascal II.
			1094 Peter I. (Nav. and Ar.)
	1095 Donald Bane (restored)			1107 Henry V.	1118 Gelasius II.
			1104 Alphonso I. (Nav. and Ar.)		1119 Calixtus II.
1100 Henry I.	1098 Edgar	1109 Louis VI.	1109 Urraca (Castile)	1125 Lothaire	1124 Honorius II.
			1126 Alphonso II. (Castile)		1130 Innocent II.
	1107 Alexander I.		1133 Garcia V. (Navarre)	1139 Conrad III.	1143 Celestine II.
1135 Stephen	1124 David I.		1133 Ramirez II. (Aragon)		1144 Lucius II.
		1137 Louis VII.	1137 Petronilla (Aragon)		1145 Eugenius III.
			1150 Sancho VI. (Navarre)	1152 Frederic I.	1153 Anastasius IV.
			1157 Sancho II. (Castile)		1154 Adrian IV.
	1153 Malcolm IV.		1158 Alphonso III. (Castile)		1159 Alexander III.
1154 Henry II.			1162 Alphonso II. (Aragon)		1181 Lucius III.
	1165 William	1180 Philip II.			1185 Urban III.
					1187 Gregory VIII.
					1188 Clement III.
			1194 Sancho VII. (Navarre)	1191 Henry VI.	1191 Celestine III.
1189 Richard I.			1196 Peter II. (Aragon)		1198 Innocent III.
1199 John		1223 Louis VIII.		1209 Otto IV.	1216 Honorius III.
1216 Henry III.	1214 Alexander II.				1227 Gregory IX.
			CASTILE AND LEON.		1241 Celestine IV.
		1226 Louis IX.	1230 Ferdinand III.	1212 Frederic II.
			1252 Alphonso X.	1251 Conrad IV.	1243 Innocent IV.
				1254 Interregnum	1254 Alexander IV.
	1249 Alexander III.				1261 Urban IV.
					1265 Clement IV.
				1273 Rodolph	1272 Gregory X.
					1276 Innocent V.
1272 Edward I.		1270 Philip III.			1276 Adrian V.
					1276 John XXI.
					1277 Nicolas III.
					1281 Martin IV.
			1284 Sancho IV.		1285 Honorius IV.
	1286 Margaret	1285 Philip IV.			1288 Nicolas IV.
	1292 John Balliol		1295 Ferdinand IV.	1292 Adolphus	1294 Celestine V.
	1296 Interregnum			1298 Albert I.	1295 Boniface VIII.
1307 Edward II.	1306 Robert I.	1314 Louis X.	1312 Alphonso XI.		1303 Benedict XI.
		1316 Philip V.		1308 Henry VII.	1305 Clement V.
1327 Edward III.	1329 David II.	1322 Charles IV.		1314 Louis V.	1316 John XXII.
		1328 Philip VI.	1350 Pedro		1334 Benedict XII.

TABLE OF CONTEMPORARY SOVEREIGNS—(CONTINUED).

ENGLAND.	SCOTLAND.	FRANCE.	SPAIN.	GERMANY.	PAPAL STATES.
		1350 John		1347 Charles IV.	1342 Clement VI.
		1364 Charles V.	1366 Henry II.		1352 Innocent VI.
			1367 Pedro (rest'd)		1362 Urban V.
1377 Edward III.	1371 Robert II.		1369 Henry II. (restored)		1370 Gregory XI. died
1377 Richard II.
		1380 Charles VI.	1379 John I.	1378 Wenceslaus.	1378 Urban VI.
1399 Henry IV.	1390 Robert III.		1390 Henry III.		1390 Boniface IX.
				1400 Rupert	1404 Innocent VII.
	1406 James I.		1406 John II.		1406 Gregory XII.
					1409 Alexander V.
1413 Henry V.				1411 Sigismund	1410 John XXII.
1422 Henry VI.		1422 Charles VII.			1417 Martin V.
				1431 Albert II.	1431 Eugene IV.
	1437 James II.			1437 Frederick III.	1447 Nicolas V.
					1455 Calixtus III.
					1458 Pius II.
1461 Edward IV.	1462 James III.	1461 Louis XI.			1464 Paul II.
			1474 Ferdinand and Isabella		1471 Sixtus IV.
1483 Edward V.		1483 CharlesVIII.			1484 Innocent VIII.
Richard III.
1485 Henry VII.	1488 James IV.
		1498 Louis XII.		1493 Maximilian I.	1492 Alexander VI.
1509 Henry VIII.
					1503 Pius III.
					1503 Julius II.
	1513 James V.	1515 Francis I.	1517 Charles I.	1517 Charles V.	1513 Leo X.
					1522 Adrian VI.
					1523 Clement VII.
1547 Edward VI.	1542 Mary	1547 Henry II.			1534 Paul III.

ENGLAND.	SCOTLAND.	FRANCE.	SPAIN.	GERMANY.	SWEDEN.	PAPAL STATES.
1547 Edward VI.	Mary	1547 Henry II.	Charles I.	Charles V.		Paul III.
						1550 Julius III.
1553 Mary
			1555 Philip II.			1555 Marcellus II.
				1557 Ferdinand I.		1555 Paul IV.
1558 Elizabeth
		1559 Francis II.				1559 Pius IV.
		1560 CharlesIX.
				1564 Maximilian II.		1566 Pius V.
	1567 James VI.
		1574 Henry III.		1576 Rodolph II.		1572 Gregory XIII.
						1585 Sixtus V.
		1589 Henry IV.				1590 Urban VII.
						1590 Gregory XIV.
						1591 Innocent IX.
						1592 Clement VIII.
			1599 Philip III.
1603 James I.
					1604 CharlesIX.	1605 Leo XI.
						1605 Paul V.
		1610 LouisXIII.
					1611 Gustavus Adolphus
				1612 Matthias
				1619 Ferdinand II.
			1621 Philip IV.			1621 Gregory XV.
1625 Charles I.						1623 Urban VIII.
					1632 Christina
				1637 Ferdinand III.
		1643 LouisXIV.				1644 Innocent X.

	ENGLAND.	FRANCE.	GERMANY.	PAPAL STATES.	SPAIN.	RUSSIA.
1625	Charles I.	Louis XIII.	Ferdinand II.	Urban VIII.	Philip III.	Michael Federowitch.
1637	....	....	Ferdinand III.	....	....	....
1643	....	Louis XIV.	....	....	....	....
1644	....	....	....	Innocent X.	....	....
1645	....	....	....	....	....	Alexei Michaelowitch.
1649	Charles II., King de jure. Commonwealth.	....	....	....	....	....
1655	....	....	....	Alexander VII.	....	....
1658	....	....	Leopold I.	....	....	....
1660	Charles II., King de facto.	....	....	....	....	....
1665	....	....	....	....	Charles II.	....
1667	....	....	....	Clement IX.	....	....
1670	....	....	....	Clement X.	....	....
1676	....	....	....	Innocent XI.	....	Feodore II.
1682	....	....	....	....	....	Ivan Alexandrowitch.
1685	James II.	....	....	....	....	Peter the Great.
1689	William and Mary.	....	....	Alexander VIII.	....	....

GREAT BRITAIN.	FRANCE.	GERMANY.	PRUSSIA.	SWEDEN.	RUSSIA.	SPAIN.
1690 William and Mary.	Louis XIV.	Leopold I.	Frederic William.	Charles XII.	Peter I.	Charles II.
1694 William III.	....	....	....	....	....	....
1700	....	....	....	....	....	1700 Philip V. (disputed succession).
1701 ...	....	....	1701 Frederic I.	....	....	....
1702 Anne.	....	....	....	....	....	....
1705	....	1705 Joseph I.	....	....	....	....
1711	....	1711 Charles VI.	....	....	....	....
1713	....	....	1713 Frederic William I.	....	....	....
1714 George I.	....	....	....	....	....	...

GREAT BRITAIN.	DENMARK.	POLAND.	PORTUGAL.	PAPAL STATES.	NAPLES.	SARDINIA.
1690 William and Mary.	Christian V.	Augustus II.	Peter II.	Alexander VIII.	Charles II.	Victor Amadeus II.
1691	....	....	....	1691 Innocent XII.	....	....
1694 William III.	....	....	....	....	....	....
1699 .. .	1699 Frederick IV.	....	....	....	....	....
1700	....	....	....	1700 Clement XI.	1700 Charles II. died (disputed succession).	....
1702 Anne.	....	....	....	....	....	....
1704	....	1704 Stanislaus Leczinsky.	....	....	....	....
1706	...	....	1709 John V.	....	....	....
1709	....	1709 Augustus II. (restored).	....	....	....	....
1714 George I.	....	....	....	....	....	....

GREAT BRITAIN.	FRANCE.	GERMANY.	PRUSSIA.	SWEDEN.	RUSSIA.	SPAIN.
1714 George I.	Louis XIV.	Charles VI.	Frederic William I.	UlricaEleonora.	Peter the Great.	Philip V.
1715	Louis XV.	....	....	....	....	....
1720	....	....	....	Frederic.	....	....
1725	...	....	....	....	Catherine I.	....
1727 George II.	....	....	....	....	Peter II.	....

TABLE OF CONTEMPORARY SOVEREIGNS—(CONTINUED).

GREAT BRITAIN.	FRANCE.	GERMANY.	PRUSSIA.	SWEDEN.	RUSSIA.	SPAIN.
1730	....	....	....	....	Anne.	....
1740	....	....	Frederic the Great.	....	Ivan III.	....
1741	....	....	....	....	Elizabeth.	....
1742	....	Charles VII.	....	....	....	....
1745	....	Francis I. and Maria Teresa.	....	....	....	....
1751	....	.. .	....	....	Ferdinand VI.	....
1758	....	....	...	Adolphus Frederic.	....	....
1759	....	....	....	....	Charles III.	....
1760 George III.	....	....	....	....	...	....
1762	....	....	....	....	{ Peter III. / Catherine II. }	....
1765 ...	....	Joseph II.	....	....	....	....
1771	....	....	...	Gustavus III.	....	....
1774	Louis XVI.	..	....	....	....	....
1786	....	....	Frederic William II.	....	....	....
1788	....	....	....	...	....	Charles IV.

GREAT BRITAIN.	DENMARK.	POLAND.	PORTUGAL.	PAPAL STATES.	NAPLES.	SARDINIA.
1714 George I.	Frederic IV.	Augustus II.	John V.	Clement XI.	Charles II.	....
1720	....	....	....	...	.. .	Victor Amadeus II.
1721	....	....	...	Innocent XIII.	.. .	....
1724	....	....	....	Benedict XIII.	....	....
1727 George II.	....	....	....	...	....	....
1730	Christian VI.	....	....	Clement XII.	....	Charles Emanuel III.
1740	....	....	....	Benedict XIV.	...	....
1746	Frederic V.	....	....	....	....	....
1750	....	....	Joseph Emanuel.	....	....	....
1758	....	....	....	Clement XIII.	....	....
1759	....	....	...	....	Ferdinand IV.	....
1760 George III.	....	....	....	....	....	....
1764	....	Stanislaus.	....	....	....	....
1766	Christian VII.	....	....	...	....	....
1769	....	....	....	Clement XIV.	....	....
1772	.. .	First Partition.	....	...	....	...
1778	....	....	....	....	....	Victor Amadeus III.
1775	....	....	....	Pius VI.	....	....
1777	....	....	Maria.	....	....	....
1788	....	....	....	....	....	....

GREAT BRITAIN.	FRANCE.	GERMANY.	PRUSSIA.	SWEDEN.	RUSSIA.	SPAIN.
1789 George III.	Louis XVI.	Joseph II.	Frederic William II.	Gustavus III.	Catharine II.	Charles IV.
1790 ...	....	Leopold II.	....	....	....	....
1792	Republic.	Francis II.*	....	Gustavus IV.	....	....
1796	....	....	....	....	Paul I.	....
1797	....	....	Frederic William III.	....	. ..	....
1799	Bonaparte, 1st Consul.	....	....	....	....	....
1801	....	....	....	....	Alexander.	....
1804	Napoleon, Emperor.	....	....	....	..	....
		AUSTRIA.

* Upon the establishment of the Confederation of the Rhine, in 1806, Francis ceased to be Emperor of Germany, and became hereditary Emperor of Austria, under the title of Francis I.

GREAT BRITAIN.	FRANCE.	GERMANY.	PRUSSIA.	SWEDEN.	RUSSIA.	SPAIN.
1806	....	Francis I.	....	....	....	....
1808	....	....	....	....	....	{ Ferdinand VII. / Joseph Napoleon.
1809	.. .	....	....	Charles XIII.	....	....
1811 Regency.	....	....	....	....	....	....
1814	Louis XVIII.	....	....	....	....	Ferdinand VII.

GREAT BRITAIN.	DENMARK.	PORTUGAL.	PAPAL STATES.	NAPLES.	SARDINIA.	UNITED STATES.
1787 George III.	Christian VII.	Maria.	Pius VI.	Ferdinand IV.	Victor Amadeus III.	George Washington (President).
1793	....	....	....	....	....	Re-elected 1793.
1795 ...	....	....	....	....	....	....
1796	....	....	....	....	Charles Emanuel IV.	....
1797	....	....	....	....	....	John Adams (President).
1799 . ..	....	John VI.	...	....	....	....
1800	....	..	Pius VII.	....	....	....
1801	....	....	....	....	....	Thomas Jefferson (President).
1802	....	....	....	....	Victor Emanuel.	....
1808	Frederic VI.	....	. ..	Joseph Napoleon.	....	....
1809	....	....	....	....	....	Thomas Madison (President).
1811 Regency.	....	....	....	....	....	Re-elected 1813.
1814 ...	....	....	....	....	....	....

GREAT BRITAIN.	FRANCE.	AUSTRIA.	PRUSSIA.	SWEDEN.	RUSSIA.	SPAIN.
1815 Regency.	Louis XVIII.	Francis I.	Frederic William III.	Charles XIII.	Alexander I.	Ferdinand VII.
1818	....	....	....	Charles John XIV.	....	....
1820 George IV.	....	....	...	....	....	..
1824	Charles X.	....	. ..	....	....	..
1825	....	....	....	....	Nicolas I.	....
1830 William IV.	Louis Philippe.	....	....	....	....	....
1833	....	....	....	....	....	Regency.
1835	....	Ferdinand I.	....	....	....	....
1837 Victoria.	....	.. .	....	....	....	....

GREAT BRITAIN.	DENMARK.	PORTUGAL.	PAPAL STATES.	NAPLES.	SARDINIA.	UNITED STATES.
1815 Regency.	Frederic VI.	John VI.	Pius VII.	[Joach. Murat], Ferdinand IV.	VictorEmanuel.	Thomas Madison (President).
1817	....	....	....	....	....	James Monroe.
1820 George IV.	....	....	....	....	....	....
1821	....	....	....	Ferdinand I.	Charles Felix.	James Monroe. Re-elected 1821.
1823	....	....	Leo XII.	....	....	....
1825	....	....	....	....	....	John Quincy Adams.
1826	....	Pedro IV.	....	Francis.	....	. ..
1828	....	Maria da Gloria.	....	....	....	....
1829	....	....	....	....	....	Andrew Jackson.
1830 William IV.	....	....	....	Ferdinand II.	....	....
1831	....	....	Gregory XVI.	.. .	Charles Albert.	....
1833	....	...	....	....	....	Andrew Jackson. Re-elected 1833.
1837 Victoria.	....	....	....	....	....	....

CONTEMPORARY SOVEREIGNS AND RULERS FROM 1815, INCLUDING RETURNS DERIVED FROM THE CENSUSES OF 1851 AND 1861.

GREAT BRITAIN.	FRANCE.	AUSTRIA.	PRUSSIA.	SWEDEN.	RUSSIA.	SPAIN.
1815 Regency.	Louis XVIII.	Francis I.	Frederic William III.	Charles XIII.	Alexander I.	Ferdinand VII.
1818	....	....	...	Charles John XIV.	....	....
1820 George IV.	....	....	....	....	....	...
1824	Charles X.	....	...	....	....	....
1825	...	...	....	....	Nicolas I.	....
1830 William IV.	Louis Philippe.	....	....	....	....	....
1833	....	....	....	....	....	Isabella II.
1835	...	Ferdinand I.	....	....	....	....
1837 Victoria.	...	....	....	....	....	....
1840 ...	...	....	Frederic William IV.	....	....	....
1844	....	....	....	Oscar IV.	....	....
1848	Louis Napoleon (President of Republic).	Francis Joseph I.	....	....	....	....
1850 ...	....	....	....	Charles XV.	....	....
1852	Napoleon III.	....	....	....	....	....
1855	....	....	....	....	Alexander II.	....
1861	....	....	William I.	....	....	....

GREAT BRITAIN.	DENMARK.	PORTUGAL.	PAPAL STATES.	NAPLES.	SARDINIA.	UNITED STATES.
1815 Regency.	Frederick VI.	John VI.	Pius VII.	Ferdinand IV. (restored).	Victor Emmanuel I.	James Madison (President).
1817	....	....	....	....	....	James Monroe.
1820 George IV.	....	....	....	....	....	....
1821	....	...	....	....	Charles Felix.	James Monroe, Re-elected 1821.
1823	....	....	Leo XII.	....	....	....
1825	....	....	....	Francis I.	....	John Quincy Adams.
1826	....	Pedro IV. Maria da Gloria.	....	....	....	....
1829	....	Miguel.	Pius VIII.	....	....	Andrew Jackson.
1830 William IV.	....	....	...	Ferdinand II.	Charles Albert.	....
1831	....	....	Gregory XVI.	....	....	....
1833	....	Maria(restored).	....	....	...	Andrew Jackson, Re-elected 1833.
1837 Victoria.	....	....	....	....	....	Martin Van Buren.
1839	Christian VIII.	....	...	....	....	....
1841	....	....	....	....	....	W. H. Harrison. (Died in office.) John Tyler.
1845	...	....	....	....	....	James Knox Polk.
1846	...	....	Pius IX.	....	....	....
1848	Frederick VII.	....	....	....	....	....
1849	....	....	....	Francis II.	Victor Emmanuel II.	Zachary Taylor. (Died in office.)
1850	...	....	....	....	....	Millard Fillmore.
1853	....	Pedro V.	....	...	....	Franklin Pierce.
1857	....	....	....	....	....	James Buchanan.
1861	...	Louis Philip.	....	Francis II. (Dethroned.)	....	Abraham Lincoln (Assassinated).
				ITALY. Victor Emmanuel.
1861				....		....
1863	Christian IX.	....	....	....		Andrew Johnson.
1865	....	...	....

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF BRITISH WRITERS.

In this history the occasional notices of the progress of literature have no pretensions to completeness, and are given as illustrative of the general character of an age rather than as expressions of critical opinion. But it may be useful to our readers to have something like a connected view of the British writers in each century for purposes of reference. The following table adds to the name of each author, and the dates of his birth and death, as far as they could be ascertained, the title of the work by which he is best known. The names are arranged under three heads—Imagination; Fact; Speculative and Scientific. The first includes the poets and novelists; the second, the writers on history, geography, and other matters of exact detail; the third, those who treat of philosophy and science. This division cannot be perfect, for an author is often celebrated in various departments of knowledge. His name will here be found in the division which includes his best-known productions.

IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.
A.D. 500	A.D. 500 Gildas, Conquest of Britain	A.D. 500
600 Cædmon, Saxon Poems Aldhelme, d. 709, Latin Poems	600 Nennius, Origin of Britons	600
700	700 Bede, 673-735, Eccl. Hist. of England	700 Alcuin, d. 804, Theology, History, Poetry
800 Alfred, 849-901, Saxon Poems, Translations, etc.	800 Asser, d. 909, Life of Alfred, Hist. of England	800 J. Scot Erigena, d. 883, Of the Nature of Things
900	900 Etheiwerd, Hist. of Great Britain	900
1000	1000 Ingulphus, 1030-1109, History of Croyland Eadmer, Chronicle	1000
1100 Layamon, Saxon Poetry Nigellus, Speculum Stultorum Walter Mapes, Satires, Songs Jos. of Exeter, Troj. War, War of Antioch, Epics	1100 Order. Vitalis, 1075-1132, History of England Florence of Worcester, d. 1118, Chron. of England Geoffrey of Monmouth, History of Britain William of Malmesbury, d. 1143, Hist. of Britain Henry of Huntingdon, Chronicles of England Simeon of Durham, Chronicles of England John of Salisbury, d. 1181, Life of Becket, etc. G. Cambrensis, Conq. of Ireland, Itin. of Wales Wm. of Newbury, b. 1136, Chron. of England	1100 Robert Pulleyn, d. 1150, Theology Richard of St. Victor, d. 1173, Theology Ralph Glanville, Collection of Laws
1200 Robert of Glocester, Chronicle in Verse T. Lermont, the Rhymer, Sir Tristrem, Romance	1200 Roger Hoveden, Chron. of England Gervase of Canterbury, History of England Roger of Wendover, Hist. of England Matthew Paris, d. 1259, History of England William Rishanger, Hist. of England	1200 Alex. Neckham, d. 1227, Theology Robert Grosteste, Natural Philosophy Alexander Hales, d. 1245, Aristotelian John Peckham, Theology John Holiwood, d. 1256, Astron., Mathematics Roger Bacon, 1214-1292, Chemistry, Optics, etc. Rich. Middleton, Theology

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF BRITISH WRITERS—(CONTINUED).

IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.
A.D.	A.D.	A.D.
1300	1300	1300 Albricus, Theology Duns Scotus, d. 1308, Philosophy Walter Burleigh, Philosophy Gilb. Anglicus, Medicine
Adam Davie, Metr. Romance, Life of Alex.	Nicholas Triveth, d. 1328, Hist. Physic, Theology	R. Aungervile, 1281-1345, Philobiblion
	Richard of Chichester, Chron. of England
Lawrence Minot, d. 1352, Historical Poems	Ralph Higden, d. 1360, Chron. of England
	Henry Knighton, d. 1370, Chron. of England	J. Wicliffe, 1324-1384, Theology, Trans. of Bible
John Barbour, 1326-1396, The Bruce	Matthew of Westminster, Flowers of History
	John Maundeville, d. 1372, Travels
	John Fordun, Chron. of Scotland	H. de Bracton, Law
R. Langlande, Pierce Plowman, a Satire
Geof. Chaucer, 1328-1400, Canterbury Tales, etc.
John Gower, d. 1402, Elegies, Romances, etc.
1400	1400 Andrew of Wyntoun, Chron. of Scotland	1400
John Lydgate, 1380-1440, Poems
	T. Walsingham, d. 1440, History of Normandy
James I. of Scotland, 1395-1437, King's Quhair, etc.		John Fortescue, Laws of England
Harry the Minstrel, Sir W. Wallace
	John Hardyng, Chron. of England	Thos. Littleton, d. 1487, Law
	Lord Berners, Trans. of Froissart
Stephen Hawes, Passetyme of Pleasure	W. Caxton, Translations
John Skelton, d. 1529, Satires, Odes	Douglas of Glastonbury, Chron. of England
1500 Wm. Dunbar, 1465-1530, Thistle and Rose	1500 R. Fabyan, d. 1512, Chron. of England and France	1500 Thos. Linacre, 1460-1524, Philology, Medicine
Gawin Douglas, 1475-1522, Trans. Virgil
Thomas More, 1480-1535, Utopia		Anth. Fitzherbert, Husbandry
Thomas Wyatt, d. 1541, Sonnets	T. Halls, d. 1547, Hist. of Houses of York and Lanc.
		Thomas Elyot, Philology
John Heywood, d. 1565, Drama	John Leland, d. 1552, English Antiquities	H. Latimer, 1475-1555, Sermons
Earl of Surrey, d. 1546-7, Poems	W. Cavendish, 1505-1557, Life of Wolsey
Geo. Gascoigne, d. 1577, Drama	J. Ball, 1495-1563, Lives of British Writers	Roger Ascham, 1515-1568, The Schoolmaster
	Ralph Hollingshed, d. 1581, Chronicles	Thomas Wilson, d. 1581, Logic and Rhetoric
	Geo. Buchanan, 1506-1582, History of Scotland	Thomas Tusser, d. 1580, Husbandry
	J. Fox, 1517-1587, Book of Martyrs
Philip Sidney, 1554-1586, Arcadia
Christ. Marlowe, d. 1593, Drama
Edmd. Spenser, 1553-1598, Faëry Queen		J. Jewel, 1522-1570, Divinity
W. Shakspere, 1564-1616, Drama	N. Fitzherbert, 1550-1612, Biography	R. Hooker, 1553-1600, Ecclesiastical Polity
John Lylie, 1550-1600, Euphues	John Stow, 1527-1605, Chronicles, Topography	W. Gilbert, 1540-1603, On the Loadstone
	Sir T. North, Trans. of Plutarch	L. Andrews, 1565-1626, Sermons
John Fletcher, 1576-1625, Drama
F. Beaumont, 1586-1615, Drama
1600 John Owen, d. 1612, Latin Epigrams	1600 J. Pits, 1560-1616, Biog. of Kings, Bishops, etc.	1600 Edward Coke, 1550-1634, Law
	Richard Knolles, d. 1610, History of the Turks	John Napier, 1550-1617, Logarithms
	Wm. Camden, 1551-1623, Antiquities

IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.
A.D.	A.D.	A.D.
1600	1600 R. Hackluyt, 1553-1616, Naval Histories	1600
	W. Raleigh, 1552-1617, History of the World
	Sam. Daniel, 1567-1619, History of England
	John Hayward, d. 1627, English History
J. Ford, b. 1586, Drama	J. Speed, 1555-1629, Hist. of Great Britain	Robt. Burton, 1576-1639, Anat. of Melancholy
Ben Jonson, 1574-1637, Drama	Henry Spelman, 1562-1641, Antiquities	Francis Bacon, 1560-1626, Philosophy, History
P. Massinger, 1585-1639, Drama	R. B. Cotton, 1570-1631, Antiquities	Wm. Harvey, 1578-1657, Circulation of Blood
J. Harrington, 1561-1612, Trans. Ariosto	S. Purchas, 1577-1628, Collection of Voyages
E. Fairfax, d. 1632, Trans. Tasso	Thomas Roe, 1580-1641, Travels in the East	John Selden, 1584-1654, Antiquities, Law, Hist.
M. Drayton, 1563-1631, Poems	E. (Ld.) Herbert, 1581-1648, Hist. of Henry VIII.	J. Harrington, 1611-1677, Oceana
G. Sandys, 1577-1643, Translations, Poems	R. Baker, d. 1645, Chron. of England	James Usher, 1580-1656, Divinity, Sermons, Hist.
J. Daniel, 1562-1619, Poems		Thos. Hobbes, 1588-1679, Metaphysics
W. Drummond, 1585-1649, Poems		W. Dugdale, 1605-1686, Antiquities, History
John Donne, 1573-1662, Satires, Essays		W. Chillingworth, 1602-1644, Theology
Geo. Wither, 1588-1667, Satires	Thos. Fuller, 1608-1661, History, Biography	Isaac Barrow, 1630-1677, Divinity, Mathematics
James Shirley, 1594-1666, Drama	Clarendon, 1608-1673, History of Rebellion	J. Pearson, 1612-1686, Divinity
Sir J. Suckling, 1609-1641, Poems	Thomas May, d. 1650, History of Parliament	Brian Walton, 1600-1661, Polyglot Bible
John Denham, 1615-1668, Tragedies, Cooper's Hill	Izaak Walton, 1593-1683, Biography	Jeremy Taylor, d. 1667, Divinity
Samuel Butler, 1612-1688, Hudibras	B. Whitlocke, 1605-1676, History	Algernon Sydney, 1617-1683, Discourse on Government
John Milton, 1608-1674, Paradise Lost	Mrs. Hutchinson, Biography	Thos. Browne, 1605-1682, On Vulgar Errors
Edm. Waller, 1605-1687, Poems	W. Prynne, 1660-1667, History, Politics	Edmund Castell, d. 1685, Lexicon Heptaglotton
A. Cowley, 1618-1667, Poems		R. Cudworth, 1617-1688, Metaphysics
A. Marvell, 1620-1678, Poems		J. Evelyn, 1620-1706, Sylva
		H. More, 1614-1687, Theology
Rochester, 1648-1680, Satires	Wm. Temple, 1629-1700, History	T. Sydenham, 1624-1689, Medicine
Roscommon, 1633-1684, Poems		W. Sherlock, d. 1689, Divinity
N. Lee, 1656-1691, Drama		J. Tillotson, 1630-1694, Sermons
John Bunyan, 1628-1688, Pilgrim's Progress		Archbish. Leighton, 1613-1684, Divinity
John Dryden, 1631-1701, Tragedy, Satire, Virgil		R. Baxter, 1615-1691, Saints' Everlasting Rest
Thos. Otway, 1651-1685, Tragedy	R. Brady, d. 1700, Hist. of England	R. Boyle, 1627-1691, Theology, Chemistry
1700 John Pomfret, 1667-1703, The Choice	1700 Thomas Rymer, d. 1713, Fœdera	1700
		John Ray, 1628-1705, Botany, Natural History
		John Locke, 1632-1704, Metaphysics
		R. South, 1633-1716, Divinity
John Philips, 1676-1708, Splendid Shilling
Thos. Parnell, 1679-1717, The Hermit	S. Ockley, 1678-1720, Oriental History	Isaac Newton, 1642-1719, Principia
George Farquhar, 1678-1707, Comedies	Thos. Hearne, 1678-1735, History and Antiquities	J. Flamsteed, 1646-1719, Astronomy
	John Strype, 1643-1737, Eccl. History, Biography	R. Hooke, 1635-1702, Nat. Philosophy
	Gilbert Burnet, 1643-1715, History of his Time'	B. de Mandeville, 1670-1733, Fable of the Bees
Matthew Prior, 1664-1721, Poems	L. Echard, 1671-1730, History of England	Edmund Halley, 1656-1742, Astronomy
R. Steele, d. 1729, Drama, 'Tatler,' 'Spectator'	Thomas Carte, 1686-1754, History of England	Hans Sloane, 1660-1753, Natural History

IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.
A.D.	A.D.	A.D.
1700 Daniel Defoe, 1660-1731, Robinson Crusoe	1700 John Potter, 1674-1747, Antiquities	1700
Jos. Addison, 1672-1719, 'Spectator,' Cato	Sir W. Petty, 1623-1682, Statistics
Nich. Rowe, 1673-1718, Tragedy		A. Clark, 1696-1742, Divinity, Philosophy
J. Vanbrugh, d. 1726, Comedy		D. Waterland, 1683-1740, Divinity
W. Congreve, 1672-1728, Comedy		R. Bentley, 1661-1740, Divinity, Philology
John Gay, 1688-1732, Beggar's Opera, Fables	Nathaniel Hooke, d. 1763, History of Rome	A. Baxter, 1687-1750, Metaphysics
M. W. Montague, 1690-1762, Letters	C. Middleton, 1683-1750, Life of Cicero, etc.
Robert Blair, 1699-1746, The Grave		Lord Bolingbroke, 1672-1751, Politics, Literature
S. Richardson, 1689-1761, Clarissa, Pamela, etc.		G. Berkeley, 1684-1753, Metaphysics, Ethics
		P. Doddridge, 1701-1751, Divinity
		Jas. Bradley, 1692-1762, Astronomy
		F. Hutcheson, 1694-1747, Moral Philosophy
		T. Sherlock, 1678-1761, Divinity
		C. Maclaurin, 1669-1746, Mathematics
		Earl of Chesterfield, 1694-1773, Letters
D. Garrick, 1716-1779, Drama		Eph. Chambers, d. 1740, Cyclopædia
S. Foote, 1720-1771, Drama		B. Hoadly, 1676-1761, Polemics
R. Dodsley, 1703-1764, Drama	John Swinton, 1703-1767, History, Antiquity
Jonathan Swift, 1667-1745, Satires, Tales, etc.		Bishop Butler, 1692-1752, Divinity
J. Watts, 1674-1748, Hymns
Edward Young, 1681-1765, Night Thoughts
Alex. Pope, 1688-1744, Poetry
Will. Somerville, 1692-1743, The Chase
Allan Ramsay, 1696-1758, The Gentle Shepherd
Richard Savage, 1698-1743, Poems
Jas. Thomson, 1700-1748, Seasons		J. Wesley, 1703-1791, Divinity
John Dyer, 1700-1758, Poems
	Lord Lyttleton, 1709-1778, History, Poems, Divinity	D. Hartley, 1704-1757, Observations on Man
H. Fielding, 1707-1754, Tom Jones, etc.	James Granger, d. 1776, Biog. Hist. of England	Soame Jenyns, 1704-1787, Theology
Jas. Hammond, 1710-1742, Elegies		W. Warburton, 1709-1779, Theology, Criticism
Lawr. Sterne, 1713-1768, Tristram Shandy		J. Jortin, 1698-1770, Divinity, Criticism
W. Shenstone, 1714-1763, Pastorals, etc.	Sam. Johnson, 1709-1784, Lives of Poets, Dict., etc.	Lord Kaimes, 1696-1782, Elements of Criticism
W. Collins, 1720-1756, Odes	Jonas Hanway, 1712-1786, Travels in the East	R. Lowth, 1710-1787, Divinity, Philology
H. Brooke, 1706-1783, Fool of Quality	John Blair, d. 1782, Chronology	W. Blackstone, 1723-1780, Laws of England
M. Akenside, 1721-1770, Pleasures of Imagination	David Hume, 1711-1776, Hist. of Eng., Essays, etc.
Thos. Gray, 1716-1771, Odes, Elegies
T. Smollett, 1720-1771, Novels	W. Robertson, 1721-1793, Hist. of Charles V., etc.	Adam Smith, 1723-1790, Wealth of Nations
R. Glover, 1712-1789, Leonidas	Thos. Warton, 1728-1790, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, Poems	Benj. Franklin, 1706-1790, Electricity, Philosophy
O. Goldsmith, 1731-1774, Traveller, Vicar of Wakefield		J. Harris, 1709-1780, Philology
W. Mason, 1725-1797, Poems, Biography		John Hunter, 1728-1793, Medicine
T. Chatterton, 1752-1770, Poems	H. Walpole, d. 1797, Historic Doubts, Royal and Noble Authors, Letters	F. Balguy, 1716-1795, Divinity
Ar. Murphy, 1727-1805, Drama	J. Moore, 1730-1802, Views of Society and Manners
Wm. Cowper, 1731-1800, Poems	James Bruce, 1730-1794, Travels
R. Cumberland, 1732-1811, Drama	W. Gilpin, 1724-1804, Biography, Divinity	T. Reid, 1710-1796, Metaphysics
Eras. Darwin, 1732-1802, Botanic Garden		Sir J. Reynolds, 1723-1792, Art

IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.
A.D.	A.D.	A.D.
1700 James Beattie, 1735-1803, Poems	1700 E. Gibbon, 1737-1794, Decl. and Fall of Rom. Empire	1700 S. Horsley, d. 1806, Theol.
R. Ferguson, 1750-1774, Poems	J. Whitaker, 1735-1808, Hist. of Manchester, etc.	Jos. Priestley, 1733-1804, Metaphysics, Chemistry
Geo. Colman, 1733-1794, Comedies	Edmund Burke, 1730-1797, Oratory	Hugh Blair, 1718-1800, Sermons
J. Wolcot (Peter Pindar), 1738-1819, Com. Poems	J. Boswell, 1740-1795, Biography	J. Horne Tooke, 1736-1812, Philology
J. Macpherson, 1738-1796, Ossian's Poems		Wm. Jones, 1747-1794, Orientalist
		R. Price, 1723-1791, Metaphysics, Divinity
	J. Milner, 1744-1797, Church History	Wm. Paley, 1743-1805, Theology
Robert Burns, 1759-1796, Poems	Joseph Strutt, 1748-1802, Chronology, Antiquities	Richd. Porson, 1759-1808, Philology
J. Home, d. 1808, Drama		Thos. Beddoes, 1760-1808, Medicine
R. B. Sheridan, 1751-1816, Drama		N. Maskelyne, d. 1811, Astronomy
		G. L. Staunton, d. 1801, Chinese Code
Ann Radcliffe, 1764-1823, Novels	Charles Burney, d. 1814, History of Music	W. Herschel, 1738-1822, Astronomy
1800 Henry Kirke White, 1785-1806, Poems	1800 Mungo Park, 1771-1805, Travels in Africa	1800 Henry Cavendish, 1731-1810, Physics, Composition of Water.
Robert Tannahill, 1774-1810, Songs and Poems	Charles James Fox, 1749-1806, History	Richard Cecil, 1748-1810, Sermons, Religious Biography
John Leyden, 1775-1811, Poems and Translations	J. Macdiarmid, 1779-1808, Biography	Edmond Malone, 1741-1812, Commentator on Shakspere
James Grahame, 1765-1811, The Sabbath, and other Poems	James Forsyth, 1763-1815, Travels in Italy	Alexander Murray, 1775-1813, European Languages
Jane Austen, 1775-1817, Pride and Prejudice, and other Novels	Claudius Buchanan, 1766-1815, Christian Researches in India	John Playfair, 1748-1819, Euclid's Geometry
Matthew G. Lewis, 1775-1818, Poems and Novels		Arthur Young, 1741-1820, Agriculture
Hector McNeil, 1746-1818, Scottish Poems: The Scottish Adventurers, a Novel		Sir Joseph Banks, 1743-1820, Natural History
		John Bell, 1763-1820, Anatomy
		Thomas Brown, 1778-1820, Metaphysics
		J. Bonnycastle, d. 1821, Astronomy, Algebra
Elizabeth Inchbald, 1753-1821, A Simple Story, and other Tales	Patrick Colquhoun, 1745-1820, Statistics Police of the Metropolis	James Perry, 1756-1821, Political Journalist (Morning Chronicle)
John Keats, 1796-1821, Poems		John Aikin, 1747-1822, Evenings at Home
		James Sowerby, 1757-1822, English Botany
Percy Bysshe Shelley, 1793-1822, Poems	E. D. Clarke, 1769-1822, Travels in Russia and the East	C. Hutton, 1737-1823, Mathematics
Robert Bloomfield, 1766-1823, The Farmer's Boy, and other Poems	David Bogue, 1749-1825, History of Dissenters	David Ricardo, 1772-1823, Political Economy
Charles Wolfe, 1791-1823, Ode on the Burial of Sir John Moore		Richard Payne Knight, 1750-1824, Philology, Essay on Taste
George, Lord Byron, 1788-1824, Poems		A. Rees, 1743-1825, Cyclopædia
Anna Lætitia Barbauld, 1743-1825, Poems, Tales, Hymns in Prose		Samuel Parr, 1747-1825, Philology
Reginald Heber, 1783-1826, Palestine, and other Poems	W. Mitford, 1744-1827, History of Greece	John Flaxman, 1755-1826, Lectures on Sculpture
Robert Pollok, 1799-1827, Course of Time	George Canning, 1770-1827, Microcosm, Anti-Jacobin	William Gifford, 1757-1826, Politics and Criticism (Quarterly Rev.)
Henry Mackenzie, 1745-1831, Man of Feeling	Hugh Clapperton, 1788-1827, Travels in Africa	Dugald Stewart, 1753-1828, Metaphysics
George Crabbe, 1754-1832, Poems	James Rennell, 1782-1830, Geography	P. Elmsley, 1773-1825, Philology
Sir Walter Scott, 1771-1832, Poems, Waverley Novels	William Roscoe, 1753-1831, Biography	W. H. Wollaston, 1776-1828, Physical Science
Anna Maria Porter, 1781-1832, Historical Novels		Thomas Tredgold, 1788-1829, Building and Engineering
Hannah More, 1745-1833, Sacred Dramas, Cœlebs in Search of a Wife	Sir James Mackintosh, 1765-1832, History of England, Progress of Ethical Philosophy	Thomas Young, 1773-1829, Physics, Hieroglyphics
		Sir Humphry Davy, 1778-1829, Chemistry
		William Hazlitt, 1778-1830, Essays on Shakspere

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE OF BRITISH WRITERS—(CONTINUED).

IMAGINATION.

A.D.
1800 William Sotheby, 1756-1833, Poems, Translations

Samuel Taylor Coleridge, 1772-1834, Poems and Essays
Charles Lamb, 1775-1834, Poems, Essays of Elia
Thos. Pringle, 1789-1834, Poems, South African Sketches

James Hogg, 1772-1835, The Queen's Wake, and other Poems, Winter Evening Tales

Felicia Hemans, 1794-1835, Poems

William Godwin, 1756-1836, Caleb Williams, and other Novels
George Coleman, the Younger, 1762-1836, Dramas
Sir S. Egerton Brydges, 1764-1837, Poems
Anne Grant (of Laggan), 1755-1838, Poems, Translations from the Gaelic, Letters from the Mountains
Letitia E. Landon (Mrs. Maclean), 1802-1839, Poems
James Smith, 1775-1839, Novels, Rejected Addresses
John Galt, 1779-1839, Ayrshire Legatees, and other Tales of Scottish Life
W. M. Praed, 1802-1839, Poems and Essays
Thomas Haynes Bayley, d. 1839, Poems and Tales
Frances Burney (Madame D'Arblay), 1752-1840, Evelina, and other Novels
Thos. Dibdin, 1771-1841, Dramas
Theodore E. Hook, 1788-1841, Novels
Allan Cunningham, 1784-1842, Poems
John Banim, 1800-1842, Irish Novels
Thomas H. Lister, d. 1842, Granby, and other Novels

Robt. Southey, 1774-1843, Curse of Kehama, and other Poems

William Beckford, 1761-1844, Vathek, an Oriental Romance
Henry F. Cary, 1772-1844, Poems, Translation of Dante
Barbara Hofland, 1770-1844, Novels, Domestic Tales
Thomas Campbell, 1777-1844, Pleasures of Hope, and other Poems
John Sterling, 1806-1844, Poems, Tales, and Essays

FACT.

A.D.
1800

Alexander Chalmers, 1759-1834, Biographical Dictionary
James Dallaway, 1763-1834, Travels, Archæology
Thomas M'Crie, 1772-1835, Life of John Knox
H. D. Inglis (Derwent Conway), 1795-1835, Travels
John Gillies, 1747-1836, History of Ancient Greece

William Taylor, 1765-1836, History of German Poetry

Sir W. Gell, 1777-1836, Classical Topography and Antiquities
Henry Roscoe, 1799-1836, Lives of Eminent Lawyers

Sir R. C. Hoare, 1758-1838, Travels, Antiquities of Wiltshire, etc.

Sir Alexander Burnes, 1805-1841, Travels in Bokhara and Cabool

T. D. Fosbroke, 1770-1842, Topography, Archæology
Sir Robert Ker Porter, 1775-1842, Travels in the East
William Hone, 1779-1842, Every Day Book

Thomas Arnold, 1795-1842, History of Rome

SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.

A.D.
1800 John Abernethy, 1763-1831, Physiology, Surgery
Robert Hall, 1764-1831, Sermons, Essays
Archbishop Magee, d. 1831, Sermons, Treatise on the Atonement
Jeremy Bentham, 1747-1832, Jurisprudence, Political Economy
George Burder, 1752-1832, Village Sermons
Adam Clarke, 1760-1832, Oriental Literature, Biblical Commentary
Sir John Leslie, 1766-1832, Physics

William Carey, 1761-1834, Translations of the Scriptures into Eastern Languages
T. R. Malthus, 1766-1834, Essay on Population
Edward Irving, 1792-1834, Interpretation of Prophecy
William Cobbett, 1762-1835, Politics and Rural Economy
Robt. Morrison, 1782-1834, Chinese Language
Sir Charles Wilkins, 1749-1836, Oriental Literature
W. Marsden, 1754-1836, Oriental Languages
Richard Valpy, 1754-1836, Philology
John Pond, 1767-1836, Astronomy

James Mill, 1773-1836, Political Economy, History of India
W. Elford Leach, 1790-1836, British Crustacea
John Latham, 1740-1837, Ornithology
Joshua Marshman, 1767-1837, Chinese Literature

John Jamieson, 1759-1838, Dictionary of the Scottish Language
Archibald Alison, 1757-1839, Essays on Taste
William Smith, 1769-1839, Geology
Sir Anthony Carlisle, 1768-1840, Anatomy and Surgery
Lant Carpenter, 1780-1840, Theology
Sir Astley Cooper, 1768-1841, Surgery
Olinthus Gregory, 1774-1841, Mathematics, Evidences of Christianity
Joseph Blanco White, 1775-1841, Letters from Spain, Controversial Writings against Roman Catholicism
Thomas Rickman, 1776-1841, Gothic Architecture

Patrick Kelly, 1756-1842, Mathematics, Universal Cambist
Sir Charles Bell, 1774-1842, Treatise on the Hand, Surgery.
William Maginn, 1793-1842, Politics, Periodical Literature
John Foster, 1770-1843, Essays on Popular Ignorance, and other subjects

IMAGINATION.

A.D.
1800

Regina Maria Roche, 1764-1845, Children of the Abbey, and other Novels
H. Barham, 1788-1845, Ingoldsby Legends
Thomas Hood, 1798-1845, Song of the Shirt, Comic Annual, etc.
Laman Blanchard, 1803-1845, Poems, Essays, and Sketches
Robert Plumer Ward, 1765-1846, Novels

Sir Thomas Dick Lauder, 1784-1848, Highland Legends
William Tennant, 1785-1848, Dramas, Anster Fair, a Poem
Frederick Marryat, 1792-1848, Peter Simple, and other Sea Novels
Maria Edgeworth, 1767-1849, Moral Tales, Novels of Irish Life
Horace Smith, 1780-1849, Brambletye House, and other Novels, Rejected Addresses
Ebenezer Elliott, 1781-1849, Poems, Corn Law Rhymes
Bernard Barton, 1784-1849, Poems
Marguerite, Countess of Blessington, 1789-1849, Novels, Idler in Italy, etc.
W. Lisle Bowles, 1762-1850, Poems
Wm. Wordsworth, 1770-1850, Poems
Jane Porter, 1776-1850, Historical Novels
W. H. Maxwell, 1794-1850, Wild Sports of the West, Random Shots from a Rifleman
Harriet Lee, 1756-1851, Canterbury Tales
Joanna Baillie, 1762-1851, Dramas, Tales of the Passions
Martha Mary Sherwood, 1774-1851, Novels and Tales
Thos. Moore, 1779-1852, Poems, Irish Melodies
Amelia Opie, 1768-1853, Poems, Tales of the Heart
James Montgomery, 1771-1854, The World before the Flood, and other Poems, Hymns for Public Worship

Miss Ferrier, 1782-1854, Marriage, Destiny, The Inheritance
Thomas Noon Talfourd, 1795-1854, Dramas
Thomas Crofton Croker, 1798-1854, Fairy Legends and Popular Songs of Ireland
Samuel Phillips, 1815-1854, Caleb Stukely, Essays from the Times
Samuel Rogers, 1763-1855, Pleasures of Memory, Italy, etc.

FACT.

A.D.
1800

Henry John Todd, 1763-1845, Bibliography, New Edition of Johnson's Dictionary
John Adolphus, 1770-1845, History of the Reign of George III.
John Gurwood, 1791-1845, Wellington's Despatches

Hugh Murray, 1779-1846, Geography
Sharon Turner, 1768-1847, Sacred History of the World, History of the Anglo-Saxons
Thomas F. Dibdin, 1776-1847, Bibliography
Sir John Barrow, 1764-1848, Biography, Arctic Voyages
Isaac Disraeli, 1766-1848, History, Curiosities of Literature
Sir N. Harris Nicolas, 1799-1848, History, Genealogy, etc.

Horace Twiss, 1786-1849, Life of Lord Eldon, etc.

Patrick Fraser Tytler, 1790-1849, Biography, History of Scotland

John Lingard, 1771-1851, History of England

H. Fynes Clinton, 1781-1852, Fasti Hellenici, etc.
George R. Porter, 1792-1852, Statistics, Progress of the Nation
Eliot Warburton, 1810-1852, Travels

Sir William Betham, 1779-1853, Irish Antiquarian Researches, The Gael and Cimbri
E. W. Brayley, 1773-1854, Topography, Antiquities
John Gibson Lockhart, 1794-1854, Life of Sir Walter Scott, Editor of Quarterly Review

Sir George Head, 1782-1855, Travels

SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.

A.D.
1800 R. W. Rham, 1778-1843, Dictionary of the Farm
John C. Loudon, 1783-1843, Botany, Horticulture
John Dalton, 1766-1844, Chemistry
Francis Baily, 1774-1844, Astronomy
John Abercrombie, 1781-1844, Metaphysics, Theology
Sydney Smith, 1771-1845, Politics, Periodical Essays
J. F. Daniell, 1790-1845, Chemistry, Meteorology
Christopher Wordsworth, 1774-1846, Theology
H. Gally Knight, 1787-1846, Antiquities, Architecture
George Joseph Bell, 1770-1847, Principles of the Law of Scotland
Thomas Chalmers, 1780-1847, Theology, Metaphysics, Political and Social Economy
Joseph John Gurney, 1788-1847, Christian Evidences
Andrew Combe, 1797-1847, Principles of Physiology applied to Health

J. C. Prichard, 1785-1848, Ethnology
Edw. Copleston, 1776-1849, Theology
Anthony Todd Thomson, 1778-1849, Materia Medica
Edward Hawke Locker, 1777-1849, Lectures on the Bible and the Liturgy, etc.
William Kirby, 1759-1850, Entomology
Francis Jeffrey, 1773-1850, Essay on Taste, Critical Essays (Edinburgh Review)
Edward Bickersteth, 1786-1850, Scripture Help, Guide to the Prophecies
George Dunbar, 1774-1851, Greek Lexicon
John Pye Smith, 1774-1851, Scripture and Geology
Richard Phillips, 1778-1851, Chemistry
George Crabbe, 1779-1851, Dictionary of Synonyms
John Chas. Tarver, 1790-1851, English and French Dictionary
Samuel Lee, 1783-1852, Oriental Languages
John Dalrymple, 1804-1852, Anatomy of the Eye
William Jay, 1769-1853, Sermons
Ralph Wardlaw, 1779-1853, Theology, Church Establishments
James F. W. Johnston, 1796-1853, Agricultural Chemistry
F. W. Robertson, 1816-1853, Sermons, Lectures
George Stanley Faber, 1773-1854, Christian Evidences, Prophetical Interpretation
Edward Forbes, 1815-1854, Geology, Natural History
Julius C. Hare, 1796-1855, Theology
Sir H. de la Beche, 1796-1855, Geology

IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.	IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.
A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.	A.D.
1800 John Wilson, 1788-1855, The Isle of Palms, Trials of Margaret Lindsay, etc.	1800 James Silk Buckingham, 1786-1855, Travels	1800 Martin Barry, 1802-1855, Physiology	1800	1800 John Hill Burton, b. 1809, Benthamiana, 1843; History of Scotland, 1853	1800
Mary Russell Mitford, 1789-1855, Poems, Our Village, and other Sketches	Josiah Conder, 1789-1855, The Modern Traveller	Thomas Tooke, 1771-1856, Political Economy, History of Prices William Buckland, 1784-1856, Geology William Yarrell, 1784-1856, Natural History	William Carleton, b. 1798, Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry John Clare, b. 1793, Poems of Rural Life, 1820	Thomas Carlyle, b. 1795, Life of Schiller, 1824; French Revolution, 1837	W. B. Carpenter, b. 1813, Principles of Physiology, 1839
Robert Montgomery, 1807-1855, Omnipresence of the Deity, and other Poems Charlotte Brontë (Currer Bell), 1824-1855, Jane Eyre, and other Novels Douglas Jerrold, 1803-1857, Men of Character, Mrs. Caudle's Lectures, Dramas	Sir Edward Parry, 1790-1855, Voyages to the Arctic Regions Sir T. L. Mitchell, 1792-1855, Expeditions into the Interior of Australia	John Ayrton Paris, 1785-1856, On Diet Sir William Hamilton, 1788-1856, Metaphysics John Forbes Royle, 1797-1856, Botany T. D. Hincks, 1767-1857, Oriental Languages	W. Wilkie Collins, b. 1825, Antonina, 1850; The Woman in White, 1860 Eliza Cook, b. 1817, Poems	William Chambers, b. 1800, Book of Scotland Robert Chambers, b. 1802, Traditions of Edinburgh F. R. Chesney, b. 1789, Survey of the Euphrates and the Tigris, 1850 Mrs. Cowden Clarke, b. 1809, Concordance to Shakespeare, 1845 J. Payne Collier, b. 1789, Works of Shakespeare, 1844 G. Lillie Craik, b. 1799, Pursuit of Knowledge under Difficulties, 1831 Sir E. S. Creasy, b. 1812, The Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World Peter Cunningham, b. 1816, Handbook of London, 1849	John Cumming, b. 1810, Prophetical Interpretation
Sydney, Lady Morgan, 1785-1859, Wild Irish Girl, and other Novels Leigh Hunt, 1784-1859, Poems, Essays Thomas De Quincey, 1786-1859, Confessions of an English Opium Eater, Essays Thomas K. Hervey, 1804-1859, Poems, Essays	John Britton, 1771-1857, Topography, Antiquities John Macgregor, 1799-1859, Commercial Statistics Henry Hallam, 1778-1859, Constitutional History of England Charles Macfarlane, 1800-1858, Travels, History John Lee, 1779-1859, Ecclesiastical History	Andrew Ure, 1778-1857, Chemistry, Dictionary of Arts and Manufactures John Wilson Croker, 1780-1857, Politics, Criticism John Harris, 1804-1857, Mammon (prize essay), Theology and Physics J. M. Kemble, 1807-1857, Anglo-Saxon Language and Literature Hugh Miller, 1802-1856, Geology	Chas. Dickens, b. 1812, Sketches by Boz, 1836 B. Disraeli, b. 1805, Vivian Grey, 1828	Wm. Hepworth Dixon, b. 1821, John Howard, a Memoir, 1849 Alexander Dyce, b. 1798, Editions of Greene, Peele, Marlowe, Webster, Shakespeare Sir Henry Ellis, b. 1777, Introduction to Domesday Book, 1833	Charles Darwin, b. 1816, Voyage of a Naturalist, 1838; Origin of Species, 1859 A. De Morgan, b. 1806, Elements of Arithmetic, 1830
G. P. R. James, 1801-1860, Novels	Sir James Stephen, 1788-1859, History, Essays in Ecclesiastical Biography Thomas, Lord Macaulay, 1800-1859, Essays, History of England	Stephen Robert Rintoul, 1787-1858, Politics, 'Spectator' Newspaper George Combe, 1788-1858, Phrenology, Constitution of Man Jane Webb Loudon, 1800-1858, Gardening for Ladies William J. Broderip, 1788-1859, Natural History Dionysius Lardner, 1793-1859, Physics			Sir Charles Eastlake, P.R.A., b. 1793; Contributions to the Literature of the Fine Arts William Ellis, b. 1800, Social Economy for Schools
Anna Jameson, 1794-1860, Female Characters of Shakspere, Handbook to Galleries of Art Albert Smith, 1816-1860, Novels, Tales, Burlesque Sketches Lady Charlotte Bury, 1775-1861, Novels J. W. Cunningham, 1778-1861, The Velvet Cushion, Poems Catherine Gore, 1800-1861, Mothers and Daughters, The Banker's Wife, and other Novels Elizabeth Barrett Browning, 1809-1861, Aurora Leigh, and other Poems Charles James Lever, 1808-1861, Harry Lorrequer, Charles O'Malley'	William Mure, 1799-1860, History of Greek Literature Sir Henry G. Ward, 1796-1860, Travels David Jardine, 1794-1860, History of the Gunpowder Plot Sir Charles Fellows, 1799-1860, Travels in Asia Minor Sir Francis Palgrave, 1788-1861, History of the Anglo-Saxons John, Lord Campbell, 1779-1861, Lives of the Lord Chancellors and Chief Justices of England	John P. Nichol, 1804-1859, Astronomy Alexander Fletcher, 1778-1860, Theology John Narrien, 1782-1860, Mathematics, Military Engineering William Spence, 1783-1860, Entomology Horace Hayman Wilson, 1786-1860, Sanskrit Language R. Bentley Todd, 1809-1860, Surgery Sir Howard Douglas, 1775-1861, Military and Naval Defences T. Southwood Smith, 1788-1861, Philosophy of Health W. J. Donaldson, 1812-1861, Philology	Elizabeth C. Gaskell, b. 1822, Mary Barton, 1848 T. C. Grattan, b. 1797, Highways and Byways, 1838	William Farr, b. 1807, On Vital Statistics, 1837 J. D. Forbes, b. 1809, Norway and its Glaciers, 1853 John Forster, b. 1812, Life of Oliver Goldsmith, 1848 J. A. Froude, b. 1818, History of England, 1856 George Gilfillan, b. 1813, Bards of the Bible, 1850; Gallery of Literary Portraits G. R. Gleig, b. 1795, Military History of Great Britain George Grote, b. 1794, History of Greece, 1846	Michael Faraday, b. 1794, On Chemical Manipulation, 1817 James Fergusson, b. 1808, Principles of Beauty in Art, 1849; Handbook of Architecture J. F. Ferrier, b. 1808, Institutes of Metaphysics, 1854 Albany W. Fonblanque, b. 1797, England under Seven Administrations, 1837 W. E. Gladstone, b. 1809, The State considered in its Relations with the Church, 1840 George Godwin, b. 1815, The Builder John Gould, b. 1804, A Century of Birds from the Himalaya Mountains, 1830 Thomas Graham, b. 1805, Elements of Chemistry, 1842 Robert Grant, b. 1800, History of Physical Astronomy, 1852 Thomas Guthrie, b. 1800, The Gospel in Ezekiel; Pleas for Ragged Schools.
W. H. Ainsworth, born 1805, Rookwood, 1834 W. E. Aytoun, b. 1813, Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers, 1849 P. J. Bailey, b. 1816, Festus, 1839 John S. Blackie, b. 1809, Lays and Legends of Greece Sir John Bowring, b. 1792, Specimens of the Russian Poets, 1821 C. Shirley Brooks, b. 1815, Plays, 1850; The Silver Cord, 1861 Frances Browne, b. 1818, Poems Robert Browning, b. 1812, Paracelsus, a Poem, 1835	Sir A. Alison, b. 1792, History of Europe, 1839 Charles Babbage, b. 1792, Economy of Manufactures and Machinery, 1832 Edward Baines, b. 1800, History of Cotton Manufactures, 1835 Robert Bell, b. 1800, Lives of the English Poets George Borrow, b. 1803, The Bible in Spain; The Zincali, 1841 Sir David Brewster, b. 1781, On some Principles of Light, 1813 Henry Lord Brougham, b. 1779, Enquiry into the Colonial Policy of the European Powers, 1803; Historical Memoirs; Political Philosophy Henry T. Buckle, b. 1822, History of Civilization in England (died in 1862)	Joseph Bosworth, b. 1788, Elements of Anglo-Saxon Grammar, 1823 W. T. Brande, b. 1780, Outline of Geology, 1817; Manual of Chemistry, 1819 Sir B. C. Brodie, b. 1783, Physiological Researches on the Influence of the Brain on the Action of the Heart, 1811	Anna Maria Hall, b. 1802, Sketches of Irish Character Mary Howitt, b. 1804, Forest Minstrel, and other Poems, 1823	Samuel Carter Hall, b. 1801, Ireland: its Scenery and Character; 'Art Journal,' 1839 J. O. Halliwell, b. 1821, Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words, 1846; Life of Shakespeare, 1848 William Hanna, b. 1808, Memoir of Dr. Chalmers Arthur Helps, b. 1818, Essays written in the Intervals of Business, 1841; The Spanish Conquest in America, 1855 Walter Farquhar Hook, D.D., b. 1798, Ecclesiastical Biography, 1845-1852; Church Dictionary, 1854	J. Renn Hampden, b. 1792, Bampton Lectures, 1832 Sir W. Snow Harris, b. 1791, Rudimentary Laws of Electricity, 1834 Sir J. F. W. Herschel, b. 1790, Examples of the Application of the Calculus to Finite Differences, 1820; Outlines of Astronomy, 1849 M. D. Hill, b. 1792, Jurisprudence; Reformatory Legislation J. R. Hind, b. 1823, Account of Recent Comets, 1845 J. D. Hooker, b. 1817, Flora Antarctica; Flora Indica

IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.
A.D. 1800	A.D. 1800 William Howitt, b. 1795, Book of the Seasons, 1831; History of Priestcraft, 1833	A.D. 1800
John Keble, b. 1790, Christian Year, 1827; Lyra Innocentium	Charles Knight, b. 1791, Results of Machinery, 1830; Pictorial Shakespeare, 1842	T. H. Key, b. 1799, Latin Grammar, 1846
Charles Kingsley, b. 1819, Alton Locke, 1846
James Sheridan Knowles, b. 1784, Leo, or the Gipsy, 1809
Walter Savage Landor, b. 1775, Poems, 1795; Imaginary Conversations, 1824-1829	Austen Henry Layard, b. 1817, Nineveh and its Remains, 1849	Edwin Lankester, b. 1814, Natural History
Mark Lemon, b. 1809, The Drama; Editor of 'Punch'	George H. Lewes, b. 1817, Biographical History of Philosophy, 1845	R. G. Latham, b. 1812, Varieties of Mankind, 1850
Samuel Lover, b. 1797, Rory O'More, 1831; Legends and Stories of Ireland	David Livingstone, b. 1817, Missionary Travels and Researches in South Africa, 1857	Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, b. 1806, Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, 1849
Sir E. L. Bulwer Lytton, b. 1805, Falkland, 1827; The Caxtons, 1849	George Long, b. 1800, Civil Wars of Rome, 1844-1848; Editor of 'Penny Cyclopædia'	John Lindley, b. 1799, Monographia Rosarium, 1820
		Alexander William Crawford, Lord Lindsay, b. 1812, History of Christian Art, 1847; Lives of the Lindsays, 1849
		Sir Charles Lyell, b. 1797, Principles of Geology, 1833
Charles Mackay, b. 1813, Poems: Life and Liberty in America	J. R. Macculloch, b. 1790, Principles of Political Economy, 1825	F. D. Maurice, b. 1805, The Kingdom of Christ, 1841; Religions of the World; Theological Essays, 1853
Gerald Massey, b. 1828, Poems	Sir Frederick Madden, b. 1801, Layamon's Brut, 1847; Wycliffe's Bible, 1850	Henry Melvill, Sermons, 1833
H. H. Milman, b. 1791, Fazio, a Tragedy, 1815; History of Christianity 1840	Samuel Roffey Maitland, b. 1792, The Dark Ages, 1844; Essays on the Reformation in England	Edward Miall, b. 1809, Voluntary Education; Ethics of Nonconformity
R. Monckton Milnes, b. 1809, Poems; Life of John Keats, 1848	Harriet Martineau, b. 1802, Illustrations of Political Economy, 1834; History of the Thirty Years' Peace, 1850	John Stuart Mill, b. 1806, System of Logic, 1843; Principles of Political Economy, 1848
Dinah Maria Mulock, b. 1826, John Halifax, Gentleman, 1856	David Masson, b. 1822, Life of Milton, 1859	William Allen Miller, b. 1817, Elements of Chemistry, 1857
	Henry Mayhew, b. 1812, London Labor and the London Poor	Sir R. I. Murchison, b. 1792, Silurian System, 1839
Hon. Mrs. Norton, b. 1808, The Undying One, and other Poems, 1830		Francis W. Newman, b. 1805, Phases of Faith, 1850; History of the Hebrew Monarchy, 1847
		John Henry Newman, b. 1801, Tracts for the Times, 1833-1836; Religious Development; Catholicism in England
		Richard Owen, b. 1804, Directions for preparing Animals and Parts of Animals for Anatomical Purposes, 1835
Bryan Waller Procter, b. 1790, (Barry Cornwall,) Dramatic Scenes, and other Poems, 1819	James Robinson Planché, b. 1796, History of British Costume, 1834; Dramas	John Philipps, b. 1800, Treatise on Geology, 1837-1839; Rivers of Yorkshire, 1853
		E. B. Pusey, b. 1800, Tracts for the Times, 1833-1836
Leitch Ritchie, b. 1800, Novels and Tales	W. Howard Russell, b. 1821, War in the Crimea, 1855	Sir H. C. Rawlinson, b. 1810, Philology
		Charles Richardson, b. 1775, Dictionary of the English Language, 1837
		Henry Rogers, b. 1806, Life of John Howe, 1836; Contributions to 'Edinburgh Review'
		Peter Mark Roget, b. 1780, Animal and Vegetable Physiology, 1834
		J. Forbes Royle, Flora of the Himalayan Mountains, 1839
		John Ruskin, b. 1819, Modern Painters, 1843
Catherine Sinclair, b. 1800, Beatrice: or, the Unknown Relatives, 1852	Earl Stanhope (Lord Mahon), b. 1805, History of the War of Succession in Spain, 1832; History of England, 1836	Edward Sabine, b. 1790, Terrestrial Magnetism
		Adam Sedgwick, b. 1786, Geology
		Samuel Smiles, Self Help, 1859

IMAGINATION.	FACT.	SPECULATIVE AND SCIENTIFIC.
A.D. 1800	A.D. 800 Sir James Stephen, b. 1790, Ecclesiastical Biography	A.D. 1800 William Smith, b. 1814, Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, 1842
	William Stirling, b. 1818, Annals of the Artists of Spain, 1848	Mary Somerville, b. 1790, Mechanism of the Heavens, 1832
	Agnes Strickland, b. 1805, Lives of the Queens of England, 1840-1851; Letters of Mary Queen of Scots, 1842	Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, Sinai and Palestine in connection with their History, 1856
		John Bird Sumner, b. 1780, Records of Creation, 1816
Henry Taylor, Isaac Comnenus, a Play, 1827	Sir James Emerson Tennent, b. 1804, History of Modern Greece, 1830; Ceylon, an Account of the Island, 1850	Isaac Taylor, b. 1787, Elements of Thought, 1824
Alfred Tennyson, b. 1810, Poems, 1830		Alfred Swaine Taylor, b. 1808, On Poisons in Relation to Medical Jurisprudence and Medicine, 1848
W. M. Thackeray, b. 1811, Paris Sketch Book, by Michael Angelo Titmarsh, 1840	Connop Thirlwall, b. 1797, History of Greece, 1845-1852	Tom Taylor, b. 1817, Life of Haydon, 1853
Frances Trollope, b. 1790, The Abbess, 1832	William J. Thoms, b. 1803, Early Prose Romances, 1828; Editor of 'Notes and Queries'	R. C. Trench, b. 1807, Notes on the Miracles, 1846; Philology
Martin Farquhar Tupper, b. 1810, Proverbial Philosophy, 1839	James Thorne, b. 1815, Rambles by Rivers, 1844
	John Timbs, b. 1801, Laconics, 1825-1826; Year Book of Facts, 1839
	Robert Vaughan, b. 1800; Life of Wycliffe, 1828
Samuel Warren, b. 1807, Passages from the Diary of a Late Physician, 1830-1838	Sir J. G. Wilkinson, b. 1798, Materia Hieroglyphica, 1828; Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians, 1836	Archbishop Whately, b. 1787, Bampton Lectures, 1822; Elements of Logic, 1826
Alaric A. Watts, b. 1799, Poems, 1822	Christopher Wordsworth, b. 1808, Athens and Attica, 1836; Greece Pictorial, Descriptive, and Historical	Charles Wheatstone, b. 1802, Binocular Vision; Electric Telegraph
William Henry Wills, b. 1810, Old Leaves gathered from Household Words, 1860	Thomas Wright, b. 1810, Queen Elizabeth and her Times, 1838; The Celt, the Roman, and the Saxon, 1853	William Whewell, b. 1795, Bridgewater Treatise on Astronomy, 1833
	Matthew Digby Wyatt, b. 1820, Specimens of the Geometrical Mosaics of the Middle Ages, 1848	Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford, b. 1805; Life of William Wilberforce, 1838; Sermons
		Robert Willis, b. 1800, Architecture of the Middle Ages, 1835; Principles of Mechanics, 1841
		Forbes Winslow, b. 1811, Application of the Principles of Phrenology to the Elucidation and Cure of Insanity, 1831
		Nicholas Wiseman, b. 1802, Lectures on the Doctrines and Practices of the Catholic Church, 1836
		Ralph Nicholson Wornum, b. 1812, History of Painting, 1847; Analysis of Ornament, 1856

POPULATION OF GREAT BRITAIN.

COUNTIES OF ENGLAND.	ESTIMATE, 1700.	ESTIMATE, 1750.	CENSUS, 1801.	COUNTIES OF WALES.	1801.
Bedford	48,500	53,900	65,500	Anglesey	35,000
Berks	74,700	92,700	112,800	Brecon	32,700
Buckingham	80,500	90,700	111,000	Cardigan	44,100
Cambridge	76,000	72,000	92,000	Carmarthen	69,600
Chester	107,000	131,600	198,100	Carnarvon	43,000
Cornwall	105,800	135,000	194,500	Denbigh	62,400
Cumberland	62,300	86,900	121,100	Flint	41,000
Derby	93,800	109,500	166,500	Glamorgan	74,000
Devon	248,200	272,200	354,400	Merioneth	30,500

POPULATION OF GREAT BRITAIN—(CONTINUED).

COUNTIES OF ENGLAND.	ESTIMATE, 1700.	ESTIMATE, 1750.	CENSUS, 1801.
Dorset	90,000	96,400	119,100
Durham	95,500	135,000	165,700
Essex	159,200	167,800	231,000
Gloucester	155,200	207,800	259,100
Hereford	60,900	74,100	92,100
Hertford	70,500	86,500	100,800
Huntingdon	34,700	32,500	38,800
Kent	153,800	190,000	317,800
Lancaster	166,200	297,400	695,100
Leicester	80,000	95,000	134,400
Lincoln	180,000	160,200	215,500
Middlesex	624,200	641,500	845,400
Monmouth	29,700	40,600	47,100
Norfolk	210,200	215,100	282,400
Northampton	119,500	123,300	136,100
Northumberland	118,000	141,700	162,300
Nottingham	65,200	77,600	145,000
Oxford	79,000	92,400	113,200
Rutland	16,600	13,800	16,900
Salop (Shrop.)	101,600	130,300	172,200
Somerset	195,900	224,500	282,800
Hampshire	118,700	137,500	226,900
Stafford	117,200	160,000	247,100
Suffolk	152,700	156,800	217,400
Surrey	154,900	207,100	278,000
Sussex	91,400	107,400	164,600
Warwick	96,600	140,000	215,100
Westmoreland	28,600	36,300	43,000
Wilts	153,900	168,400	191,200
Worcester	88,200	108,000	143,900
York—East Riding	96,200	85,500	144,000
North Riding	98,600	117,200	160,500
West Riding	236,700	361,500	582,700
England	5,108,500	6,017,700	8,609,000
Wales	366,500	449,300	559,000
	5,475,000	6,467,000	9,168,000
Scotland			1,652,400
Total, Great Britain			10,820,400

 The numbers of the Army, Navy, etc., are added in these enumerations to the numbers of the Resident Population.

COUNTIES OF WALES.	1801.
Montgomery	49,300
Pembroke	58,200
Radnor	19,700
Total	559,000

SHIRES OF SCOTLAND.	1801.
Aberdeen	127,200
Argyll	74,300
Ayr	87,100
Banff	37,000
Berwick	31,600
Bute	12,200
Caithness	23,400
Clackmannan	11,200
Dumbarton	21,400
Dumfries	56,400
Edinburgh	127,100
Elgin	27,600
Fife	96,900
Forfar	102,400
Haddington	31,000
Inverness	76,800
Kincardine	27,200
Kinross	6,900
Kircudbright	30,200
Lanark	151,600
Linlithgow	18,400
Nairn	8,500
Orkney and Shetland	48,400
Peebles	9,000
Perth	130,600
Renfrew	80,700
Ross and Cromarty	57,200
Roxburgh	34,800
Selkirk	5,200
Stirling	52,500
Sutherland	23,900
Wigton	23,700
Total	1,652,400

POPULATION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

COUNTIES OF ENGLAND.	1821.	1831.
Bedford	83,716	95,383
Berks	131,977	145,289
Bucks	134,068	146,529
Cambridge	121,909	143,955
Chester	270,098	334,410
Cornwall	257,447	302,440
Cumberland	156,124	169,681
Derby	213,333	237,170
Devon	439,040	494,168
Dorset	144,499	159,252
Durham	207,673	253,827
Essex	289,424	317,237
Gloucester	335,843	386,904
Hampshire	283,298	314,313
Hereford	103,243	110,976
Hertford	129,714	143,341
Huntingdon	48,771	53,149
Kent	426,016	479,155
Lancaster	1,052,859	1,336,854
Leicester	174,571	197,003
Lincoln	283,058	317,244
Middlesex	1,144,531	1,358,541
Monmouth	71,833	98,130
Norfolk	344,368	390,054
Northampton	162,483	179,276
Northumberland	198,965	222,912
Nottingham	186,873	225,320
Oxford	136,971	151,726
Rutland	18,487	19,385
Salop	206,153	222,503
Somerset	355,314	403,908
Stafford	341,040	410,483
Suffolk	270,542	296,304
Surrey	398,658	486,326
Sussex	233,019	272,328
Warwick	274,392	336,988
Westmoreland	51,359	55,041
Wilts	222,157	239,181
Worcester	184,424	211,356
York—East Riding	190,449	204,008
North Riding	183,381	190,873
West Riding	799,357	976,415
Total	11,261,437	13,089,338

PROVINCES OF IRELAND.	1821.	1831.
Leinster	1,757,492	1,909,713
Munster	1,935,612	2,227,152
Ulster	1,998,494	2,286,622
Connaught	1,110,229	1,343,914
Total	6,801,827	7,767,401

COUNTIES OF WALES.	1821.	1831.
Anglesey	45,063	48,325
Brecon	43,613	47,763
Cardigan	57,784	64,780
Carmarthen	90,239	100,655
Carnarvon	57,958	65,753
Denbigh	76,511	83,167
Flint	53,784	60,012
Glamorgan	101,737	126,612
Merioneth	34,382	35,609
Montgomery	59,899	66,485
Pembroke	74,009	81,424
Radnor	22,459	24,651
Total	717,438	805,236

SHIRES OF SCOTLAND.	1821.	1831.
Aberdeen	155,387	177,651
Argyll	97,316	101,425
Ayr	127,299	145,055
Banff	43,561	48,604
Berwick	33,385	34,048
Bute	13,797	14,151
Caithness	30,238	34,529
Clackmannan	13,263	14,729
Dumbarton	27,317	33,211
Dumfries	70,878	73,770
Edinburgh	191,514	219,592
Elgin	31,162	34,231
Fife	114,556	128,839
Forfar	113,430	139,606
Haddington	35,127	36,145
Inverness	90,157	94,797
Kincardine	29,118	31,431
Kinross	7,762	9,072
Kirkcudbright	38,903	40,590
Lanark	244,387	316,818
Linlithgow	22,685	23,291
Nairn	9,006	9,354
Orkney and Shetland	53,124	58,239
Peebles	10,046	10,578
Perth	129,050	142,894
Renfrew	112,175	133,443
Ross and Cromarty	68,828	74,820
Roxburgh	40,892	43,663
Selkirk	6,637	6,833
Stirling	65,376	72,021
Sutherland	23,840	25,518
Wigton	32,340	36,258
Total	2,093,456	2,365,807

POPULATION IN 1811.

Great Britain.	Males.	Females.	Total.
England	4,555,257	4,944,143	9,499,400
Wales	289,414	317,966	607,380
Scotland	825,377	979,487	1,804,864
Army, Navy, etc.	640,500	.....	640,500
Totals	6,310,548	6,241,596	12,552,144

	1821.			1831.
	Males.	Females.	Total.	Males.	Females.	Total.
England	5,483,679	5,777,758	11,261,437	6,375,394	6,713,944	13,089,338
Wales	350,487	366,951	717,438	394,075	411,161	805,236
Scotland	983,552	1,109,904	2,093,456	1,115,132	1,250,675	2,365,807
Ireland	3,341,926	3,459,901	6,801,827	3,794,880	3,972,521	7,767,401
Total	10,159,644	10,714,514	20,874,158	11,679,481	12,348,301	24,027,782

POPULATION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

COUNTIES OF ENGLAND.	1851.	1861.
Bedford	124,478	135,287
Berks	170,065	176,256
Buckingham	163,723	167,993
Cambridge	185,405	176,016
Chester	455,725	505,128
Cornwall	355,558	369,390
Cumberland	195,492	205,276
Derby	296,084	339,327
Devon	567,098	584,373
Dorset	184,207	188,789
Durham	390,997	508,666
Essex	369,318	404,851
Gloucester	458,805	485,770
Hampshire	405,370	481,815
Hereford	115,489	123,712
Hertford	167,298	173,280
Huntingdon	64,188	64,250
Kent	615,766	733,887
Lancaster	2,031,236	2,429,440
Leicester	230,308	237,412
Lincoln	407,222	412,246
Middlesex	1,886,576	2,206,485
Monmouth	157,418	174,633
Norfolk	442,714	434,798
Northampton	212,380	227,704
Northumberland	303,568	343,025
Nottingham	270,427	293,867
Oxford	170,439	170,944
Rutland	22,983	21,861
Salop	229,341	240,959
Somerset	443,916	444,873
Stafford	608,716	746,943
Suffolk	337,215	337,070
Surrey	683,082	831,093
Sussex	336,844	363,735
Warwick	475,013	561,855
Westmoreland	58,287	68,817
Wilts	254,221	249,311
Worcester	276,926	307,397
York—East Riding	257,286	280,660
North Riding	215,214	245,154
West Riding	1,325,495	1,507,796
Total	16,921,888	18,954,444

PROVINCES OF IRELAND.	1851.	1861.
Leinster	1,672,591	1,477,635
Munster	1,857,412	1,513,558
Ulster	2,011,756	1,914,236
Connaught	1,010,211	913,135
Total	6,551,970	5,798,564

COUNTIES OF WALES.	1851.	1861.
Anglesey	57,327	54,609
Brecon	61,474	61,627
Cardigan	70,796	72,245
Carmarthen	110,632	111,796
Carnarvon	87,870	95,694
Denbigh	92,583	100,778
Flint	68,156	69,737
Glamorgan	231,849	317,752
Merioneth	38,843	38,963
Montgomery	67,335	66,919
Pembroke	94,140	96,278
Radnor	24,716	25,382
Total	1,005,721	1,111,780

SHIRES OF SCOTLAND.	1851.	1861.
Aberdeen	212,032	221,569
Argyll	89,298	79,734
Ayr	189,858	198,971
Banff	54,171	59,215
Berwick	36,297	36,613
Bute	16,608	16,331
Caithness	38,709	41,111
Clackmannan	22,951	21,450
Dumbarton	45,103	57,034
Dumfries	78,123	75,878
Edinburgh	259,435	273,997
Elgin	38,959	42,695
Fife	153,546	154,770
Forfar	191,264	204,425
Haddington	36,386	37,634
Inverness	96,500	88,888
Kincardine	34,598	34,466
Kinross	8,924	7,977
Kirkcudbright	43,121	42,495
Lanark	530,169	631,566
Linlithgow	30,135	38,645
Nairn	9,956	10,065
Orkney and Shetland	62,533	64,065
Peebles	10,738	11,408
Perth	138,660	133,500
Renfrew	161,091	177,561
Ross and Cromarty	82,707	81,406
Roxburgh	51,642	54,119
Selkirk	9,809	10,449
Stirling	86,237	91,236
Sutherland	25,793	25,246
Wigton	43,389	42,095
Total	2,888,742	3,062,294

	1851.			1861.
	Males.	Females.	Total.	Males.	Females.	Total.
England	8,281,734	8,640,154	16,921,888	9,224,244	9,730,200	18,954,444
Wales	499,491	506,230	1,005,721	552,015	559,765	1,111,780
Scotland	1,375,479	1,513,263	2,888,742	1,449,848	1,612,446	3,062,294
Ireland	3,190,507	3,361,463	6,551,970	2,836,977	2,961,587	5,798,564
Total	13,347,211	14,021,110	27,368,321	14,063,084	14,863,998	28,927,082

EXPORTS.

REAL OR DECLARED VALUE OF BRITISH AND IRISH PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES EXPORTED, 1815 TO 1850.

1815	£51,608,028	1827	£37,181,335	1839	£53,233,580
1816	41,657,873	1828	36,812,756	1840	51,406,430
1817	41,761,132	1829	35,812,623	1841	51,631,623
1818	46,603,249	1830	38,271,597	1842	47,381,023
1819	35,208,321	1831	37,164,372	1843	52,278,149
1820	36,124,652	1832	36,450,594	1844	58,584,292
1821	36,659,630	1833	39,667,347	1845	60,111,081
1822	36,968,964	1834	41,649,191	1846	57,786,875
1823	35,158,048	1835	47,372,270	1847	58,842,377
1824	38,396,300	1836	53,368,571	1848	52,849,445
1825	38,877,388	1837	42,069,245	1849	63,596,025
1826	31,536,723	1838	50,060,970	1850	70,367,885

IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN GRAIN.

The framers of the law of 1829 intended it to prevent fluctuations in the price of English grain, but in seven years, notwithstanding the provision, the price varied from 75*s.* 3*d.* in 1829 to 36*s.* 8*d.* in 1835, descending regularly every year; while in the three years, 1829, 1830, and 1831, there were imported 4,557,736 quarters. The total quantity imported during the next ten years kept increasing, with occasional exceptions; but in 1845, waiting the repeal of the duty, the importation was only 1,142,700 quarters, of which only 315,615 were taken for home consumption. In 1846, after the repeal, there were imported 1,437,944 quarters, and 1,995,852 were taken for home consumption. In 1847 there were imported 2,650,058 quarters; besides 6,329,646 cwts. of wheat-meal, 3,614,637 quarters of Indian corn, and 1,451,020 cwts. of Indian corn-meal. In 1848 there were imported 2,591,013 quarters of wheat, 1,765,175 cwts. of flour, and 1,586,781 quarters of Indian corn. In 1849 the imports were 3,872,134 quarters of wheat, 3,371,301 cwts. of flour, 2,247,424 quarters of Indian corn, and 102,173 cwts. of Indian corn-meal. In 1850 were imported 3,754,593 quarters of wheat, 3,855,050 cwts. of flour, 1,286,264 quarters of Indian corn, and 11,401 cwts. of meal.

From 1851 the computation has been made in cwts., and the wheat and flour placed under the head of wheat, 1 cwt. of flour being reckoned equal to 1¼ cwt. of grain. In 1851 there was imported a total of 23,161,718 cwts. of wheat, and 7,747,011 cwts. of Indian corn. In 1852, wheat, 18,092,627 cwts.; Indian corn, 6,305,472 cwts. In 1853, wheat 27,077,079 cwts.; Indian corn, 6,619,213 cwts. In 1854, wheat, 19,426,781 cwts.; Indian corn, 5,784,420 cwts. In 1855, wheat, 13,940,322 cwts.; Indian corn, 5,208,570 cwts. In 1856, wheat, 22,611,568 cwts.; Indian corn, 7,619,199 cwts. In 1857, wheat, 17,620,499 cwts.; Indian corn, 4,931,927 cwts. In 1858, wheat, 22,300,941 cwts.; Indian corn, 7,503,536 cwts. In 1859, wheat, 21,397,734 cwts.; Indian corn, 5,632,727 cwts. In 1860, wheat, 31,841,926 cwts.; Indian corn, 7,936,123 cwts. In 1861, wheat, 37,646,705 cwts.; Indian corn, 13,244,366 cwts. In 1862, wheat, 50,042,394 cwts.; Indian corn, 11,694,818 cwts. In 1863, wheat, 30,887,892 cwts.; Indian corn, 12,736,591 cwts. In 1864, wheat, 28,837,203 cwts.; Indian corn, 6,285,938 cwts. In 1865, wheat, 25,813,552 cwts.; Indian corn, 7,096,033 cwts. In 1866, wheat, 29,371,679 cwts.; Indian corn, 14,332,863 cwts. In 1867, wheat, 39,136,780 cwts.; Indian corn, 8,540,429 cwts.

AVERAGE GAZETTE PRICES OF BRITISH WHEAT, BARLEY, AND OATS, PER IMPERIAL QUARTER.

	1847.	1848.	1849.	1850.	1860.	1867.
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Wheat	69 9	50 6	44 3	40 3	53 3	64 5
Barley	44 2	31 6	27 9	23 5	36 7	40 0
Oats	28 8	20 6	17 6	16 5	24 5	26 0

QUANTITIES OF BRITISH WHEAT, BARLEY, AND OATS SOLD IN THE PRINCIPAL MARKET TOWNS OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

The Returns were from 290 towns previous to 1865, since that date they have been from only 150 towns.

[IN QUARTERS.]	1847.	1848.	1849.	1850.	1860.	1867.
Wheat	4,637,617	5,399,834	4,453,983	4,688,247	4,623,457	2,724,673
Barley	2,011,130	2,401,130	2,099,821	2,235,271	1,787,056	1,575,733
Oats	960,334	1,022,875	851,030	866,082	495,880	284,776

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP.

FROM THE CENSUS, MARCH 30TH, 1851.

[This classification was not repeated in 1861.]

ENGLAND AND WALES.

	Total Number of Places of Worship.	Open in the Morning.	Sittings (Morning).	Attendance (Morning).
Church of England	14,077	11,794	4,852,645	2,541,244
Methodists	11,974	5,566	1,538,612	808,752
Independents	3,244	2,261	901,352	524,612
Baptists	2,789	2,055	636,864	360,806
Quakers	371	362	94,805	14,364
Unitarians	229	183	60,044	28,483
Presbyterians	161	149	86,535	47,582
Plymouth Brethren	132	101	14,613	5,699
New Church (Swedenborgians)	50	44	11,465	4,846
Sandemanians	6	6	956	439
Moravians	32	28	8,543	4,993
Isolated Congregations	539	338	74,876	36,969
	33,574	22,887	8,281,310	4,378,789
FOREIGN PROTESTANTS.
Lutherans	6	6	2,172	1,152
French Protestants	3	2	530	225
Reformed Church, Netherlands	1	1	350	70
German Protestant Reformers	1	1	200	120
	11	10	3,252	1,567
OTHER CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.
Roman Catholics	570	542	175,309	252,783
Greek Church	3	3	291	240
German Catholics	1	1	300	500
Italian Reformers	1	0	0	0
Catholic and Apostolic (Irvingites)	32	29	5,545	3,176
Latter Day Saints	222	147	23,413	7,517
	829	722	205,858	264,216
Jews	53	50	8,100	2,910
Total	34,467	23,669	8,498,520	4,647,482

SCOTLAND.

	Total Number of Places of Worship.	Open in the Morning.	Sittings (Morning).	Attendance (Morning).
Established Church of Scotland	1,183	1,022	713,567	351,454
Other Presbyterians	1,431	1,249	743,773	467,020
Episcopal Church	134	116	35,769	26,966
Independents	192	169	70,851	26,392
Baptists	119	98	24,330	9,208
Quakers	7	7	2,153	196
Unitarians	5	5	2,438	863
Methodists	82	65	21,768	8,937
Evangelical Union	28	26	10,589	3,895
Other Protestants	13	12	1,800	667
Isolated Congregations	60	41	9,321	2,871
Roman Catholics	117	101	48,771	43,878
Irvingites	3	3	675	272
Latter Day Saints	20	18	3,177	1,304
Jews	1	1	67	28
Total	3,395	2,933	1,689,049	943,951

ABSTRACT OF A LIST OF SUCH YEOMANRY AND VOLUNTEER CORPS AS HAVE BEEN ACCEPTED AND PLACED ON THE ESTABLISHMENT IN GREAT BRITAIN.

	Cav.	Infant.	Art.	Rank and File.
Aberdeen		3,400	120	3,520
Anglesea		1,000		1,000
Argyll		2,028	63	2,091
Ayr	144	2,677		2,691
Banff		960	80	1,022
Bedford	177	1,801		1,978
Berks	634	3,006		3,484
Berwick	160	772		911
Brecon		1,196		1,196
Bucks	1,122	2,426		3,121
Bute		38		90
Caithness		1,272		1,320
Cambridge	163	2,485		2,500
Cardigan		567		531
Carmarthen	120	2,316		2,347
Carnarvon		1,100		1,073
Chester	732	4,841	105	5,372
Clackmannan	40	296		336
Cinque Ports
Cornwall	383	5,432	2,328	7,772
Cromarty		160		164
Cumberland	56	3,431	330	3,736
Denbigh	194	2,344		2,464
Derby	330	5,277		5,852
Devon	1,873	13,197	1,325	15,212
Dorset	515	2,201		2,340
Dumbarton	88	605		630
Dumfries	84	1,875		1,879
Durham	573	3,814	300	4,440
Elgin		770		784
Essex	1,251	6,335		7,033
Fife	350	2,613	100	2,906
Flint	270	2,429		2,699
Forfar	47	2,692	70	2,717
Glamorgan	213	2,488		2,301
Gloucester	644	6,436	176	7,161
Hants	1,252	7,164	836	9,509
Hereford	180	3,720		3,532
Hertford	625	2,319	50	2,762
Huntingdon	166	840		1,006
Inverness		3,666		3,320
Kent	1,530	8,804	253	10,295
Kincardine		824		824
Kinross		280		280
Kircudbright	200	746		946
Lanark	65	4,448		4,513
Lancaster	586	13,710	560	14,278
Leicester	622	2,946		3,488
Lincoln	713	4,560		7,866
Linlithgow	80	800		638
Lothian, East	205	700		905
Lothian, Mid.	300	1,574		1,813
Loth. Mid. (Edinb. City)		4,858	415	4,757
London	560	13,338		12,460
Middlesex	82	8,299		8,370
Man, Isle of		695		693
Merioneth		464		464
Monmouth	125	1,624		1,656
Montgomery	120	1,560		1,680
Nairn		320		320
Norfolk	1,120	6,511	180	6,918
Northampton	1,037	3,430		4,089
Northumberland	517	4,411		4,726
Nottingham	472	3,635		4,107
Oxford	591	3,322		3,516
Orkney & Zetland
Peebles	52	480		532
Pembroke	440	1,852	70	2,701
Perth	160	3,897	68	4,036
Radnor		1,000		1,000
Renfrew		2,701		2,414
Ross		1,620		1,620
Roxburgh	108	960		1,060
Rutland	160	335		495
Salop	940	5,022		5,852
Selkirk	50	100		142
Somerset	1,544	7,747		9,080
Stafford	1,090	5,425		6,072
Stirling	308	1,318	65	1,667
Suffolk	769	6,837		7,332
Sutherland		1,092		1,092
Surrey	944	7,801		8,105
Sussex	1,024	6,114	637	6,198
Tower Hamlets		4,173		3,742
Warwick	708	3,874		4,146
Westminster	260	10,438		10,684
Westmoreland		1,420		1,420
Wight, Isle of	120	1,732	184	2,030
Wigton	105	624		729
Wilts	850	4,524		5,176
Worcester	494	4,046		4,304
York—N. Riding	267	4,381		4,683
E. Riding	382	3,473	61	3,890
W. Riding	1,606	12,990	50	14,006

Total of effective Rank and File	341,687
Field Officers	1,246
Captains	4,472
Subalterns	9,918
Staff Officers	1,100
Sergeants	14,787
Drummers	6,733
Grand Total	379,943

WHITEHALL, December 9, 1803.

REGINALD POLE CAREW.

PUBLIC INCOME AND EXPENDITURE, FROM 1815 TO 1850.

	Income.	Expenditure.
	Net Receipts.	Interest on Debt funded and unfunded.	Total Amount expended in the Year.
1815	£72,210,512	£31,576,074	£92,280,180
1816	62,264,546	32,938,751	65,169,771
1817	52,055,913	31,496,245	55,281,238
1818	53,747,795	30,880,244	53,348,578
1819	52,648,847	30,807,249	55,406,509
1820	54,282,953	31,157,846	54,457,247
1821	55,834,192	31,955,304	57,130,586
1822	55,663,650	29,921,493	53,710,624
1823	57,672,999	29,215,905	56,223,740
1824	59,362,403	29,066,350	59,231,161
1825	57,273,869	28,060,287	61,520,753
1826	54,894,989	28,076,957	55,081,073
1827	54,932,518	28,230,847	55,823,321
1828	55,187,142	28,095,506	54,171,141
1829	50,786,682	29,155,612	51,835,137
1830	50,056,616	29,118,858	49,078,108
1831	45,424,440	28,341,416	49,797,156
1832	46,988,735	28,323,751	46,379,692
1833	46,271,326	28,522,507	45,782,026
1834	46,425,263	28,504,096	46,678,079
1835	45,893,369	28,514,610	45,669,309
1836	48,591,180	29,243,598	48,093,196
1837	46,475,194	29,489,571	49,116,839
1838	47,333,460	29,260,238	47,686,183
1839	47,844,890	29,454,062	49,357,691
1840	47,567,565	29,381,718	49,169,552
1841	48,084,360	29,450,145	50,185,729
1842	46,965,631	29,428,120	50,945,169
1843	52,582,817	29,260,160	51,148,254
1844	54,003,754	30,495,459	52,211,000
1845	53,060,354	28,253,872	53,386,603
1846	53,790,138	28,077,987	50,943,830
1847	51,546,265	28,141,531	54,502,947
1848	53,388,717	28,563,517	54,185,136
1849	52,951,749	28,323,961	50,874,696
1850	52,810,680	28,091,590	50,231,874

SCHOOLS.—ENGLAND AND WALES.

CENSUS OF EDUCATION, 1851.

	Schools.	Scholars.
Military, Naval, Corporation, Workhouse, and Prison Schools	610	48,826
Endowed Schools—
Collegiate and Grammar Schools	566	35,612
Other endowed Schools	2,559	170,667
	3,125	206,279
Supported by Religious Bodies—
Church of England	10,555	929,474
Independents	453	50,186
Wesleyan Methodists	381	41,144
Roman Catholics	339	41,382
Undenominational	514	82,597
Others	466	44,003
	12,708	1,188,786
Ragged, Orphan, Blind, Deaf and Dumb, Factory, Colliery, and Mechanics' Institution Schools, Agricultural Schools, and other Public Schools	1,081	109,214
Total of Public Day Schools, as above	15,411	1,413,170
Total of Private Day Schools	29,425	695,422
Total Day Schools	44,836	2,108,592

Evening Schools, from which returns were obtained in 1851, 1,545; Scholars, 39,783, of whom 70 per cent were males.

Literary, Scientific, and Mechanics' Institutions—Returns obtained in 1851 from 1,057 Institutions, with 163,395 members.

SCOTLAND.

	Day Schools.	Scholars.
Supported by General or Local Taxation	1,039	88,900
" " Endowments	491	39,537
" " Religious Bodies	1,385	114,739
Other Public Schools	434	36,869
	3,349	280,045
Private Day Schools	1,893	88,472
	5,242	369,517

Sabbath Schools, 3,803; Scholars, 292,549; Teachers, 25,411.
Evening Schools for Adults, 438; Scholars, 15,071.
Literary and Mechanics' Institutions, 221; Members, 29,655.

The Census of 1861 did not require the returns of Education in the above form, but the Board of Education Returns, from the Reports of Inspectors, give the number of children attending the inspection of Primary Schools in England and Wales in 1861 as 879,884, and in 1867 as 1,210,391. In Scotland in 1861 (exclusive of Roman Catholic Schools) the number inspected was 148,806, and in 1867 it was 180,799.

GROWTH OF THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The present funded debt may be considered to have its root in the iniquitous measure of shutting up the Exchequer in 1672, when the revenue pledged for the payment of loans, amounting to £1,328,000, was appropriated to other purposes, and that principal sum was never redeemed. Interest was duly paid till 1681, and was then withheld. But an Act of Parliament was passed in 1699, by which, after 1705, the creditors were to receive interest of 3 per cent upon the original amount, to be redeemed whenever the Government should pay a moiety thereof. That unredeemed moiety of £660,263 is a part of the present debt; and at the Revolution there was about £400,000 outstanding debt in the shape of loans and arrears.

A general abstract of the funded and unfunded capital of the national debt of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the charge for interest and management, has been recently printed by order of the House of Commons. It must be borne in mind, that although we speak of capital and interest, the public debt consists not in capital but in annuities—that the state, having borrowed a principal sum from time to time, guarantees certain payments in the shape of perpetual or terminable annuities, without any engagement to replace the principal represented by such a general abstract of the national debt. We give the results of this abstract, separating the return into periods concurrent with marked eras of our history; and distinguishing the years of war and the years of peace. In the progress of our historical narrative, we have noticed how the amount of interest has been reduced, by the judicious measures of Sir Robert Walpole, and by those of Mr. Pelham in 1749.

William and Mary; William III.; Anne.

				Unredeemed Capital.	Interest and Annuities.
War	William III. W. & M.	3 and 4	1691	£3,130,000	£232,000
"		4 and 5	1692	3,310,547	230,000
"		5 and 6	1693	5,902,839	507,101
"		6 and 7	1694	6,734,297	818,298
"		7 and 8	1695	8,436,846	887,192
"		8 and 9	1696	11,579,178	1,086,971
War / Peace		9 and 10	1697	14,522,925	1,322,519
"		10 and 11	1698	15,445,416	1,468,511
"		11 and 12	1699	13,799,355	1,423,539
"		12 and 13	1700	12,607,080	1,252,080
"		13	1701	12,552,486	1,219,147
Peace / War		1	1702	12,767,225	1,215,324
"	Anne.	1 and 2	1703	12,325,779	1,158,460
"		2 and 3	1704	12,363,474	1,234,010
"		3 and 4	1705	12,135,351	1,210,051
"		4 and 5	1706	12,388,030	1,443,568
"		5 and 6	1707	15,244,299	1,590,630
"		6 and 7	1708	15,518,406	1,722,472
"		7 and 8	1709	18,933,339	1,921,477
"		8 and 9	1710	21,335,645	2,064,829
"		9 and 10	1711	22,398,425	2,274,377
"		10 and 11	1712	34,922,688	3,034,078
War / Peace		11 and 12	1713	34,699,847	3,004,287
"		12 and 13	1714	36,175,460	3,063,135

GROWTH OF THE NATIONAL DEBT—(CONTINUED).

GEORGE I. AND II.—From the Peace of Utrecht to the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle.

				Unredeemed Capital.	Interest and Annuities.
Peace	George I.	1 and 2	1715	£37,423,234	£3,114,625
"		2 and 3	1716	37,918,468	3,167,616
"		3 and 4	1717	40,308,257	3,144,293
Peace / War		4 and 5	1718	40,379,684	2,965,889
"		5 and 6	1719	41,872,241	2,822,370
"		6 and 7	1720	53,979,708	2,846,434
War / Peace		7 and 8	1721	54,405,108	2,855,380
"		8 and 9	1722	54,202,366	2,807,584
"		9 and 10	1723	52,996,990	2,738,080
"		10 and 11	1724	53,323,570	2,737,317
"		11 and 12	1725	52,239,077	2,717,589
"		12 and 13	1726	52,850,797	2,739,628
"		13 / 1	1727	52,523,923	2,360,934
"	George II.	1 and 2	1728	51,960,576	2,306,462
"		2 and 3	1729	51,541,220	2,292,150
"		3 and 4	1730	50,830,310	2,227,127
"		4 and 5	1731	50,738,786	2,219,986
"		5 and 6	1732	49,836,638	2,189,391
"		6 and 7	1733	48,728,097	2,153,405
"		7 and 8	1734	48,821,416	2,136,147
"		8 and 9	1735	48,948,089	2,141,600
"		9 and 10	1736	50,424,651	2,108,793
"		10 and 11	1737	47,231,299	2,057,073
"		11 and 12	1738	46,497,500	2,025,898
Peace / War		12 and 13	1739	46,613,883	2,030,884
"		13 and 14	1740	47,122,579	2,051,572
"		14 and 15	1741	48,382,439	2,099,950
"		15 and 16	1742	51,847,323	2,157,136
"		16 and 17	1743	53,200,989	2,181,586
"		17 and 18	1744	56,742,418	2,293,302
"		18 and 19	1745	59,717,817	2,428,329
"		19 and 20	1746	64,617,844	2,650,231
"		20 and 21	1747	69,115,414	2,882,538
War / Peace		21 and 22	1748	75,812,132	3,165,765

GEORGE II. AND III.—From the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle to the Peace of Paris.

				Unredeemed Capital.	Interest and Annuities.
Peace	George II.	22 and 23	1749	£77,488,940	£3,204,858
"		23 and 24	1750	76,859,810	2,789,351
"		24 and 25	1751	77,197,026	2,769,484
"		25 and 26	1752	76,431,683	2,735,312
"		26 and 27	1753	75,034,815	2,694,038
"		27 and 28	1754	72,128,282	2,648,452
"		28 and 29	1755	72,505,572	2,650,041
Peace / War		29 and 30	1756	74,575,025	2,753,566
"		30 and 31	1757	77,825,397	2,736,254
"		31 and 32	1758	83,128,009	2,918,707
"		32 and 33	1759	91,273,459	3,181,895
"		33 and 34 / 1	1760	102,014,018	3,576,275
"	Geo. III.	1 and 2	1761	114,294,987	4,148,999
"		2 and 3	1762	126,794,987	4,747,849
War / Peace		3 and 4	1763	132,716,049	5,032,733

GEORGE III.—From the Peace of Paris to the War of the French Revolution.

				Unredeemed Capital.	Interest and Annuities.
Peace	George III.	4 and 5	1764	£133,287,940	£5,002,865
"		5 and 6	1765	131,816,173	4 028,250
"		6 and 7	1766	131,636,931	4,887,346
"		7 and 8	1767	132,110,822	4,875,558
"		8 and 9	1768	132,587,404	4,870,163
"		9 and 10	1769	130,313,280	4,786,941
"		10 and 11	1770	129,197,633	4,712,079
"		11 and 12	1771	128,986,012	4,733,694
"		12 and 13	1772	128,036,533	4,706,326
"		13 and 14	1773	128,871,497	4,749,567
Peace / War		14 and 15	1774	127,162,413	4,698,313
"		15 and 16	1775	126,842,811	4,703,519
"		16 and 17	1776	131,237,283	4,870,534
"		17 and 18	1777	136,776,637	5,112,344
"		18 and 19	1778	143,052,634	5,487,323
"		19 and 20	1779	153,574,350	6,100,060
"		20 and 21	1780	167,460,982	6,931,739
"		21 and 22	1781	189,258,681	7,451,052
"		22 and 23	1782	214,729,586	8,413,441
War / Peace		23 and 24	1783	231,843,631	9,065,585
"		24 and 25	1784	243,063,145	9,541,256
"		25 and 26	1785	245,586,470	9,678,942
"		26 and 27	1786	245,466,855	9,664,541
"		27 and 28	1787	244,279,225	9,595,379
"		28 and 29	1788	243,637,416	9,572,217
"		29 and 30	1789	242,752,911	9,567,359
"		30 and 31	1790	242,461,580	9,585,712
"		31 and 32	1791	241,675,999	9,513,507
"		32 and 33	1792	239,663,421	9,432,179

ABSTRACT.

Period.	Debt.	Interest.	Years of War.	Increase of Debt in Years of War.
1691	£3,130,000	£332,000
1701	12,552,486	1,219,147	1691—1697	£11,392,925
1714	36,175,460	3,063,135	1702—1713	21,032,622
1748	75,812,132	3,165,765	1718—1721	14,025,424
			1740—1748	22,531,551
1763	132,716,049	5,032,733	1756—1763	58,141,024
1792	239,663,421	9,432,179	1774—1783	104,681,213
				£232,704,759

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

WAR OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

				Principal.	Interest.
Peace / War	George III.	33 and 34	1793	£247,874,434	£9,711,223
"		34 and 35	1794	263,322,655	10,396,645
"		35 and 36	1795	321,462,679	12 699,310
"		36 and 37	1796	363,898,894	14,765,095
"		37 and 38	1797	388,960,590	15,575,330
"		38 and 39	1798	427,525,902	16,887,399
"		39 and 40	1799	442,324,377	17,560,127
"		40 and 41	1800	470,894,280	18,582,950
"		41 and 42	1801	517,511,871	19,819,839
War / Peace		42 and 43	1802	537,653,008	20,268,551

GROWTH OF THE NATIONAL DEBT—(CONTINUED).

				Principal.	Interest.
Peace / War	George III.	43 and 44	1803	547,732,796	20,812,962
"		44 and 45	1804	571,131,318	21,658,890
"		45 and 46	1805	599,869,847	22,568,359
"		46 and 47	1806	621,096,683	23,196,582
"		47 and 48	1807	633,806,412	23,373,092
"		48 and 49	1808	643,545,783	23,595,013
"		49 and 50	1809	654,461,311	24,292,276
"		50 and 51	1810	662,193,856	24,553,162
"		51 and 52	1811	678,200,436	25,484,765
"		52 and 53	1812	706,254,587	26,853,846
"		53 and 54	1813	788,093,781	29,893,737
"		54 and 55	1814	813,140,176	31,105,644
War / Peace		55 and 56	1815	861,039,049	32,645,618

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

FROM THE PEACE OF PARIS, 1815, TILL 1837.

				Principal.	Interest.
Peace	Geo. III.	56 and 57	1816	£845,968,483	£32,055,350
"		57 and 58	1817	839,382,145	31,591,927
"		58 and 59	1818	840,582,664	31,485,753
"		59 and 60	1819	836,530,982	31,168,540
"	George IV.	60	1820	834,900,960	31,354,749
"		1
"		2	1821	827,984,498	31,105,319
"		3	1822	835,207,294	29,722,533
"		4	1823	827,480,164	30,142,582
"		5	1824	819,023,672	29,174,122
"		6	1825	809,831,468	28,987,773
"		7	1826	808,826,590	29,415,102
"		8	1827	805,098,942	29,328,782
"		9	1828	800,032,289	29,167,877
"		10	1829	796,799,532	29,067,658
"		11	1830	784,803,997	28,325,936
"		1
"	William IV.	1 and 2	1831	782,716,684	28,329,986
"		2 and 3	1832	781,457,599	28,351,318
"		3 and 4	1833	779,730,379	28,481,181
"		4 and 5	1834	773,234,401	28,517,236
"		5 and 6	1835	768,664,201	29,135,811
"		6 and 7	1836	789,496,896	29,667,464
"		7	1837	787,529,114	29,537,333
"	Victoria	1

THE GROWTH OF THE DEBT.

Period.	Debt.	Interest.	Years of War.	Increase of Debt in Years of War.	Remarks.
1691	£3,130,000	£332,000
1701	12,552,486	1,219,147	1691–1697	£11,392,925	French War.
1714	36,175,460	3,063,135	1702–1713	21,932,622	War of the Succession.
1748	75,812,132	3,165,765	1718–1721	14,025,424	Continental Wars.
			1740–1748	22,531,551
1763	132,716,049	5,032,733	1756–1763	58,141,024	Pitt's Administration.
1792	239,663,421	9,432,179	1774–1783	104,681,213	American War.
1815	861,039,049	32,645,618	1793–1815	621,375,628	War of French Revolution and against Napoleon.
				£854,080,387
Decrease of National Debt, 1816 to 1837				73,509,535

NATIONAL DEBT.

				Principal.	Interest.
Peace	Victoria.	1 and 2	1838	£786,840,165	£29,432,903
"		2 and 3	1839	787,236,060	29,385,451
"		3 and 4	1840	788,644,401	29,415,924
"		4 and 5	1841	792,209,685	29,462,030
"		5 and 6	1842	791,757,816	29,300,112
"		6 and 7	1843	792,664,743	29,047,473
"		7 and 8	1844	787,987,194	28,272,652
"		8 and 9	1845	785,115,222	28,125,113
"		9 and 10	1846	782,977,684	28,025,253
"		10 and 11	1847	790,376,351	28,442,683
"		11 and 12	1848	791,817,338	28,307,343
"		12 and 13	1849	790,927,016	28,091,579
"		13 and 14	1850	787,029,162	28,025,523

PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM BEFORE THE REFORM ACTS OF 1832.

[The letter F indicates those Counties which, by Schedule F of the Reform Act, are divided into two electoral districts; F 2 is prefixed to undivided Counties, to which an additional member was given.]

COUNTIES.

ENGLAND AND WALES.—[Continuous from the reign of Edward I.]

COUNTIES.	MEMBERS.
Bedfordshire	2
F 2 Berkshire	2
F 2 Buckinghamshire	2
F 2 Cambridgeshire	2
F Cornwall	2
F Cumberland	2
F Derbyshire	2
F Devonshire	2
F 2 Dorsetshire	2
F Essex	2
F Gloucestershire	2
F Hampshire	2
F 2 Herefordshire	2
F 2 Hertfordshire	2
Huntingdonshire	2
F Kent	2
F Lancashire	2
F Leicestershire	2
Lincolnshire	2
Middlesex	2
F Norfolk	2
F Northamptonshire	2
F Northumberland	2
F Nottinghamshire	2
F 2 Oxfordshire	2
Rutlandshire	2
F Shropshire	2
F Somersetshire	2
F Staffordshire	2
F Suffolk	2
F Surrey	2
F Sussex	2
F Warwickshire	2
Westmoreland	2
F Wiltshire	2
F Worcestershire	2
Yorkshire (2 added in 1821)	4
[From Henry VIII.]
Anglesey	1
Brecknockshire	1
Cardiganshire	1
Carmarthenshire	1
Carnarvonshire	1
F Cheshire	2
Denbighshire	1
Flintshire	1
Glamorganshire	1
Merionethshire	1
Monmouthshire	2
Montgomeryshire	1
Pembrokeshire	1
Radnorshire	1
[From Charles II.]
F Durham	2

SCOTLAND.—In the British Parliament, from the Union under Anne.

Aberdeen	1	Lanark	1
Argyle	1	Linlithgow	1
Ayr	1	Orkney and Shetland	1
Banff	1	Peebles	1
Berwick	1	Perth	1
Dumbarton	1	Renfrew	1
Dumfries	1	Ross	1
Edinburgh	1	Roxburgh	1
Elgin	1	Selkirk	1
Fife	1	Stirling	1
Forfar	1	Sutherland	1
Haddington	1	Wigton	1
Inverness	1	Bute and Caithness, alternately	1
Kincardine	1	Clackmannan and Kinross, alternately	1
Kirkcudbright	1	Cromarty and Nairn, alternately	1

IRELAND.—In the Imperial Parliament, from the Union under George III.

Antrim	2	Limerick	2
Armagh	2	Londonderry	2
Carlow	2	Longford	2
Cavan	2	Louth	2
Clare	2	Mayo	2
Cork	2	Meath	2
Donegal	2	Monaghan	2
Down	2	Queen's County	2
Dublin	2	Roscommon	2
Fermanagh	2	Sligo	2
Galway	2	Tipperary	2
Kerry	2	Tyrone	2
Kildare	2	Waterford	2
Kilkenny	2	Westmeath	2
King's County	2	Wexford	2
Leitrim	2	Wicklow	2

CITIES AND BOROUGHS.

ENGLAND AND WALES.—[Continuous from the reign of Edward I.]

[The letters A, B, indicate the Schedule in which the Borough was placed by the Reform Act.]

	CITY OR BOROUGH.	COUNTY WHEREIN SITUATED.	MEMBERS.
A	Amersham	Bucks	2
	Andover	Hants	2
A	Appleby	Westmoreland	2
B	Arundel	Sussex	2
B	Ashburton	Devon	2
	Barnstaple	Devon	2
	Bath	Somerset	2
	Bedford	Bedfordshire	2
A	Bedwin	Wilts	2
	Beverley	Yorkshire	2
A	Blechingley	Surrey	2
	Bodmin	Cornwall	2
A	Bramber	Sussex	2
	Bridgenorth	Shropshire	2
	Bridgewater	Somerset	2
	Bridport	Dorset	2
	Bristol (co. of itself, locally between Gloucestershire and Somerset)		2
	Bury St. Edmund's	Suffolk	2
B	Calne	Wilts	2
	Cambridge	Cambridgeshire	2
	Canterbury (co. of itself, locally in Kent)		2
	Carlisle	Cumberland	2
	Chichester	Sussex	2
	Chippenham	Wilts	2
	Cockermouth	Cumberland	2
	Colchester	Essex	2
	Coventry (co. of itself, locally in Warwickshire)		2
	Cricklade	Wilts	2
B	Dartmouth	Devon	2
	Derby	Derbyshire	2
	Devizes	Wilts	2
	Dorchester	Dorset	2
A	Downton	Wilts	2
B	Droitwich	Worcestershire	2
A	Dunwich	Suffolk	2
	Evesham	Worcestershire	2
	Exeter (co. of itself, locally in Devon)		2
	Gloucester (co. of itself, locally in Gloucestershire)		2
	Great Marlow	Bucks	2
B	Grimsby	Lincolnshire	2
	Guildford	Surrey	2
A	Hedon	Yorkshire	2
B	Helston	Cornwall	2
	Hereford	Herefordshire	2
	Hertford	Hertfordshire	2
	Honiton	Devon	2
B	Horsham	Sussex	2
	Huntingdon	Huntingdonshire	2
A	Ilchester	Somerset	2
	Ipswich	Suffolk	2
	Lancaster	Lancashire	2
B	Launceston	Cornwall	2
	Leicester	Leicestershire	2
	Leominster	Herefordshire	2
	Lewes	Sussex	2
	Lichfield (co. of itself, locally in Stafford		2
	Lincoln (co. of itself, locally in Lincolnshire)		2
B	Liskeard	Cornwall	2
	Liverpool	Lancashire	2
	London (co. of itself, locally in Middlesex)		4
A	Lostwithiel	Cornwall	2
A	Ludgershall	Wilts	2
B	Lyme Regis	Dorset	2
	Lynn	Norfolk	2
B	Malmesbury	Wilts	2
	Malton	Yorkshire	2
	Marlborough	Wilts	2
A	Milbourne Port	Somerset	2
	Newcastle-upon-Tyne (co. of itself, locally in Northumberland		2
	Newport	Hants	2
A	New Sarum, or Salisbury	Wilts	2
B	Northallerton	Yorkshire	2
	Northampton	Northamptonshire	2
	Norwich (co. of itself, locally in Norfolk		2
	Nottingham (co. of itself, locally in Nottinghamshire)		2
A	Okehampton	Devon	2
A	Old Sarum	Wilts	2
A	Orford	Suffolk	2
	Oxford	Oxfordshire	2
B	Petersfield	Hants	2
	Plymouth	Devon	2
A	Plympton	Devon	2
	Pontefract	Yorkshire	2
	Portsmouth	Hants	2
	Preston	Lancashire	2
	Reading	Berkshire	2
B	Reigate	Surrey	2
	Ripon	Yorkshire	2
	Rochester	Kent	2
	St. Alban's	Hertfordshire	2
	Scarborough	Yorkshire	2
A	Seaford	Sussex	2
B	Shaftesbury	Dorset	2
	Shoreham	Sussex	2
	Shrewsbury	Shropshire	2
	Southampton (co. of itself, locally in Hants)		2
	Southwark	Surrey	2
	Stafford	Staffordshire	2
	Stamford	Lincolnshire	2
A	Steyning	Sussex	2
	Taunton	Somerset	2
	Tavistock	Devon	2
B	Thirsk	Yorkshire	2
	Totnes	Devon	2
A	Tregony	Cornwall	2
	Truro	Cornwall	2
B	Wallingford	Berks	2
B	Wareham	Dorset	2
	Warwick	Warwickshire	2
	Wells	Somerset	2
A	Wendover	Bucks	2
A	Weobly	Herefordshire	2
	Wigan	Lancashire	2
B	Wilton	Wilts	2
	Winchester	Hants	2
	Windsor	Berks	2
B	Woodstock	Oxfordshire	2
	Worcester (co. of itself, locally in Worcestershire		2
	Wycombe, Chipping	Bucks	2
A	Yarmouth	Hants	2
	Yarmouth	Norfolk	2
	York (co. of itself, locally in Yorkshire)		2

[Edward II.]

A	East Grimstead	Sussex	2
	Retford	Notts	2

[Edward III.]

	Dover	Kent	2
	Harwich	Essex	2
	Hastings	Sussex	2
B	Hythe	Kent	2
	Kingston-upon-Hull (co. of itself, locally in Yorkshire)		2
	Maldon	Essex	2
B	Midhurst	Sussex	2
	Newcastle-under-Lyne	Staffordshire	2
	Poole (co. of itself, locally in Dorset)		2
	Richmond	Yorkshire	2
A	Romney	Kent	2
B	Rye	Sussex	2
	Sandwich	Kent	2
	Weymouth and Melcombe Regis	Dorset	4
A	Winchelsea	Sussex	2

[Henry VI.]

A	Gatton	Surrey	2
A	Heytesbury	Wilts	2
A	Hindon	Wilts	2
B	Westbury	Wilts	2
A	Wootton Basset	Wilts	2

[Edward IV.]

	Grantham	Lincolnshire	2
	Ludlow	Shropshire	2
	Wenlock	Shropshire	2

[Henry VIII.]

	Beaumaris	Anglesey	1
	Berwick-upon-Tweed (co. of itself)		2
	Brecon	Brecknockshire	1
	Buckingham	Bucks	2
	Cardiff, sharing with Aberavon, Cowbridge, Kenfig, Llantrissent, Loughor, Neath, and Swansea	Glamorganshire	1
	Cardigan, sharing with Aberystwith, Adpar, and Lampeter	Cardiganshire	1
	Carmarthen (co. of itself, locally in Carmarthenshire)		1
	Carnarvon, sharing with Conway, Criccieth, Nevin, and Pwllheli	Carnarvonshire	1
	Chester (co. of itself, locally in Cheshire)		2
	Denbigh, sharing with Holt and Ruthin,	Denbighshire	1
	Flint, sharing with Caergwrley, Caerwys, Overton, and Rhyddlan	Flintshire	1
	Haverfordwest (co. of itself, locally in Pembrokeshire		1
	Monmouth, sharing with Newport and Usk,	Monmouthshire	1
	Montgomery	Montgomeryshire	1
	Pembroke, sharing with Tenby and Wiston,	Pembrokeshire	1
	Radnor, sharing with Kevinleece, Knighton, Knucklar, and Rhayder	Radnorshire	1

[Edward VI.]

A	Bossiney	Cornwall	2
	Boston	Lincolnshire	2
A	Brackley	Northamptonshire	2
A	Camelford	Cornwall	2
	Maidstone	Kent	2
A	Newport	Cornwall	2
	Penryn	Cornwall	2
	Peterborough	Northamptonshire	2
A	St. Michael's	Cornwall	2
A	Saltash	Cornwall	2
	Thetford	Norfolk	2
A	West Looe	Cornwall	2
	Westminster	Middlesex	2

[Mary.]

	Abingdon	Berks	1
A	Aldborough	Yorkshire	2
	Aylesbury	Bucks	2
	Banbury	Oxfordshire	1
A	Boroughbridge	Yorkshire	2
A	Castle Rising	Norfolk	2
A	Higham Ferrers	Northamptonshire	1
	Knaresborough	Yorkshire	2
B	Morpeth	Northumberland	2
B	St. Ives	Cornwall	2

[Elizabeth.]

A	Aldeburgh	Suffolk	2
A	Beeralston	Devon	2
A	Bishop's Castle	Shropshire	2
A	Callington	Cornwall	2
B	Christchurch	Hants	2
	Cirencester	Gloucestershire	2
B	Clitheroe	Lancashire	2
A	Corfe Castle	Dorset	2
A	East Looe	Cornwall	2
B	Eye	Suffolk	2
A	Fowey	Cornwall	2
A	Haslemere	Surrey	2
	Lymington	Hants	2
A	Minehead	Somerset	2
A	Newtown	Hants	2
A	Newton	Lancashire	2
A	Queenborough	Kent	2
A	St. Germain's	Cornwall	2
A	St. Mawe's	Cornwall	2
A	Stockbridge	Hants	2
	Sudbury	Suffolk	2
	Tamworth	Warwickshire	2
A	Whitchurch	Hants	2

[James I.]

	Bewdley	Worcestershire	1
	Tewkesbury	Gloucestershire	2
	Tiverton	Devon	2

[Charles II.]

	Durham	Durham	2
	Newark	Notts	2

SCOTLAND.—In the British Parliament, since the Union under Anne.

Edinburgh city..... 1 member.

[Districts of Burghs.]

DISTRICTS.	BURGHS.	COUNTIES WHEREIN LOCALLY SITUATED.	MEMBERS.
1	Dingwall	Ross	1
	Dornoch	Sutherland
	Kirkwall	Orkney
	Tain	Ross
	Wick	Caithness
2	Forres	Elgin	1
	Fortrose	Ross
	Inverness	Inverness
	Nairn	Nairn
3	Banff	Banff	1
	Cullen	Banff
	Elgin	Elgin
	Inverury	Aberdeen
	Kintore	Aberdeen
4	Aberdeen	Aberdeen	1
	Aberbrothwick	Forfar
	Brechin	Forfar
	Inverbervie	Kincardine
	Montrose	Forfar
5	Cupar	Forfar and Perth	1
	Dundee	Forfar
	Forfar	Forfar
	Perth	Perth
	St. Andrews	Fife
6	Anstruther Easter	Fife	1
	Anstruther Wester	Fife
	Crail	Fife
	Kilrenny	Fife
	Pittenweem	Fife
7	Burntisland	Fife	1
	Dysart	Fife
	Kinghorn	Fife
	Kirkaldy	Fife
8	Culross	Perth	1
	Dunfermline	Fife
	Inverkeithing	Fife
	Queensferry	Linlithgow
	Stirling	Stirling
9	Dumbarton	Dumbarton	1
	Glasgow	Lanark
	Renfrew	Renfrew
	Rutherglen	Lanark
10	Dunbar	Haddington	1
	Haddington	Haddington
	Jedburgh	Roxburgh
	Lauder	Berwick
	North Berwick	Haddington
11	Lanark	Lanark	1
	Linlithgow	Linlithgow
	Peebles	Peebles
	Selkirk	Selkirk
12	Ayr	Ayr	1
	Campbelton	Argyle
	Inverary	Argyle
	Irvine	Ayr
	Rothsay	Bute
13	Annan	Dumfries	1
	Dumfries	Dumfries
	Kirkcudbright	Kirkcudbright
	Lochmaben	Dumfries
	Sanquhar	Dumfries
14	New Galloway	Kircudbright	1
	Stranraer	Wigton
	Whithorn	Wigton
	Wigton	Wigton

IRELAND.—In the Imperial Parliament, from the Union under George III.

CITIES AND BOROUGHS.	COUNTIES WHEREIN LOCALLY SITUATED.	MEMBERS.
Armagh	Armagh	1
Athlone	Roscommon and Westmeath	1
Bandon	Cork	1
Belfast	Antrim	1
Carlow	Carlow	1
Carrickfergus	co. corporate	1
Cashel	Tipperary	1
Clonmel	Tipperary	1
Coleraine	Londonderry	1
Cork	co. corporate	2
Downpatrick	Down	1
Drogheda	co. corporate	1
Dublin	co. corporate	1
Dundalk	Louth	1
Dungannon	Tyrone	1
Dungarvan	Waterford	1
Ennis	Clare	1
Enniskillen	Fermanagh	1
Galway	co. corporate	1
Kilkenny	co. corporate	1
Kinsale	Cork	1
Limerick	co. corporate	1
Lisburn	Antrim	1
Londonderry	Londonderry	1
Mallow	Cork	1
New Ross	Wexford	1
Newry	Down	1
Portarlington	King's County and Queen's County	1
Sligo	Sligo	1
Tralee	Kerry	1
Waterford	co. corporate	1
Wexford	Wexford	1
Youghal	Cork	1

UNIVERSITIES.

[From the reign of James I.]

Cambridge.....2 members | Oxford.....2 members.

[From the Irish Union under George III.]

Dublin..... 1 member.

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF STATE FROM THE END OF THE ADMINISTRATION OF SIR ROBERT WALPOLE, 1741, TO THE COMMENCEMENT OF THAT OF LORD NORTH, 1770.

LORD CHANCELLOR.	FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY.	CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.	PRINCIPAL SECRETARIES OF STATE.
1741 Philip, Lord Hardwicke (from 1737).	1741 Sir Robert Walpole.	1741 Sir Robert Walpole.	1741 William, Lord Harrington (from 1730).
1742 "	1742 Spencer, Earl of Wilmington.	1742 Samuel Sandys, Esq.	1742 (Feb. 12). John, Lord Carteret (vice Lord Harrington).
1743 "	1743 Hon. Henry Pelham.	1743 Hon. Henry Pelham.	1743 "
1744 "	1744 "	1744 "	1744 (Nov. 24). William, Earl of Harrington (vice Lord Carteret).
1745 "	1745 "	1745 "	1745 "
1746 "	1746 "	1746 "	1746 (Feb. 10). John, Earl Granville (vice Earl of Harrington).
			— (Feb. 14). Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle.
			— (Feb. 14). William, Earl of Harrington.
			— (Nov. 4). Philip Dormer Stanhope, Earl of Chesterfield (vice Earl of Harrington).
1747 "	1747 "	1747 "	1747 "
1748 "	1478 "	1748 "	1748 (Feb. 13). John, Duke of Bedford (vice Earl of Chesterfield).
1749 "	1749 "	1749 "	1749 "
1750 "	1750 "	1750 "	1750 "
1751 "	1751 "	1751 "	1751 (July 12). Robert, Earl of Holdernesse (vice Duke of Bedford).
1752 "	1752 "	1752 "	1752 "
1753 "	1753 "	1753 "	1753 "
1754 "	1754 (March 16). J. H. Pelham, Duke of Newcastle.	1754 (March 9). Sir William Lee.	1754 (April 6). Sir Thos. Robinson (vice Duke of Newcastle).
		— (April 6). Hon. H. B. Legge.
1755 "	1755 "	1755 Sir George Lyttleton.	1755 (Nov.) Henry Fox, Esq. (vice Sir T. Robinson).
1756 The Great Seal in Commission.	1756 (Nov. 16). William, Duke of Devonshire.	1756 Hon. H. B. Legge.	1756 (Dec.) William Pitt, Esq. (vice Mr. Fox. He resigned in April, 1757, and was re-appointed in June).
1757 Sir Robert Henley—Lord Keeper—(created Lord Henley, 1760).	1757 (April 9). W. Murray, Lord Mansfield.	1757 (April 9). W. Murray, Lord Mansfield.	1757 "
	— (July 2). J. H. Pelham, Duke of Newcastle.	— (July 2). Hon. H. B. Legge.
1758 "	1758 "	1758 "	1758 "
1759 "	1759 "	1759 "	1759 "
1760 "	1760 "	1760 "	1760 "
1761 "	1761 "	1761 William, Viscount Barrington.	1761 (Mar. 25). John, Earl of Bute (vice Lord Holdernesse).
			— (Oct. 9). Charles, Lord Egremont (vice Mr. Pitt).
1762 "	1762 (May 29). John, Lord Bute.	1762 Sir Francis Dashwood.	1762 (May 29). Hon. G. Grenville (vice Lord Bute).
			— (Oct. 14). George, Earl of Halifax (vice Mr. Grenville).
1763 "	1763 Hon. Geo. Grenville.	1763 Hon. George Grenville.	1763 (Sept. 9). John, Earl of Sandwich (vice Lord Egremont).
1764 " —Lord Chancellor, as Earl of Northington.	1764 "	1764 "	1764 "
1765 "	1765 (July 13). Charles, Marquis of Rockingham.	1765 William Dowdeswell, Esq.	1765 (July 12). A. H., Duke of Grafton (vice Lord Halifax).
			— Hon. H. S. Conway (vice Lord Sandwich).
1766 (July 30). Chas., Lord Camden.	1766 (August 2). Augustus Henry, Duke of Grafton.	1766 Hon. Charles Townshend.	1766 (May 23). Charles, Duke of Richmond (vice Duke of Grafton).
			— (Aug. 2). William, earl of Shelburne (vice Duke of Richmond).

LORD CHANCELLOR.	FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY.	CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.	PRINCIPAL SECRETARIES OF STATE.
1767 (July 30). Chas., Lord Camden.	1767 (Sept. 12). William, Lord Mansfield.	1767 (Sept. 12). William, Lord Mansfield.	1767 (Aug. 2). William, earl of Shelburne (vice Duke of Richmond).
1768 "	— (Dec. 1). A. H., Duke of Grafton.	— (Dec. 1). Frederick, Lord North.
	1768 "	1768 "	1768 (Jan. 20). Thomas, Viscount Weymouth (vice General Conway).
			— Willes, Earl of Hillsborough —(Colonies).
			— (Oct. 21). W. H., Earl of Rochford (vice Earl of Shelburne).
1769 "	1769 "	1769 "	1769
1770 (Jan. 17). Hon. Charles Yorke.	1770 (Feb. 10). Frederick, Lord North.	1770 "	1770 (Dec. 19) John, Earl of Sandwich (vice Lord Weymouth).
— (Jan. 20). Great Seal in Commission.

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF STATE FROM THE ADMINISTRATION OF LORD NORTH, 1770, TO THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE EARL OF SHELBURNE, 1783.

LORD CHANCELLOR.	FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY.	CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.	PRINCIPAL SECRETARIES OF STATE.
			1768 Earl of Rochford.
			— Earl of Hillsborough (Colonies).
	1770 Frederick, Lord North.	1770 Frederick, Lord North.
1771 Henry, Lord Apsley (created Earl Bathurst in 1775).	1771 "	1771 "	1771 (June 12). Earl of Suffolk (vice Earl of Sandwich).
1772 "	1772 "	1772 "	1772 (August 14). Earl of Dartmouth (Colonies).
1773 "	1773 "	1773 "	1773 "
1774 "	1774 "	1774 "	1774 "
1775 "	1775 "	1775 "	1775 (Nov. 10). Viscount Weymouth (vice Earl of Rochford).
			— Lord George Sackville Germaine (vice Lord Dartmouth) (Colonies).
1776 "	1776 "	1776 "	1776 "
1777 "	1777 "	1777 "	1777 "
1778 (June 2). Edward, Lord Thurlow.	1778 "	1778 "	1778 "
1779 "	1779 "	1779 "	1779 (Oct. 27). Viscount Stormont (vice Earl of Suffolk).
			— (Nov. 24). Earl of Hillsborough (vice Viscount Weymouth).
1780 "	1780 "	1780 "	1780 "
1781 "	1781 "	1781 "	1781 "
1782 "	1782 "	1782 "	1782 (Feb. 24). Welbore Ellis, Esq. (vice Lord George Germaine) (Colonies).
— "	— (March 27). Charles, Marquis of Rockingham.	— (March 27). Lord John Cavendish.
— "	— (July 13). William, Earl of Shelburne.	— (July 13). Hon. William Pitt.	— (March 27). William, Earl of Shelburne (vice Lord Stormont).
			— Hon. Charles James Fox (vice Lord Hillsborough).
			— (July 13). Thomas Townshead, Esq. (vice Mr. Fox).
			— Thomas, Lord Grantham (vice Earl of Shelburne).

PRINCIPAL OFFICERS OF STATE FROM THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE DUKE OF PORTLAND, 1783, TO THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE EARL OF LIVERPOOL, 1812.

LORD CHANCELLOR.	FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY.	CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.	PRINCIPAL SECRETARIES OF STATE.
			HOME.	FOREIGN.	WAR AND COLONIES.
1783 Alex'der Lord Loughborough (April 9).	1783 William Henry Duke of Portland (April 5).	1783 Lord John Cavendish (April 5).	1783 Frederick Lord North (April 5).	1783 Hon. Charles James Fox (April 2).
— Edward Lord Thurlow (Dec. 23).	— Hon. William Pitt (Dec. 27).	— Hon. William Pitt (Dec. 27).	— Francis Marquis of Carmarthen (Dec. 23).	— Thomas Lord Sydney (Dec. 23).
1784 "	1784 "	1784 "	1784 "	1784 "
1785 "	1785 "	1785 "	1785 "	1785 "
1786 "	1786 "	1786 "	1786 "	1786 "
1787 "	1787 "	1787 "	1787 "	1787 "
1788 "	1788 "	1788 "	1788 "	1788 "
1789 "	1789 "	1789 "	1789 "	1789 W. W. Grenville, Esq. (June).
1790 "	1790 "	1790 "	1790 "	1790 "
1791 "	1791 "	1791 "	1791 Rt. Hon. Henry Dundas (June).	1791 Lord Grenville (May).
1792 The Great Seal in Commission.	1792 "	1792 "	1792 "	1792 "
1793 Alex'der Lord Loughborough.	1793 "	1793 "	1793 "	1793 "
1794 "	1794 "	1794 "	1794 Duke of Portland (July 11).	1794 "	1794 Rt. Hon. Hy. Dundas (July).
1795 "	1795 "	1795 "	1795 "	1795 "	1795 "
1796 "	1796 "	1796 "	1796 "	1796 "	1796 "
1797 "	1797 "	1797 "	1797 "	1797 "	1797 "
1798 "	1798 "	1798 "	1798 "	1798 "	1798 "
1799 "	1799 "	1799 "	1799 "	1799 "	1799 "
1800 "	1800 "	1800 "	1800 "	1800 "	1800 "
1801 John Lord Eldon (April 14).	1801 Rt. Hon. Henry Addington, created Viscount Sidmouth, 1805 (Mar. 7).	1801 Rt. Hon. Henry Addington (Mar. 7).	1801 Thomas Lord Pelham.	1801 Robert Lord Hawkesbury (Feb.).	1801 Lord Hobart (March).
1802 "	1802 "	1802 "	1802 "	1802 "	1802 "
1803 "	1803 "	1803 "	1803 Hon. Charles Yorke.	1803 "	1803 "
1804 "	1804 Hon. William Pitt.	1804 Hon. William Pitt.	1804 Robert Lord Hawkesbury.	1804 Lord Harrowby.	1804 Earl Camden
1805 "	1805 "	1805 "	1805 "	1805 Earl Mulgrave.	1805 Viscount Castlereagh.
1806 Thomas Lord Erskine.	1806 William Lord Grenville.	1806 Lord Henry Petty.	1806 Earl Spencer.	1806 Hon. Charles James Fox.	1806 William Windham.
				— Lord Charles Howick (became Earl Grey, Nov. 1807)
1807 John Lord Eldon.	1807 Duke of Portland.	1807 Hon. Spencer Perceval.	1807 Robert Lord Hawkesbury (afterwards Earl of Liverpool).	1807 Right Hon. George Canning.	1807 Viscount Castlereagh.
1808 "	1808 "	1808 "	1808 "	1808 "	1808 "
1809 "	1809 "	1809 "	1809 Hon. Richard Ryder.	1809 E'l Bathurst.	1809 Earl of Liverpool.
				— Marquis Wellesley.
1810 "	1810 Hon. Spencer Perceval.	1810 "	1010 "	1810 "	1810 "
1811 "	1811 "	1811 "	1811 "	1811 "	1811 "
1812 "	1812 Earl of Liverpool.	1812 Rt. Hon. Nicholas Vansittart.	1812 Viscount Sidmouth.	1812 Viscount Castlereagh.	1812 Earl Bathurst.
1813 "	1813 "	1813 "	1813 "	1813 "	1813 "
1814 "	1814 "	1814 "	1814 "	1814 "	1814 "
1815 "	1815 "	1815 "	1815 "	1815 "	1815 "

OCCUPATIONS IN GREAT BRITAIN,

And number of Persons engaged in them (arranged in the order of the Numbers) in 1851.

[This classification was not called for in the Census for 1861.]

OCCUPATIONS.	PERSONS.
Agricultural Laborer, Farm Servant, Shepherd	1,460,896
Domestic Servant	1,038,791
Cotton, Calico, manufacture, printing, and dyeing	501,465
Laborer (branch undefined)	376,551
Farmer, Grazier	306,767
Boot and Shoe maker	274,451
Milliner, Dressmaker	267,791
Coal Miner	219,015
Carpenter, Joiner	182,696
Army and Navy *	178,773
Tailor	152,672
Washerwomen, Mangler, Laundry-keeper	146,091
Woollen Cloth manufacture	137,814
Silk manufacture	114,570
Blacksmith	112,776
Worsted manufacture	104,061
Mason, Paver	101,442
Messenger, Porter, and Errand Boy	101,425
Linen, Flax manufacture	98,860
Seamen (Merchant Service) on shore or in British Ports	89,206
Grocer	85,913
Gardener	80,946
Iron manufacture, Moulder, Founder	80,032
Innkeeper, Licensed Victualler, Beer-shop keeper	75,721
Seamstress, Shirtmaker	73,068
Bricklayer	67,989
Butcher, Meat Salesman	67,691
Hose (Stocking) manufacture	65,499
School-master, mistress	65,376
Lace manufacture	63,660
Plumber, Painter, Glazier	62,808
Baker	62,472
Carman, Carrier, Carter, Drayman	56,981
Charwoman	55,423
Draper (Linen and Woollen)	49,184
Engine and Machine maker	48,082
Commercial Clerk	43,760
Cabinet maker, Upholsterer	40,897
Teacher (various), Governess	40,575
Fisherman, Woman	38,294
Boat, Barge, Man, Woman	37,683
Miller	37,268
Earthenware manufacture	36,512
Sawyer	35,443
Railway Laborer	34,306
Straw-plait manufacture	32,062
Brickmaker, dealer	31,168
Government Civil Service	30,963
Hawker, Pedlar	30,553
Wheelwright	30,244
Glover	29,882
Shopkeeper (branch undefined)	29,800
Horsekeeper, Groom (not Domestic), Jockey	29,408
Nail manufacture	28,533
Iron Miner	28,088
Printer	26,024
Nurse (not Domestic Servant)	25,518
Shipwright, Shipbuilder	25,201
Stone Quarrier	23,489
Lodging-house Keeper	23,089
Lead Miner	22,530
Copper Miner	22,386
Straw Hat and Bonnet Maker	21,902
Cooper	20,245
Watch and Clock Maker	19,159
Brewer	18,620
Dock Laborer, Dock and Harbor Service	18,462
Clergyman of Established Church	18,587
Protestant Dissenting Minister	9,644
Police	18,348
Plasterer	17,980
Warehouse, Man, Woman	17,861
Saddler, Harnessmaker	17,583
Hatter, Hat manufacture	16,975
Coachman (not Domestic Servant), Guard, Postboy	16,836
Law Clerk	16,626
Coachmaker	16,590
Cowkeeper, Milkseller	16,526
Ropemaker	15,966
Druggist	15,643
Surgeon, Apothecary	15,163
Tin Miner	15,050
Paper Manufacture	14,501
Coalheaver, Coal Laborer	14,426
Greengrocer, Fruiterer	14,320
Muslin manufacture	14,098
Confectioner	13,865
Tinman, Tinker, Tinplate worker	13,770
Staymaker	13,699
Solicitor, Attorney, Writer to the Signet	13,256
Dyer, Scourer, Calenderer	12,964
Currier	12,920
Builder	12,818
Farm Bailiff	12,805
Hairdresser, Wigmaker	12,173
Coal Merchant, Dealer	12,092
Glass manufacture	12,005
Carpet and Rug manufacture	11,457
Goldsmith, Silversmith	11,242
Brass Founder, Moulder, manufacture	11,230
Maltster	11,150
Railway Officer, Clerk, Station Master	10,948
Bookbinder	10,953
Road Laborer	10,923
Wine and Spirit Merchant	10,467
Fishmonger	10,439
Merchant	10,256
Ribbon manufacture	10,074

* This is the Army and Navy of the United Kingdom, exclusive of the Indian Army and Navy.

INDEX.

Abbott, Justice, presides in court at Hone's first trial, 1817, 1126; and that of the Cato-street conspirators, 1820, 1149
Abbott, Charles. See Colchester, lord.
Abercrombie fails in reducing Ticonderoga, 1758, 838; general of the Bengal army, 1790, 989
Abercromby, James, elected speaker of the House of Commons, 1216; again elected, 1837, 1232; his review of the session 1837-8, 1234; raised to a peerage, 1238
Abercromby, sir Ralph, commands the army in Ireland, 1798, 1024; commands the British expedition to Holland, 1799, 1031, superseded by the duke of York, ib.; lands his army at Aboukir Bay, 1038; defeats the French near Alexandria, Mar. 21, 1801, ib.; death of, from a wound, March 28, ib.
Aberdeen, earl of, negotiates for peace, 1814, 1092; approves of the declaration of Frankfort, 1103; foreign secretary, 1828, 1176
Abjuration of James II., bill for, rejected 1690, 636
Abjuration of the Pretender, bill for, passed 1702, 687
Abo, peace of, 1743, 800
Abolition of slavery. See Slavery.
Aboukir, battle of, July 25, 1799, 1030
Abury, the Druidical temple at, 6
Academy of Ancient Concerts, established 1710, 747
Academy, Royal; attempts to establish an academy of art, 930; scheme for a, suggested by sir J. Thornhill, 931; the idea revived; first exhibition of the works of living artists, April 21, 1760, ib.; second exhibition, ib.; George III. first patron; Reynolds first president, ib.; foundation of the, Dec. 10, 1768, ib.; first exhibition and exhibitors in 1769, 932; exhibition and exhibitors in 1780, ib.; supplants all rivals; sources for the history of the, ib.
Acland, gen., joins Wellington at Vimiero, 1069
Acre besieged unsuccessfully by Bonaparte, 1799, 1029
Act of Grace, 1690; exceptions to, 636
Act of Security passed by Scottish parliament; assent refused, 1703, 707; granted, 1705, ib.
Act of Settlement, independence of judges determined by, 650; passed 1701; clauses repealed, 684; copy of, 687
Acton Burnel, statute of, passed in 1283, 115
Adam, James and Robert, their architectural works, 934
Adam, remarks of, on the sentence of Muir and Palmer, 1002
Adams, John, high-mindedness of, in defending captain Preston at Boston in 1770, 863; his conference with lord Howe, the British commissioner, 1776, 880; one of the commissioners for settling the conditions of peace between England and the United States; signs the preliminaries, Nov. 20, 1783, 907; interview with Geo. III. in 1785 as minister plenipotentiary; evidence against the charge of the king's incivility towards Jefferson and, 908; president of the United States, 1796-1800, 1095
Adams, J. Q., an American plenipotentiary for concluding the peace of Ghent, 1101, president of the United States, 1825-9, 1187
Adams, Samuel, rouses the Americans, 1773, 870; denies that the Americans have lost their good-will towards England, 1774, 870; proscribed by Gage, 875
Addington (afterwards lord Sidmouth), elected speaker of the House of Commons, Nov. 1790, 968; anecdote of Burke and Pitt by, 974; his sanguine expectations of the duke of Brunswick's campaign, 982; visits Duncan's fleet, 1019; hopes roused by Nelson's victory of the Nile, 1022; first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, Mar. 14, 1801, 1036; remonstrates with Bonaparte for his encroachments, 1041; his policy towards France, 1042; requires, through lord Whitworth, Bonaparte to explain his views towards Great Britain, ib.; negotiates for sharing the power with Pitt, 1043; weakness of his ministry, 1046; resigns May 10, 1804, ib.; joins Pitt, 1048; viscount Sidmouth and president of the council, 1805, ib.; resigns, July, 1039; lord privy seal, 1806, 1056; resigns 1807, 1058; home secretary, 1083, 1148; measures recommended by, to put down the riots of 1812, ib; his employment of spies justified, 1124; has no faith in a favorable change in the internal condition of the country, 1125; states the difficulty of prosecuting for libel; his circular letter giving the judge increased powers in cases of libel trials, ib.; this proceeding considered unconstitutional, ib.; his opinion of the laws against reformers, 1132; promises the Manchester magistrates government support against the reformers, 1133; thanks them for their measures for preserving tranquillity, ib.; succeeded as home secretary by sir Robert Peel, 1822, 1156, resigns his seat in the cabinet, 1158
Addison, Joseph, defends Steele against the charge of libel imputed to him by the House of Commons, 1713, 736: writes for the "Tattler," 738; member of parliament; popularity; his influence and aims as an essayist, ib.; with Steele he directs the popular attention to Milton, Shakespeare, and our old English ballads, 730; the precursor of English novelists, the Spectator's Club described by, 740; his works, with those of other essayists, create a general taste for reading, 741; ridicules the political extravagances of the ladies of his day, 742; description of contemporary female characters by, 744; remarks on puppet plays and the opera, ib.; description of a masquerade, 745; remarks on the superstition, 746; the popular music, 747; and the translations, from the Latin and Greek, of his day, ib.; rebukes Pope for his controversial spirit, 748; appointed secretary of state, Apr. 1717, 769; supports the Peerage Bill, 1719, 772
Adelaide, princess, of Saxe Meiningen, marries the duke of Clarence (William IV.), July 13, 1818, 1129; character of, 1223
Adjutators, organization of the, 476; refusal of, to allow the army to be disbanded, ib.; seizure of Charles I. by, at Holmby, ib.
Adminius, son of Cunobelin, instigates a Roman invasion of Britain, 7
Adrianople, peace of, Sept. 14, 1829, 1225
Afghan War, 1838-1842, narrative of the, 1248
African, The, Company, commenced operations, 1530, 614
African and Indian Company, constituted 1695, 674; projects the founding a colony at Darien, ib.; three vessels, with 1200 men, sail from Leith, July 25, 1698, 675; arrive at Darien, Nov. 4, ib.; the colonists quarrel with and declare war against the Spaniards, ib.; food grows scarce; famine and pestilence prevail; they forsake Darien, ib.; the company send out 1300 more men, 676; the colony blockaded by the Spaniards, ib.; it capitulates; and abandons the settlement, ib.; this failure rouses the spirit of the Scotch, who inveigh against William and the English, ib.; it continues a source of irritation for several years between the two nations, ib.; but the difficulties are smoothed over in the union, ib.; quarrels with the East India Company; a captain of one of their vessels is seized and executed by the E. I. Company on a false charge of murder, 707
Aghrim, battle of, July 12, 1691, 644
Agincourt, description of, and its locality, 166; battle of, on Oct., 1415, 167
Agnew, sir Andrew, presents petitions to parliament praying for the better observance of the Sabbath, 1204
Agra, battle of, 1803, 1054
Agricola, the great civilizer of Britain, 8; is appointed to the command of Britain, A.D. 69, 10; campaign of, ib.; attack on Galgacus and the Caledonians by, ib.; announces the possession of "the very extremity of Britain," ib.; ascertains that Britain is an island, 11; recalled by Domitian, A.D. 84, ib.; line of forts from the Clyde to the Forth raised by, ib.; notice of the works of, in Britain, 13; caused the sciences and the Roman language to be taught to the sons of British chiefs, ib.; established municipalities, 15
Agriculture in Britain, state of, under the Romans, 12; state of, in queen Anne's time, 611; great influence of the population of London and Westminster upon, ib.; state of, in Norfolk, about 1770, 911; Coke's efforts for the improvement of, ib.; state of, in Suffolk, ib.; manufacture of implements of, 912; in Buckinghamshire; its dairy farm produce, ib.; in Oxfordshire and Northamptonshire, 913; improvements in Bedfordshire; the duke of Bedford's exertions, ib.; Bakewell's art of fattening cattle and sheep; improved breeds, 914; reclamation of the fens of Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire, ib.; of Lincoln Heath, 915; and the Wolds, ib.; state of, in Nottingham and Derby-shires, ib.; Surrey, Middlesex, and Kent, ib.; in Sussex, Hants, and Berkshire, 916; in Wiltshire, ib.; backward state of farming in Wiltshire, ib.; progress of, in Dorsetshire; enclosure of lands from 1734 to 1828, ib.; in Devonshire and Somersetshire, 917; in Cornwall, ib.; Wales, ib.; and the west midland counties, ib.; system of under-drainage discovered, 1764; uncultivated wastes of Staffordshire; slow progress of, in Lancashire, 918; reclaiming of the mosses in the Fylde district, ib.; Cheshire; progress of Yorkshire in, promoted by the labors of the marquis of Rockingham, ib.; sir Digby Legard, ib.; and James Croft, the agricultural collier, ib.; land and cattle of Durham, 919; sheep and waste land of Northumberland, ib.; progress of, stimulated by the example of the Culleys, ib.; Westmoreland and its lake district, ib.; the Lothians, Haddington, Roxburgh, and Selkirkshires, 120; Scotch sheep, ib.; in Ayrshire, ib.; Lanarkshire and Renfrewshire, 921; progress of, in the north-western district of Scotland, ib.; in Ireland, 922; the potato cultivation, ib.; bad harvests and high prices from 1795 to 1800, 1033
Ahmedabad taken by general Goddard, 949
Ahmednuggur captured by the British, 1803, 1054
Aikenhead, Thomas, hanged for blasphemy in 1696, 673
Aislabie, Chancellor of the Exchequer, bribed by the directors of the South Sea Company, 774; accused of fraud; expelled the House of Commons, and committed to the Tower, ib.
Aitken, alias John the Painter, attempts to burn the English dockyards; his trial and confession, 880
Aix-la-Chapelle, peace of, May 2, 1668, 732; treaty of, 1748, 801, 820
Aix Roads, lord Cochrane's enterprise in, April 11, 1809, 1072
Akbar Khan, his treachery towards, and murder of MacNaughten, 1250; his conduct towards the British army, ib.
Akenside, Mark, his "Pleasures of Imagination" published 1744, 936
Akerman, keeper of Newgate; his house set on fire by the Gordon rioters, 1780, 891
Alba, duke of. See Philip of Spain.
Alban, St., legend of the martyrdom of, as told by Bede, 17
Albemarle, A. J. von Keppel, earl of; he is taken into William III.'s favor, which causes the jealousy of Portland, 681
Albemarle, earl of, commands the land forces in the Havannah expedition, 1762, 845
Alberoni, cardinal Giulio, prime minister of Spain; sends a million French livres to Spaar, the Swedish envoy in Paris, to stir Charles XII.'s soldiers, 769; early career; instigates disputes; and intrigues against England and France, 770; retaliates Byng's destruction of the Spanish fleet by seizing all British goods in Spanish ports, 771; leagues with the Pretender; detected plotting against the regent Orleans; France consequently declares war against Spain, 1718, ib.; he organizes expeditions against France, England, and Scotland, 772; dismissed his offices, and banished the country; returns to Italy, Dec., 1719, ib.
Albert, archduke of Austria, commands the Austrian army at the siege at Lille, 1792, 982
Albert, prince, of Saxe Coburg, marriage of, to queen Victoria, 1240; his high opinion of William III., 1256; speech of, proclaiming the unity of interest in all classes of society, 1286
Albert Edward, prince of Wales, born Nov. 9, 1841, 1261.
Albion, belief of its once having formed part of the Continent, 3
Albuera, battle of, May 16, 1811, 1083
Alcuin, notice of, 24
Aldrich, dean Henry, his architectural works, 755
Alexander I. of Russia, defeat of his army at Austerlitz; forms a treaty of alliance with the king of Prussia, 1052; wars with France, 1807, 1064; concludes the peace of Tilsit with Napoleon; the interview on the Niemen raft with Napoleon, ib.; terms of the treaty, patent and secret, ib.; offends Bonaparte by relaxing the severity of the Russian commercial law; allies himself with Sweden; Bonaparte wars against him, 1812. 1088; concludes an alliance with Prussia, 1089; his meeting with Frederick William in the great square of Leipzig, 1090; succeeds Paul I. as emperor of Russia, 1801, 1310; attends the congress of Vienna, 1814, 1109; obtains the sovereignty over Poland, 1100; organizes the Holy Alliance, 1110; succeeded by Nicholas I. 1825, 1187.
Alexandria, Bonaparte lands at, July, 1798; captured by the French, 1020; battle of, Mar. 20, 1801, 1038; capitulates to the British, Mar. 20, 1807, 1064
Alexius, emperor of the East, receives the Anglo-Saxons expelled by William the Conqueror, as his guards, 57
Alfred, son of Ethelred, is induced to make a descent on England, is betrayed by earl Godwin, and put to death, 49
Alfred the Great, birth of, in 849, 25; early years of, 26; improbability of his having been taught to read by his step-mother, ib.; at Rome in 853; consecrated king by pope Leo, at Rome, on the death of Ethelwulf, ib.; probable impression made on the mind of, by the sight of Rome, ib.; makes no claim to Wessex on the death of Ethelbald, 27; employment of, during the life of Ethelbert, ib.; description of his home at Wantage, ib.; the translation of Boetius by, has original passages descriptive of the state of England, ib.; state of the church during the youth of, ib.; constitution of the army, 28; state of rural industry, 875, et seq.; provision for the poor, ib.; becomes "secundarius" on the accession of Ethelred in 866, 29; marries, ib.; defeats the Danes who had invaded Mercia, A.D. 868, ib.; fights and gains the battle of Æscesdun, in 871, 30; is defeated at Wilton, 31; first naval battle of, against the Danes, in 875, ib.; probable unpopularity of, ib.; makes peace with Guthrun in 878, ib.; retreat of, to Athelney, 32; heads a band of outlaws in Somersetshire, ib.; traditional stories of, during his concealment, 33; re-appears, and gains the battle of Ethandune, in 878, ib.; Guthrum sues for peace and is baptized, ib.; terms of the treaty, ib.; laws of Alfred, ib.; writings and translations of, 34; repulses an invasion of the Danes in Kent in 884, ib.; his care for the education of his family, 35; defeats an invasion of the Danes under Hasting, ib.; creates a navy, ib.; death of, in 901, ib.; character of, 36; share of, in the subdivision of the kingdom for administrative and judicial purposes, ib.; courts of justice in the time of, 37; tenure of lands, ib.

Alfric, earl of Mercia, treachery of, 47.
Algarves. See Godoy
Algiers, battle of, Aug. 27, 1816, 1112; see Exmouth, lord, ib.; captured by the French, 1830, 1181
Alibaud, attempts to take Louis Philippe's life, 1830, 1222
Alien Bill, passage of, through Parliament, 985-987; passed Jan. 4, 1793, 987
Ali-Ghur stormed by the British, Sept. 4, 1803, 1054.
Allectus assumes the government of Britain, A.D. 292, 11; defeated, and Britain re-subjected to the Romans, ib.
Allegiance, Oath of; many clergymen refuse to take it, 1689, 623
Allen, Ethan, an American revolutionist, 1775; captures Ticonderogs, 874; made prisoner on his march against Montreal; sent to England, 877
Alliance, The Holy, a treaty so called, concluded, at Paris, Sept. 26, 1815, 1110, 1224; denounced by the British parliament, 1110
Almanacs, duty on, repealed, 1834, 1213
Almanza, battle of, April 25, 1707, 713
Almeida, siege of, surrendered to the French, Aug. 1810, 1079
Almenara, battle of, July 27, 1710, 725
Alompra, his conquests; ascends the Birman throne, 1170
Althorp, viscount, Chancellor of the Exchequer, 1830, 1187; his budget for 1831, 1188; description of, by Francis Jeffrey, 1191; interview of Jeffrey with, just after the resignation of the Grey ministry, 1831, 1197; speech on moving the second reading of the bill for the suppression of disturbances in Ireland, 1833, 1204; financial statement, 1205; his bill for limiting the hours of labor in factories, passed, 1208; introduces the Poor-law Amendment bill, 1834, 1209, 1211; moves the adjournment of the debate on the Irish Church question and the previous question, 1212; resigns his chancellorship, 1834; reasons for doing so, ib., 345; resumes it again in the Melbourne administration; brings forward a modified Coercion bill, 1213; financial statement and proposed reduction of taxes, ib.; his removal to the Lords (as earl Spencer); the ostensible cause of the dismissal of the Melbourne ministry, 1214
Alt Ranstadt, peace of, Sept. 24, 1706, 733
Alum Shah, Great Mogul; seeks British protection, 869; Hastings deprives him of the money and district granted by Clive, 946; his power restored to him by general Lake, 1050
Alvinzy commands the Austrian army in Italy; defeats Bonaparte at Caldiero, Nov. 12, 1796; repulses Bonaparte's attempts to cross the bridge of Arcole; retreats to Vicenza, 1012; compels Joubert to retreat to Rivoli, 1797, 1017; where he is defeated by Bonaparte, Jan. 14, ib.
Amboyna acquired by the British, 1810, 1167.
Ameer Khan. See Khan Ameer.
Ameer Singh. See Ochterlony.
Amelia, princess, her illness affects George III.'s mind, 1080; dies Nov. 2, 1810, ib.
American affairs. British possessions in North America, 828; war between the British and French, 1754-63, 828, 837, 839; government and prosperity of the British colonies, 849; the resistance to the Stamp Act, 1764-66, 850, 852; the passing of the Revenue Act causes renewed disturbances, which are slightly abated on the repeal of all the duties except that on tea, 861-864; the destruction of the tea in Boston harbor induces the home government to adopt coercionary measures, which still further embitter the American spirit, 870-873; hostilities commence April, 1775, at Lexington, 873; and the war continues till 1782, when the independence of America is recognized by Great Britain, 874-888, 892, 893, 894-898, 907-909; government and condition of the United States, 1095; party spirit, ib.; the United States declare war against Great Britain, June, 1812, chiefly on account of the right of search being claimed by the latter country; the war was terminated by the peace of Ghent, 1815, 1096-1101
American Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1776, 878; copy of the declaration, ib.
American Secession: threatened separation of the North and South, 1099
American Stamp Act. See Stamp Act.
Amherst, sir Jeffery: general, 1758; commander of the English troops in America; captures Louisbourg, 837; succeeds Abercrombie; captures Ticonderoga, July, 1759, 839; co-operates with Wolfe against Quebec; embarks on Lake Champlain; driven back by storms, ib.; removed from the governorship of Virginia, 862
Amherst, lord, governor-general of India, 1823, 1170; unable to maintain peace; war with the Birman empire, 1824-6, 1170, 1171; comparative freedom of the press in India under his administration, 1172
Amiens, Peace of, negotiation for, 1039; concluded March 27, 1802, 1040; terms of the treaty, ib.
Anderson, William, a printer of libellous pamphlets against the government, indicted for high treason, convicted and executed, 657
André, major: adjutant-general; carries on a secret correspondence with Arnold on the part of Clinton; his interview with Arnold, 1780, 893; he is captured as a spy, tried by court-martial, and sentenced to death, ib.; execution, October 2, ib.
André, M. P. H., introduces lithography into England, 1801, 1140
Anglesey, H. W. Paget, marquis of, distinguishes himself in Moore's retreat, 1808, 1070; lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 1076; is convinced of the expediency of granting concessions to the Catholics, 1176
Anglo-Saxon agriculture in Alfred's time, 28 et seq.
Anglo-Saxon Church, ignorance of the priests of, at the accession of Alfred, 28; state of, at the time of Dunstan, 43; cathedrals and churches of the, 43; provisions for the clergy, 43; parish priests of the, ib.; learning of the, 44
Anglo-Saxon kings, authority of, 26; their mansions, 26
Anglo-Saxons, state of, at the time of Ethelbert, 22; literature of, 24; social ranks among, 27; love of feasting indicated in the Bayeux tapestry, 53; continued resistance of, to William the Conqueror, 57; security afforded to by the establishment of Norman fiefs, 59; continued existence of, as a people, 59.
Anhalt-Dessau, prince of, his military inventions, 662
Anjou, duke of, renounces his claim to the throne of France, 734
Ankerstroem. See Gustavus III.
Anne, the princess, and her husband, go over to William III., 597; Anne's marriage to prince George of Denmark, 1689, 34; applies to parliament for an increased income, and has it increased from 20,000*l.* to 50,000*l.* per annum, 634; friendship for Mrs. Churchill (alias Mrs. Freeman), ib.; quarrels with her sister, queen Mary, 650; Mrs. Freeman is commanded to leave the royal palace, Anne goes with her, 650; her position and character in 1695, 661; accession of, March 8, 1702, 688; declares to the privy council her intention of carrying on the war-like preparations against France commenced by William III., 689; her address to parliament, which continues to sit; her fine voice, ib.; favors the Tory party, ib.; speech at the close of the session, 1702, ib.; meets her first Parliament, Oct. 20, 690; grants Marlborough a dukedom and 5000*l.* a year, 692; opens the session of parliament, Nov. 9, 1703, ib.; announces the conclusion of the Methuen treaty with Portugal, ib.; entertains Charles, archduke of Austria, at her court, acknowledging him as king of Spain, ib.; stops a contest between the Lords and Commons by proroguing parliament, ib.; Queen Anne's bounty restoring the first fruits and tenths to the church, 693; revives the practice of touching for the king's evil, ib.; provides out of the privy purse for fresh recruits, 694; grants Woodstock to Marlborough, 699; prorogues parliament, Mar. 14, 1704, ib.; exhorts the Commons to follow up Peterborough's successes in Spain, 702; indignant at the Tories for raising the question of the succession, 705; revived the Order of the Thistle, 1703; announces the ratification of the Union treaty, 712; speech on giving her assent to the Act of Union, ib.; she determines to continue the war; receives speedy supplies from parliament, 713; Marlborough presents her letter to Charles XII., ib.; dismisses Harley; she grows cold towards Mrs. Freeman, and makes Mrs. Masham her new favorite, 715; death of her husband, George of Denmark, Oct., 1708, 716; supposed to have private audiences with Harley; her opinions regarding a successor, ib.; her temper tries Marlborough's patience, ib.; her interviews with Harley, 719; present at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, ib.; public addresses to, 722; advises the nation to be quiet, 723; dismissal of Whigs from office, 724; dissolves her third and calls her fourth parliament, ib.; announces her determination to support the Church of England, ib.; dismisses the Duchess of Marlborough from her service, the "key" scenes, ib.; her anger at the duchess's revenge; makes the duchess of Somerset her lady of the wardrobe, and Mrs. Masham the keeper of the privy purse, 725; parliament addresses her on the subject of Harley's narrow escape from assassination, 727; promises not to make peace with France unless in concert with the Dutch, 728; opens parliament Dec. 7, 729; dismisses Marlborough from his offices, ib.; creates twelve new peers, contrary to Lord Dartmouth's advice, 730; announces to parliament the commencement of negotiations for peace at Utrecht, ib.; the terms upon which peace may be made, 734, and the conclusion of the treaty, 735; intriguing of the Jacobites, 736; calls upon parliament to suppress seditious papers, ib.; her agitation at the contest between Oxford and Bolingbroke brings on a sudden illness, July 27, and she dies Aug. 1, 1714, ib.
Anson, George: commodore, 1741; his expedition to Peru; difficulties encountered in doubling Cape Horn; half his crew killed by scurvy; takes refuge in Juan Fernandez; secures prizes; attacks Paita, 794; enters Canton; returns to Spithead, June, 1744, ib.; defeats the French off Cape Finisterre, May 3, 1747, 819; first lord of the admiralty, 1757, 835; commands an expedition against St. Maloes. 1758; his partner, the duke of Marlborough, fails in taking St. Maloes; Cherbourg taken, 837
Anti-Corn-Law League, the, 1243
"Anti-Jacobin," the, started by Canning, Nov. 20, 1797, 1017
Antonius, wall of, 11
Antwerp surrenders to Marlborough, 1706, 706; taken by Dumouriez, Nov. 30, 1792, 983, 993
Appeal of murder: case of Ashford and Thornton; lord Eldon supports the bill for abolishing the practice, 1131
Appropriation, principle of, in granting supplies, established 1689, 624
Apsley, lord. See Bathurst, earl.
Arapiles. See Salamanca.
Arbuthnot, admiral, conveys Clinton and his forces from New York to Charleston, 892
Archer, Thomas, architect of St. John the Evangelist, Westminster, 755
Architecture, state of, in Britain, at the close of the third century, 16; as shown in English abbeys and cathedrals, 76; bishop Swinfield's house in 1209, 121; London markets and shops, ib.; domestic, in the 15th century, 184; large consumption of timber in building dwelling-houses, ib.; furniture used in the houses, ib.; improvements in building, temp. Henry VIII., 295; style of architecture in the reign of Elizabeth, 395; alterations by Wren, at Windsor Castle, by Charles II. in 1680, 568; encouraged by William III., 752; Wren, ib.; he commences the rebuilding of London, ib.; building of St. Paul's, 753; Wren's parish churches, 754, and miscellaneous buildings, ib.; Vanbrugh; his late adoption of the profession of an architect, ib.; general character of his works, 755; Hawksmoor; his St. Mary's, Woolnoth, Limehouse church, and St. George's, Bloomsbury, ib.; Gibbs' St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, ib.; T. Archer's St. John the Evangelist; Talman's Chatsworth; Flitcroft's Woburn Abbey; amateur architects, Dean Aldrich; Dr. Clarke; and Burlington, ib.; sir R. Taylor, 934; Dance; the Woods; and the Adams, ib.; sir W. Chambers, the architect of Somerset House, ib.; Stuart, Revett, Smirke, 935; Wyatt, ib.; bridge building and builders, ib.; low state of architectural taste and imitation of Greek models, 1142; the latter instanced in the case of St. Pancras church, ib., 1144; James Wyatt, his classic and gothic buildings, 1142; his gothic restorations, ib.; Samuel Wyatt, ib.; sir John Soane's buildings at the Bank of England and elsewhere, 1143; Holland and Sir R. Smirke, ib.; Wilkins, ib.; Nash, the architect of Regent Street, 1144; and of the Regent's Park terraces and canals, ib.; St. Marylebone church; extraordinary revival of church building, ib.; Thomas Telford; his bridges at Montford, Buildwas, and at the Menai straits; his other grand works, ib.; Rennie; his Waterloo Bridge and engineering works at various dockyards, ib.
Arcole, battle of, Nov. 1796, 1011.
Arcos, duke of, invests Valentia, 702; opposes Peterborough's passage to Valencia; decamps; Peterborough effects an entrance, ib.
Arcot captured by Clive, who is besieged in it by Sahib's army 827; repulses all their attacks and drives them off, ib.
Arden of Feversham, story of the murder of, in 1551, 296.
Aremberg, duke of, commands the Austrians at Dettingen, 1743, 797.
Argyle, marquis of, defeated by Montrose, 467; opposes the project of sending Hamilton to invade England, 484; is restored to power after Hamilton's defeat, 485; trial and execution of, in 1661, 530.
Argyle, the earl of, refuses to take, without reserve, the test oath enacted by the Scottish parliament in 1682, is arrested and convicted of high treason, but escapes to Holland, 573; lands in Scotland in 1685 to raise an insurrection in favor of Monmouth, 580; its failure, ib.; and his execution, ib.
Argyle, Archibald Campbell, earl of, tenders the Coronation Oath to William III., 630.
Argyle, Archibald Campbell, duke of, colonel; commands the Highlanders at Falkirk, 1746, 813; his plantations at Inverary, 1108
Argyle, John Campbell, duke of, Commander of George I.'s army in Scotland, 1715, 762; commences operations against the insurgents, 763; marches against Mar; meets him at Sheriffmuir, and there fights him, 13th of Nov., 765; compels the retreat of the rebel army; pursues it to Aberdeen, and disperses the troops, ib.; deserts Walpole; is deprived by him of all his employments, 1739, 792; desires to form a coalition ministry; retires, 1742, 796.
Aristocracy, manners and position of, 1689-1714, 619; fear of their being destroyed by the Reform Bill of 1831, 1188; it cannot be a caste in England, 1189
Arkwright, sir Richard, establishes his first cotton-mill at Cromford, near Matlock, 915; activity of, and early career; exhibits his new machine, 1768, at Preston; mobbed; goes to Nottingham; takes out his first patent, 1769, 924; description of his machine, 925; difficulties overcome in establishing its commercial value, ib.
Arles, three British bishops present at first Council of, A.D. 314, 17.
Armorica, foundation of a British colony in, 18; independent government established by, ib.
Armstrong, John, his "Art of Preserving Health;" appeared 1744, 936.
Army, establishing of a standing, as an integral part of government, 1689, 625; strength of, in 1692, 650; 1694, 659; reduced 1697, 669; disbanded 1699, 680; number of soldiers voted in 1702, 687; standing armies denounced by Pulteney, 1732, 782; increased, 832; debate on the army estimates, 1790; its increase opposed by Burke, 967; armies of England and France, 1041.
Arnold, Benedict, an American revolutionist, 1775, 874; appears before Quebec; attacks the city, Dec. 31, and is severely wounded, 877; general, commands an army of irregular troops in conjunction with Gates, 882; attacks Burgoyne's position, ib.; his treachery; interview with André, 893; lands at Jamestown; makes an incursion into Virginia; burns Richmond, 896.
Arnold, Dr., sermon of, at the time of the cholera, 1831, 1195; his History of Rome, 1257.
Arnot sent from India, and his paper, "The Calcutta Journal," suppressed, 1172.
Artevelde, James, revolt of, against the count of Flanders, 136; is murdered July, 1345, ib.
Arthur, king, legend of, 20.
Arthur of Brittany, claims of, to the crown of England, 98; is supported by Philip of France, 99; heads an invasion of Poitou, and is captured, ib.; mysterious death of, ib.
Artois, count J. See Charles X. of France.
Arts, Society of. See Societies.
Arts, state of, in Britain at the close of the third century, 16; sketch of the state of, in the seventeenth century, 620; patronage of the, by Charles I. and his court, 751; low state of the, during the civil war, 752; William and Mary patronize architects, but give little encouragement to painters and sculptors, ib.; architecture, 751-775; sculpture, 756; painting, 757; revolution in the, middle of the 18th century, 922; the duke of Bridgewater's canal schemes carried out by Gilbert, 923; and Brindley, 923; invention of machines for manufacturing cotton, 924, 926; Watt's improvements in the steam engine, 929; close connection between the fine and the industrial, ib.; artists stimulated by the Society of Arts, 930; low state of art temp. Geo. II., ib.; painting, 1760-83, ib.; engraving, 933; sculpture, 934; architecture, 934; restoration of the art specimens in the Louvre to their original countries, 409.

Arundel, earl of, collection of statuary formed by, 431.
Asaph ul Dowlah, nabob and vizier of Oude, consents to the seizure of his mother's and grandmother's property in liquidation of Hastings' demands upon him, 950.
Ashburton, A. Baring, lord, master of the mint, president of the board of trade, 1021; concludes the Boundary Treaty with the United States, 1060.
Ashby, his proceedings against the returning officer of Aylesbury for refusing his vote, in 1703, leading to disputes between the houses of Lords and Commons on their respective prerogatives, 692.
Ashford and Thornton, case of, 1130.
Ashley, Lord A. A. Cooper; his maiden speech in parliament on the Treason bill, 664.
Ashmolean museum built by Wren, 754.
Ashridge, Hertfordshire, built by James Wyatt; character of its architecture, 1142.
Ashton, John, a Jacobite agent, tried for high treason, and convicted, 1691, 643.
Aske, Robert, leader of the Yorkshire insurgents in 1536, 271; negotiations of, with the duke of Norfolk, ib.; has an interview with Henry VIII., and is pardoned, ib.; the king's promises to the insurgents are not kept, and Aske again takes arms, 272; is taken prisoner and executed, ib.
Aspern, battle of, May 21, 22, 1809, 1074.
Assassination plot, 1696, against William III., 664-666.
Assassins, notice of, 94; the scheik of, absolves Richard I. from any share in the murder of the marquis of Montferrat, 94.
Asseerghur, taken by colonel Stevenson, 1055.
Asser, his account of the early years of Alfred, 26; interpolations in the history of, 31.
Assignats circulated by the National Assembly; their depreciated value drive the people to plunder and rebel, 1793, 994.
Assye, battle of, Sept. 23, 1803, 1055.
Astley, printer, proceeded against for his concern in publishing an account of lord Lovat's trial, 1747, 819.
Asturias, prince of. See Ferdinand VII. of Spain.
Ath taken by Marlborough, Oct. 4, 1706, 706
Athelstan, accession of, in 924, 38; annexes Northumbria, and rules over all Britain, 39; continental influence and alliances of, ib.; attacked by the under-kings of Cumberland and Scotland, he wins the battle of Brunanburgh, ib.; code of laws of, 40; death of, in 940, ib.
"Athenian Gazette," 1691-1696, published by Dunton, 737
Atkins, alderman, opposes the formation of a gas company as being destructive of the whale fishery, 1119
Athlone, earl of. See Ginkel.
Athlone, besieged and taken by Ginkel, June 30, 1691, 644
Athol, duke of. See Tullibardine.
Athol, Marquis of, his influence and dishonesty, 629; supports the government, 1689; shut out of Blair Castle, 631
Attainder, bill of, against sir John Fenwick, 667
Atterbury, bishop of Rochester, speaks against granting indulgence to Quakers; enthusiastic in the Pretender's cause, 776; one of the editors of Clarendon's "History," ib.; arrest of, and committal to the Tower; causes a ferment in his church party, ib.; proceeded against by bill enacting his punishment and deprivation; his trial, 1723, ib.; and condemnation; embarks for France, June, 1723; and dies at Paris, 1732, 777
Attwood, M. P. for Birmingham; moves an inquiry into the effect of the monetary system on the distress of the people, 1833, 1205
Auchmuty, sir S., takes Monte Video, 1807, 1063; his share in the attack on Buenos Ayres, 1064
Auckland, lord, president of board of trade; master of the mint, 1196; first lord of the admiralty, 1834, 1212; governor-general of India; publishes a declaration of the causes and objects of the Afghan war, 1248.
Auerstadt. See Jena.
Augereau, one of Bonaparte's generals, 1011; arrests sixty members of the Legislative Councils, 1017
Augustin sent by Pope Gregory as Christian missionary to England, A.D. 597, 21; lands in the isle of Thanet, ib.; converts Ethelbert, 22; conference and disagreement of, with the priests of the old British church, ib.
Augustina, the brave defendress of Zaragoza, 1808, 1069
Augustus II. of Poland; elector of Saxony; deposed by Charles XII., 713-718; peace of Alt Ranstadt with Charles XII., Sept. 24, 1706, 733; king of Poland, 1690-1704; restored, 1709, ib.; succeeded by his son, Augustus III., 1733, 784
Augustus III. of Poland enters into the coalition against Prussia, 831; blockaded in his camp at Pirna; his army surrenders unconditionally, ib.
Aurungzebe refuses to give any protection to the new East India Company, 669
Austen, Jane; high character of her six novels, 1140
Austerlitz, battle of, Dec. 2, 1805, 1052
Autun, in Gaul, artificers brought from Britain by Constantine to rebuild, 16
Auverquerque. See D'Auverquerque.
Ava, king of, his aggression on British India; threatens to overrun our territory: the Birman war breaks out, 1170; his own territory is invaded by sir A. Campbell, and he is compelled to agree to the treaty of Yandaboo; terms of the treaty, ib.
Aylesbury election case, 1703, 692
Ayrshire, agriculture and peasantry of, 921

Bacon, John (1740-1799), character of his sculpture, 934; rilievi on Trinity House, by, 1143
Bacon, Friar Roger, notice of, 121
Bacon, sir Francis, speaks against a subsidy, and loses the Court favor, 383; dissuades Essex from undertaking the lord-lieutenancy of Ireland, 389; ungrateful conduct of, in the prosecution of the earl of Essex, 391; notice of his Apology, ib.; opposes the bill in the Commons against monopolies, 392; maintains the necessity of removing ancient abuses in the first parliament of James I., 399; scheme of, for the plantation of Ulster, 410; is employed to procure the sanction of sir Edward Coke to the king's arbitrary measures, but fails, 414; assures Raleigh that his appointment to command the expedition to Guiana precluded the necessity of a general pardon, 415; is impeached by the Commons and fined for bribery and corruption, 418; the king remits his fine, and he retires to private life, ib.
Bacon, sir Nicholas, appointed lord keeper, and opens Elizabeth's first parliament, 337; as lord keeper, introduces to parliament a new bill against papists in 1571, 356
Badajos surrenders to Soult, March 11, 1811; besieged by Beresford; relieved by Soult, May 15, 1082; siege and capture of, by the British under Wellington, April 7, 1812, 1085
Baden, margrave of, beseeches Marlborough for aid against Tallard, 695
Baden, peace of, Sept. 7, 1714, 733
Bailly, J. S., mayor of Paris, 1789, 963; harangues the king, 695; attempts to put down mob-dictation, 971; executed Nov. 1793, 1000
Baines, Mr., of Leeds, detects the spy system, 1817, 1124
Baird, sir David; general, 1038; joins Moore, 1808, 1070; second in command at Corunna; carried off from the battle, ib.
Bakewell, Robert, great skill of, in fattening sheep, 914
Balcarres, earl of, a confidential agent of James in Scotland, 629; with Dundee urges Gordon not to leave Edinburgh Castle, ib.; arrested, 630
Bales aids in bribing the duke of Leeds to procure a charter of confirmation for East India Company, 1695, 661
Balfe found guilty of murdering Mr. Clarke; pardoned, 858
Ballads, the Robin-Hood, endurance of, 96; their detestation of oppression, and poetical excellence, 97; popular amusements described in, ib.
Balliol, Edward, attempts to recover the crown of Scotland in 1332, 135; seeks the aid of Edward III., and agrees to hold Scotland as a fief, ib.; continues the struggle for several years, but is expelled from Scotland in 1341, ib.
Balliol, John, a claimant of the crown of Scotland in 1291, 123; agrees to do homage to Edward I., and is nominated king of Scotland, 124; summoned to Westminster for mal-administration, is treated with indignity, and is incited by his barons to assert his independence, ib.; renounces his fealty to Edward, ib.; is attacked by Edward, and resigns his crown at Montrose, ib.; imprisoned in the Tower, 125; dies, 127
Ballot, the; its supporters, 1209
Balmerino, Lord, trial and execution of, 1746, 818
Bamford, Samuel, a radical; quotations from his life illustrative of the acts, opinions, and objects of the demagogue reformers of 1816-19, 1121, 1123, 1132; leads the Middleton men at the great Manchester reform meeting, 1819, 1132; his description of the massacre, 1133; tried for his concern in the Manchester meeting, and sentenced to imprisonment, 1151
Bancroft, Dr., repudiates the scheme of burning the British dockyards, 880
Banda isles acquired by the British, 1810, 1167
Bandoola, Maha, commander of the Birman army, 1170; his unsuccessful attack on Rangoon; and defence of Donoopew; killed Mar. 1825, ib.
Bangalore stormed by lord Cornwallis, Mar. 21, 1791, 989
Bangor, massacre of the monks of, 22
Bank of England established 1694, 659; unable to pay its notes in specie, 666; competes with the South Sea Company in buying up the annuities, 1720, 773; attacked by a mob, 1780, 891; heavy pressure upon the, 1797, 1013; ordered by government to stop cash payments, ib.; pays all demands in bank-notes, which become the staple currency for years, ib.; forged notes, and the punishment for forging them, in 1816, 1820, and 1823, 1118; secret committees appointed to inquire into the state of the, 1819, 1130; Peel's act for the gradual resumption of cash payments, ib.; Soane enlarges and remodels it, 1143; run upon the, in consequence of a money panic, 1825, 1163; public credit saved through the measures adopted by the, ib.; effects of the exclusive privilege of the, on the currency circulation, ib.; removed by the sanctioning of joint-stock banks with any number of partners beyond sixty-five miles of the branch banks of the, established, 1826, 1164; new charter granted to the, 1833; the more important provisions of it, 1208; renewal of its charter, 1269; government interference with the Bank Act during the commercial panic of 1844, 1283
Bankruptcy Court bill, lord Brougham's, 1188; it receives the royal assent, Oct. 20, 1831, 1193
Banks, Thomas, his monument of Chatham, 886; the first great English sculptor, born 1735, died 1805; character of his works, 934, 1145
Banks, Joseph, accompanies Capt. Cook to New South Wales as naturalist, 847
Bannockburn, battle of, on June 24, 1314, 129
Barbesieux, son of Louvois; French Secretary of State; revives the project of shooting William III., 653
Barcelona besieged and taken by the Earl of Peterborough, 1705, 701; besieged by Philip V., 702; relieved by Peterborough, 703
Barclay, Sir George, one of the participators in the plot to assassinate William III., 1696, 664; the plot discovered; escape of, 665
Barére pronounces the doom of Lyon, 998; on his motion queen Marie Antoinette is sent before the Revolutionary Tribunal, 1000; his story of the Vengeur, 1005; moves that no quarter be given to the English and Hanoverians, ib.
Baring discerns a loss in our increased exports, 1815, 1115; foresees ruin as the result of Huskisson's free trade measures, 1160
Baring, F. T., a lord of the treasury, 1187
Baring, Alexander. See Ashburton.
Barlow, Sir George, governor-general of India, 1805, 1056; recalled by the British ministry; superseded by Lord Minto, 1168
Barnard, Sir William, M.P. for London; favors the repeal of the Septennial act, 784
Barnave, protects the French royal family from the mob, 1791, 972
Barnet, battle of, April 14, 1741, 198
Barosch surrenders to the British, 1803, 1054
Barras sent to punish the Toulonese, 1000; commands the municipal troops, 1794, 1005; general-in-chief of the army of the interior, 1795, 1009; his share in the revolution of the 18th Fructidor, 1797, 1017; a member of the French Directory, 1031; his conduct in the revolution of the 18th Brumaire, 1799, ib.; resigns, ib.
Barré, Colonel, his speech against Pitt, 1761, 844; his remarks on the repeal of the American duty, 863; remonstrates against the Massachusetts Bay Government bill, 1774, 877; pension granted to, 1782, 901; Pitt presents him with the Clerkship of the Pells, 952
Barrier, the, treaty, Nov. 15, 1715, 733
Barrington, William, viscount, moves for Wilkes' expulsion from the House of Commons, 1768, 856; Chancellor of the Exchequer, 1761, 865
Barrington, sir Jonah, his description of Dublin anticipating an attack from the United Irishmen, 1798, 1024; and of the passing the Union bill in the Irish House of Commons, 1800, 1028
Barosa, battle of, March 5, 1811, 1081
Barry, James, his mural paintings on the walls of the Society of Arts room; his enthusiasm and patriotic conduct connected with them; his attempt not quite successful, 936
Bartells, a Belgian insurrectionist; tried, found guilty, banished, 1830, 1184
Barthelemi, a member of the French Directory; arrested; banished, 1797, 1017
Bartholomew, St., priory of, in Smithfield, foundation of, 76
Barton, Andrew, the Scotch privateer, captured, and slain by Sir Thomas Howard, 227
Basle, peace of, April 5, 1795, 1040
Bassein taken by General Goddard, 949
Bassein, treaty of, Dec. 31, 1802, 1054
Bastia captured by Nelson, 1794, 1007
Bastile attacked by the mob, July, 1789, 963; defence conducted by De Launay, ib.; he capitulates, ib.; the prisoners released, ib.
Bataille, abbey of (Battle Abbey), foundation of, 55
Bath, the great resort of pleasure-seekers in the time of Queen Anne, 604; gaming at, 941
Bath, earl of. See Pulteney.
Bathiany, marshal, commands the Austrians at Laufeld, July, 1747, 820
Baths and wash-houses, establishment of, and benefits derived from, 1228; encouraged by an act of Parliament, 1846, 1279
Bathurst, Allen, lord, progress of America during his lifetime described by Burke, 873
Bathurst, earl; foreign secretary in the Portland ministry, 1809, 1062, 1325; secretary for war and colonies, 1812, 1148, 1325; speech on the restraints put on Napoleon, 1821, 1155; indignation caused by his circular prohibiting the flogging of slaves, 1161; resigns, 1827, 1165
Bautzen, battle of, May 20, 21, 1813, 1099
Bavaria, elector of. See Charles VII. of Germany.
Bavaria, elector of, aids William in the war with the Netherlands, 1695, 662; captures Namur, ib.; joins France; aids in the campaign against Marlborough, 1703; surprises Ulm, 691; refuses to quit France and join the Allies, 1704, 696; consequently his electorate is desolated by the Allies, ib.; joined by Tallard, 697; defeated at Blenheim, ib.; his hard struggle with Eugene, ib.; with Villeroy he threatens Holland, 704; defeated by Marlborough at Ramilies, 706
Bavaria, electoral prince of, his claim to the Spanish throne, 677; appointed successor to the throne by the Partition treaty, and Charles II.'s will; dies Feb. 5, 1699, 678
Bavaria, elector of, an ally of France; driven from his capital by the Austrians, 1805, 1050; made king of Bavaria by Bonaparte, 1805, 1052; compelled to join the Allies, 1813, 1090; attends the congress of Vienna, 1815, 1109
Bavaria, electorate of, devastated by the Allies, 1704, 696
Baxter, Richard, expelled from his ministry at Kidderminster, 456; joins the parliamentary army, ib.; his account of the battle at Edgehill, ib.; statement of, as to the oppression of non-conformists by the royalists, 458; his account of the adoption of the Covenant by the synod at Westminster and the House of Commons, 463 ; visit of, to the battle-field of Naseby, 468 ; description of the parliamentary camp, 469 ; appointed chaplain to Charles II., 536 ; notices of the Plague of 1665 by, 543 ; of the great fire of London in 1666, 547 , notice of the duke of Buckingham by, 552 ; account of the proposals for a union of Protestants, which were rejected by parliament, 553 ; oppression experienced by, in 1675, 559 ; is tried, convicted, and imprisoned for libel in 1685, 580.

Bayeux Tapestry, illustrations of the history of England afforded by, 53
Baylen, battle of, July 21, 1808, 1069
Bayonne, treaty of, May 5, 1808, 1094
Beachy Head, battle off, June, 1690, 639
Bean, J. W., his attempt on the Queen's life, 1842, 1263
Beaufort, cardinal Henry, feuds between, and the duke of Gloucester, 171 ; continued disagreements with Gloucester, 176 ; burns heretics, ib. ; causes the duchess of Gloucester to be tried for sorcery and conspiracy, ib. ; is suspected of having caused the death of Gloucester, 177 ; dies, ib.
Beaulieu, an Austrian general, defeated and beaten back by Bonaparte, 1796, 1011 ; superseded in his command by general Wurmser, ib.
Beaumarchais, author of Figaro ; introduces Stenben to Silas Deane, 882 ; lends him money, and freights a ship for him, ib.
Becket, Thomas à, romance in the marriage of the father and mother of, 80 ; early education of, ib. ; made chancellor to Henry II., 81 ; magnificence of, ib. ; is sent ambassador to France, ib. ; his attendance with a numerous force at the siege of Toulouse, 83 ; his preferments, 81 ; created archbishop of Canterbury in 1162, 84 ; character of, 83 ; deportment and magnificence of, in his new office, 84 ; resigns the chancellorship and claims the restoration of church property, ib. ; interferes to prevent the subjection of the clergy to the secular laws, 85 ; consents to the Constitutions of Clarendon, ib. ; the pope refuses to confirm them, 86 ; Becket supports the pope's decision, is arraigned as a traitor and found guilty, ib., flies from England, ib. ; excommunicates all those who maintain the Constitutions of Clarendon, ib ; meets Henry at Touraine in 1170, and a temporary peace is effected, 87 ; returns to England, ib. ; is murdered, ib. ; consequences of his murder, 88 ; canonization of, and miracles at the shrine of, ib. ; Henry does penance before the shrine, 90
Beckford, desires to see the king his own minister, 841 ; opposes coercionary measures against America, 862 ; alderman ; lord mayor of London, 1770 ; defends the London remonstrance ; his speech to the king, 864 ; Chatham in raptures at his spirited conduct ; death of, 1770, ib.
Beckwith, his shop plundered by a mob, 1816, 1122
Bede's account of the passage of the Romans at Coway stakes, 5
Bedford, John, duke of, appointed by the parliament joint protector, with the duke of Gloucester, of Henry VI., 171 ; wins the battle of Verneuil in 1424, ib. ; defeated at Montargis in 1427, 172 ; undertakes the siege of Orleans, 173 ; quarrels with the duke of Burgundy, ib. ; Orleans is relieved by Joan of Arc, ib. ; relinquishes the siege of Orleans, 174 ; deprives sir John Fastolf of the order of the Garter for his behavior at the battle of Patay, ib. ; dies, 176
Bedford, Francis, duke of, his agricultural improvements, 913 ; promotes the drainage of the Fens of Lincoln, 914
Bedford, John Russell, duke of ; secretary of state ; turned out of that office, 1752, 823 ; president of the council, 847 ; interview with George III. ; the king's indignation at his effrontery, 851 ; proposes that coercive measures be taken against America, 862
Bedfordshire, agricultural improvements of, 913
Beggars, statute of Richard II. in 1388, respecting, 151
Belgium, independence of, recognized, Nov. 1830, 1184, 1225
Belhaven, lord, a director of the African and Indian company ; found guilty, 674 ; speech of, in the Scottish parliament, against the Union, 1706, 710
Belle Ile, captured by the British, 1761, 843
Belliard commands at Cairo ; capitulates to the English, 1801, 1039
Bellingham, John, assassinates Mr. Perceval, May 11, 1812 ; trial and execution, 1082
Belmore, earl of, his opinions of the willingness of the freed slave to labor, 1207
Bennett moves for an inquiry into the state of the London police, 1118
Benningsen, general, commander of the Russian army ; engages Bernadotte at Pultusk ; defeated at Eylau, 1807, 1062
Bentinck, lord William, his operations in Italy disappoint Wellington, 1812, 1086 ; governor-general of India, 1172
Bentinck. See Portland, duke of.
Berar, rajah of. See Bhoonsla.
Beresford, marshal, drills the Portuguese, 1079 ; besieges Badajoz, 1811, 1082 ; Wellington's advice to, 1090
Bergen-op-Zoom surrendered to the French, Sept., 1747, 820
Berkeley, admiral, describes the bad state of the commissariat, 1809, 1076
Berkeley, admiral, entrusted with the reduction of Brest, 1694 ; Marlborough's treachery causes his attemps to fail, 659
Berkeley, earl of, proposes to George I. to kidnap the Prince of Wales ; first Lord of the Admiralty, 1718, 771
Berkshire, agriculture of, 916
Berlin Decree issued by Napoleon, Nov. 20, 1806, 1061, 1093 ; terms of, 1066, 1093
Berlin, treaty of, Aug. 5, 1796, 1040 ; convention of, Nov. 5, 1808, 1094
Bernadotte. See Charles XIV.
Bernard, sir Francis, governor of Massachusetts ; disputes with the Assembly, 861 ; recalled home, 862.
Bernard, sir John, his bill for regulating theatres, 790
Berne invaded and spoliated by the French, 1798, 1019
Berry, colonel, carries supplies to Enniskillen, and aids in defeating Macarthy, 1689, 626
Berry, captain, his bravery at the battle of St. Vincent, 1014
Berthier, Intendant of Paris, murdered by the mob, 1789, 964
Berthier, a general in the French army, 1011 ; withdraws Bonaparte from the Assembly, 1031 ; crosses the Alps at the head of a division of the army, 1035
Bertrand du Guesclin encounters the Black Prince at the battle of Najara, 144 ; captured and released by the English, ib. ; activity and success of, in the wars of Gascony, 145
Berwick, James Fitz James, duke of, defeated at Belturbet, 1690, 637 ; taken prisoner at Neerwinden, 656 ; sent to England to rouse the Jacobites, 664 ; secret visit to England for this purpose, ib. ; returns to France on the failure of the assassination plot, 665 ; keeps the Allied armies in check, 1704, 700 ; joins Philip of Spain, 703 ; compels the Allies to evacuate Madrid, and establishes Philip on his throne, 703, 713 ; commands the French army against Spain, 1719, 772 ; captures Fuenterabia and St. Sebastian, ib. ; opposes prince Eugene on the Rhine ; killed at the siege of Phillipsburg, 785.
Bewick, Thomas, reviver of wood engraving ; his principal works, 1148
Bhoonsla, rajah of Berar, joins the Alliance against the British, 1053 ; defeated at Assye and Argaum, 1055 ; signs a treaty of peace, ib.
Bhurtpore. See Combermere.
Bidgegur surrendered to Popham, 950
Bignor, Sussex, account of the remains of a Roman villa at, 16
Bill of Rights. See Rights.
Birkbeck, Dr., inaugurates the London Mechanics' Institution, 1823, 1174
Birmese war, 1824-1826, 1170
Birmingham, state of, in 1636, 431 ; long noted for its hardware trade, 606 ; riots at, against dissenters, 1791, 667 ; great reform meeting at, 1832, 1197 ; obtains parliamentary representation, 1200 ; population of, in 1831, and 1861, 1201 ; riots of 1839 in, 1238
Biron aids in the campaign in the Netherlands, 1792, 977
Bittern formerly existed in Lincolnshire, 608, and Wiltshire, ib.
Blackbourn, John, a nonjuror, ejected from two livings ; press corrector for Bowyer, 653
Blackfriars-bridge opened 1760 ; constructed by R. Mylne, 935
Blackstone, Dr., queen's solicitor-general ; his opinion as to Wilkes' rights to sit in parliament, 857
Blackwood, captain of the victory at Trafalgar, 105
Blackwood's Magazine, its influence and character, 1141
Blair, Hugh, popularity of his sermons, 1139
Blake, admiral, interrupts the operations of Rupert in the Irish seas, 494 ; follows Rupert to the mouth of the Tagus, 503 ; demands his expulsion by the Portuguese, or to be admitted into the harbor, is refused, and has a slight skirmish, ib. ; defeats Van Tromp in the Downs, May 19, 1652, ib. ; character of, 502 ; battles with Van Tromp and De Ruyter in 1652, ib. ; defeats Van Tromp off Cape La Hogue, Feb., 1653, and compels him to retire to Holland, ib. ; with Monk and Dean defeats Van Tromp near the North Foreland, ib. ; drives him back again to Holland in 1653, ib. ; gains a victory over the Dutch fleet, and Van Tromp is killed, July, 1653, 513 ; his remark on the dissolution of parliament by Cromwell, 516 ; subdues the African pirates, 519 ; conduct of, at Malaga, ib. ; captures two Spanish galleons off Cadiz, 521 ; gains a victory over the Spanish navy at Santa Cruz, 523 ; receives instruction to return home, ib. ; dies in 1657, within sight of Plymouth, ib. ; his body is disinterred from Westminster Abbey, and buried in St. Margaret's churchyard after the Restoration, 536
Blake, William, an engraver ; his designs, 1148
Blakeney, general, governor of Stirling Castle ; defends it against the Young Pretender, 1746, 813 ; defends St. Philip's Castle, Minorca, 1756, 830
Blanc, Louis, his remarks on the September massacres, 1792, 981
Blansac, camp marshal, surrenders the French army to the British, 1704, 698
Blanket meeting at Manchester, 1817, 934
Blenheim or Plenthiem, battle of, fought, Aug. 13, 1704, 697
Blenheim designed by Vanbrugh, 754
Blücher, marshal : routs the French at the battle of the Katzbach, Aug. 26, 1813, 1090 ; the Saxon cavalry desert to ; he places them in the rear, 1091 ; crosses the Rhine, 1092 ; battles with Napoleon at Brienne, Jan. 29, 1814, ib. ; Oxford degree conferred on, 1093 ; concentrates his army upon Sombref, 1105 ; maintains his position against Napoleon at the battle of Ligny, June 16, 1815, ib. ; marches to Wavre, ib. ; his share in the victory of Waterloo, 1107 ; his late arrival at the battle with Prussian troops, ib. ; Wellington remonstrates against his desire to kill Bonaparte, 1108 ; and interferes with his blowing up the bridge of Jena, 1109
Blunt, sir John, a South-sea director : the ministry favor his projects, 773
Boadicea, revolt led by, 9 ; destruction of Roman British cities during the revolt by, ib. ; defeat and death of, by poison, ib.
Board of Health, a central, formed, 1831, 1194
Boat, ancient, found in the river Arun in 1834, 5
Boats of the Britons, nature of, in which they went to the assistance of the Veneti, 4
Bohun, Edmund, the press licenser ; his party feeling : removed from his office, 655
Bois-le-Duc surrendered to the Dutch, 1794, 1107
Bolan Pass, passage of the, by the British army, 1839, 1249
Boleyn, Anne, birth and childhood of, 242 ; sent to the court of France with Mary, the sister of Henry VIII. in 1514, 242 ; the king's attachment to, publicly shown at Hampton Court, 242 ; incenses Henry against Wolsey, 245 ; writes to Cromwell in favor of Richard Herman, imprisoned for setting forth the Bible in English, 247 ; again incites Henry against Wolsey, 249 ; accompanies Henry to France in 1532, to meet Francis I., 252 ; married to Henry, 253 ; description of her coronation, 253 ; gives birth to Elizabeth, Sept. 7, 1533, 254 ; the king becomes jealous and sends her to the Tower, 261 ; her letter to the king, 262 ; true bills found against her and others, 263 ; trial and execution of, on May 19, 1536, 263 ; dying speech of, 263 ; doubts as to the guilt or innocence of, 264 ; letter from, to Henry VIII., 265
Bolingbroke. See St. John.
Bombay ceded to Charles II. ; by him assigned to the East India Company, 826
Bonaparte, Joseph, commands the army sent against Naples, 1060 ; enters Naples, Feb. 15, 1806, ib. ; proclaimed king, Mar. 30, ib. ; joins Victor in Spain, 1809, 1076 ; Marmont establishes a communication with, 1086 : defeated at Vittoria by Wellington, 1813, 1088 ; Napoleon declares him no longer king of Spain, 1814 ; appointed Napoleon's lieutenant, 1091 ; king of Spain, 1808-1814, 1310 ; king of Naples, 1806-1808, ib.
Bonaparte, Louis, proclaimed king of Holland, June, 1806, 1060 ; surrenders his sovereignty, 1811, 1081
Bonaparte, Louis Napoleon. See Napoleon III.
Bonaparte, Lucien, president of the Council of Five Hundred, 1799, 1031 ; his conduct during the overthrow of the Council on Nov. 10 (19th Brumaire), ib. ; urges his brother's claims to the gratitude of France, 1815, 1177.
Bonaparte, Napoleon : born at Ajaccio in Corsica, 865 ; early career, lieutenant-colonel of artillery, 1793 ; his opinion of Carteaux, 999 ; plan for reducing Toulon, ib. ; appointed second in command to Barras, 1795, 1009 ; suppresses the revolt of the sections of Paris, Oct. 5, ib. ; marries Josephine Beauharnois, Mar. 1796 ; submits a plan for the invasion of Italy to Carnot ; appointed chief of the army of Italy, 1010 ; reception by the army ; defeats D'Argenteau, Beaulieu, and Colli ; gains possession of Piedmont ; forces the passage of Lodi, 1011 ; levies heavy exactions from Milan and Pavia, ib. ; his plundering march to Leghorn, ib. ; where he seizes all the English merchandise ; defeats generals Quosnadowich and Wurmser ; defeated by Alvinzy at Caldiero, Nov. 12 ; battle of Arcole, ib. ; compels Alvinzy to retreat to Vicenza, ib. ; wins the battle of Rivoli, Jan. 14, 1797 ; Provera surrenders Jan. 16 ; and Mantua capitulates, Feb. 2, 1017 ; pursues the archduke Charles, and defeats him at Neumarkt, April 2 ; preliminaries of peace signed at Leoben, April 18 ; declares war against the Venetian republic, May 3, ib. ; enters Venice on the 16th and overthrows the republican government, ib. ; negotiates with Vienna, 1018 ; confers with the Austrian negotiators at Udine, Oct. 16 ; cedes Venice to Austria, ib. ; peace of Compo Formio concluded Oct. 17, ib. ; appointed to the command of the "Army of England," ib. ; arrives in Paris, Dec. 5 ; his interest in the preparations for invading England, 1019 ; persuades the Directory to send an expedition against Egypt, ib. ; appointed general-in-chief of the army in the East ; preparations at Toulon ; the expedition leaves Toulon, May 19, 1798, 1020 : seizes Malta, June, ib. ; his anxiety at the sight of a supposed English sail, ib. ; landing of his army at Alexandria, ib. ; proclamation of, to the people of Egypt, ib. ; marches across the desert ; gains the battle of the Pyramids, July 21 ; obtains possession of Cairo, 1021 ; receives the news of Bruey's defeat with calmness, 1022 ; his letter to Tippoo Sultaun, 1028 ; marches to Syria ; El-Arish surrenders, Mar. 18, 1799 ; and Gaza on the 25th, 1029 ; captures Jaffa, ib. ; siege of Acre, ib. ; returns to Cairo ; defeats the Turks at Aboukir, July 25, 1030 ; obtains the news of Europe for the past year, ib. ; posture of European affairs, July, 1799, ib. ; leaves Egypt, August 24 ; arrives at Frejus, Oct. 9 ; and at Paris on the 16th, 1031 ; revolution of the 18th Brumaire ; his critical position at the Assembly on the 19th, ib. ; overthrows the Directory, ib. ; becomes consul in conjunction with Sieyès and Ducos, ib. ; appointed First Consul for ten years, Dec., 1032 ; letter to George III., ib. ; hostile answer returned to it by lord Grenville, ib ; considers the answer a satisfactory one, 1034 ; his civil administration, ib. ; assumes the state of a sovereign, ib. ; joins his army at Dijon, ib. ; crosses the Alps by the pass of the Great St. Bernard, ib. ; enters Milan, May 30, 1800 ; gains the victory of Marengo, June 14 ; again in Paris, July 2, ib. ; threatens an invasion of England, 1801, 1039 ; his audience with marquis Cornwallis, ib. ; and demand upon England, 1802, 1041 ; effects of his rule upon French society ; Consul for life ; French encroachments, ib. ; his military establishment, ib. ; sends an expedition to reduce St. Domingo, ib. ; result of the expedition ; capture and death of the president, Toussaint L'Ouverture, 1042 ; publishes col. Sebastiani's report, ib. ; his interview with lord Whitworth, the English ambassador, ib. ; proceeds against Peltier for libel in an English court of law, ib. ; verdict given in his favor, ib. ; violence shown by, in his interview with lord Whitworth, 1043 ; arrests ten thousand English travellers in France, 1044 ; thus he rouses the national spirit of Great Britain, ib. ; prepares for invading England, ib. ; exercises his troops at Boulogne, 1045 ; declared emperor of France by the French senate, May 18, 1804, 1046 ; discovery of a conspiracy against ; fate of the conspirators, ib. ; murder of the duc d'Enghien, Mar. 20, 1047 ; Napoleon and his army at Boulogne, 1049 ; his anxiety, ib. ; persuaded by Decrès to give up the scheme of invading England, breaks up his Boulogne camp, 1050; Russia, Austria, and England coalesce against; marches across the Rhine and the Danube, ib.; compels 30,000 Austrians under general Mack to surrender at Ulm, Oct. 20, ib.; his invasion projects frustrated by the battle of Trafalgar, ib.; enters Vienna, Nov. 13, 1052; defeats the Russians and Austrians at Austerlitz, Dec. 2, ib.; his inhumanity towards the Russians; peace of Presburg, ib.; heads the Confederation of the Rhine, 1059; aggression of; murder of Palm, ib.; the French take possession of Naples, of which Joseph is proclaimed king, 1060; defeat of the French at the battle of Maida, ib.; takes the field against Prussia, ib.; position of the two armies, 1061; defeats the enemy at Jena, Oct. 14, 1806, ib.; entry into Berlin; issues the Berlin decree against England, ib.; entered Warsaw, Dec. 19; battle of Pultusk, Dec. 26, 1062; battle of Eylau, Feb. 8, 1807, ib.; defeats the Russians at the battle of Friedland, June 14, 1064; concludes the peace of Tilsit with Alexander, July, 1065; the interview on the raft on the Niemen, ib.; terms of the treaty, ib.; its secret articles, ib.; they become known to the British government, ib.; his rage on hearing the success of the English at Copenhagen, ib.; his continental system; endeavors to smother the British trade, 1066; secret treaty of Fontainebleau, 1067; schemes for possessing himself of the Peninsula, ib.; French invasion of Portugal, ib.; flight of the regent of Portugal to Brazil, ib.; abdication of Charles IV., March, 1808; entraps the king and his son, 1068; an insurrection breaks out in Madrid, ib.; general Dupont defeated and baffled by the Spaniards, 1069, battle of Baylen, July 21, ib.; unsuccessful attempt to take Zaragoza, ib.; defeat of the French at Vimiero, Aug. 21, ib.; retreat of Torres Vedras, ib.; convention of Cintra, 1070; arrives at Bayonne to take the command of his army, Nov. 3, ib.; pursuit of sir John Moore by; gives it up to Soult at Astorga, ib.; the battle of Corunna and death of Moore, 1071; destruction of the French squadron in the Aix roads by captain lord Cochrane, 1072; Austria declares war against France, ib.; leaves Paris, April 13; reaches Donauwerth on the 17th, ib.; sir A. Wellesley compels Soult to retreat from Oporto, ib.; the nations of Europe rise against France, 1073; battle of Eckmühl, April 22; entry of the French into Vienna, May 12; battle of Aspern, May 21 and 22; Napoleon shut up in the island of Lobau; 1074; insurrection of the Tyrolese, ib.; battle of Wagram, July 5; determines upon divorcing Josephine, ib.; the peace of Vienna, ib.; return to Paris, ib.; the British expedition to Walcheren, 1075; defeat of marshal Victor at Talavera, July 28; chagrin of, 1076; divorces Josephine; and marries the archduchess of Austria, 1078; Wellington's lines of Torres Vedras, 1079; surrender of Almeida and Ciudad Rodrigo to the French, ib.; battle of Busaco, Sept. 27, 1810, ib.; Wellington retires within his lines; distress of Massena's army, 1080; Louis Bonaparte resigns the sovereignty of Holland, which state is annexed to France, 1811, 1081; his power and aggrandizing view on the continent, ib.; battles of Barrosa, Fuentes de Onoro, and Albuera, 1082; withdraws troops from Spain for his expedition against Russia, 1085; capture of Ciudad Rodrigo by Wellington, ib.; siege of Badajoz, ib.; Marmont's manœuvres, 1086; defeat of the French at the battle of Salamanca, July 22, 1812, ib.; rage of, against Marmont, 1087; siege of Burgos, ib.; Wellington's retreat to Ciudad Rodrigo, ib.; he invades Russia, June, 1088; gains the battle of Smolensk, Aug. 16, and Borodino, Sept. 7; and enters Moscow, Sept 14, ib.; conflagration of Moscow; its evacuation, Oct. 19, ib.; destruction of his army in the retreat home, ib.; arrives at Paris, Dec. 18, 1089; defeats the Russians and Prussians at Lützen, May 2, 1813; and at Baützen, May 21, 22; armistice concluded, ib.; battle of Vittoria, ib.; battles at Dresden; death of Moreau, 1090; the French armies sustain several defeats in Germany, ib.; battle of Leipzig, Oct. 19, ib.; his retreat wins the battle of Hanau, ib.; Wellington in the Pyrenees, ib.; San Sebastian; the British army in France, 1091; battles of Wellington and Soult, ib.; preparations for a campaign in France; battle of Brienne, Jan. 29, 1814, ib.; battles with Blücher and Schwarzenberg; capitulation of Paris; battle of Orthez, 1093; Toulouse; he abdicates April 4, ib.; his kingdom of Elba; peace at Paris, ib.; lands in the Gulf of St. Juan, near Cannes, Mar. 1, 1815, 1102; the "Hundred Days" drama, ib.; retrospect of the restoration of the Bourbons, 1102–1104; discontent of the people under Bourbon rule, 1102; desire of the army for his return to France, 1103; his independent position at Elba; visited by sir N. Campbell, ib.; his escape; attributed to English complicity, ib.; the powers assembled in congress declare him liable to public vengeance; his advance; joined by Labedoyère, ib.; and marshal Ney; arrives in Paris, Mar. 21, 1104; his speech at the Champ de Mai, ib.; reorganizes his army; crosses the frontier, June 15, and joins his soldiers at Charleroi, ib.; Wellington's knowledge of his movements, ib.; the battle of Ligny, 1105; his manœuvres and march to the British position near Waterloo, ib.; the field of Waterloo, ib.; the position of the two armies, 1106; the struggle at Hougoumont, ib.; disconcerts his plans, ib.; the arrival of the Prussians; rout and panic in his army; his final stand; and flight; the pursuit of the French, 1107; he returns to Paris, June 21; the Chamber of Representatives compel him to abdicate, and require him to go to America, 1108; unable to escape he yields himself to captain Maitland; becomes an object of curiosity in Plymouth Harbor; portrait taken by sir C. Eastlake; St. Helena assigned him for his future residence; legal discussions concerning him, ib.; Wellington remonstrates against his being executed; Napoleon's hatred for Wellington, ib.; history's errors regarding the disposition of the Allies, and Wellington's conduct toward Napoleon, ib.; his opinion of the "Holy Alliance," 1110; abolished the slave traffic in France, ib.; his death-scene, May 5, 1821, 1155; parliamentary complaints on the unnecessary strictures imposed upon him, ib.; his expansive mind and want of moral sense, ib.; his public interment in the church of the Invalides, 1840, 1243

Bonchamps, M. de, a Vendean commander, mortally wounded at Chollet, 1001.

Bond, Oliver, a merchant; one of the United Irish directors; arrested 1797, 1024.

Bonner, bishop of London, deprived of his see, 313; exertions of, in 1555, to suppress heresy, 326; behavior of, to Hawkes, 329.

Bordeaux, duke of, Charles X. abdicates in his favor, 1830, 1133; his mother, the duchess of Berri, attempts to get up an insurrection for his benefit, 1222

Bordino, battle of, Sept. 7, 1812, 1088.

Boscawen, admiral, appointed to watch a French fleet, 1755, 828; commands the fleet sent against Louisbourg, 1758, 837; arrives there June 2; the place capitulates, July, ib.; defeats the French fleet in Lagos bay, Aug. 17, 1759, 888

Bosenden Wood tragedy. See Thom.

Boston, opposition to the Revenue Act in, 1768, 861; destruction of tea in the harbor, 1773, 870; Boston port bill, ib.; its reception at, 871; state of parties in, 1775, 875; battle of Bunker's Hill, ib.; blockaded by Washington, 876; evacuated by the British, Mar. 17, 1776, 877

Boston port bill passed, 1774, 870

Boswell, his visit to Boulton's works, 929

Bosworth, battle of, on Aug. 22, 1485, 211

Bothwell, earl of. See Mary of Scotland.

Bothwell Bridge, battle of. See Charles II., and Covenanters.

Bouchain besieged by Marlborough; surrenders, 1711, 728

Boufflers, marshal; present at the battle of Steinkirk, 1692, 653; reinforces the garrison of Namur; assumes the command of it, 1695, 661; surrenders, Aug. 26; detained a prisoner, but soon released again, 662; negotiates with Portland the points of the peace of Ryswick, July, 1697, 668; threatens Holland, 1703, 691; entrusted with the defence of Lille, 1708; capitulates, Dec. 29, 717

Bouillé, marquis de, engages to protect Louis XVI. in his flight to Montmédy, 1791, 972; the plan fails; the king is captured at Varennes, and Bouillé flies from France, ib.

Boulogne, projected invasion of Britain from, by Caligula, 7; lighthouse built at, by Caligula, ib.

Boulton, Matthew; Roebuck refuses him a share in Watt's patent, 929; becomes Watt's partner, ib.; Boswell's visit to his works, ib

Boundary treaty between England United States concluded, Aug., 1842, 1263

Bounty, Queen Anne's, restoring the first fruits and tenths to the church, 1703, 693

Bourbon, the constable, leads the emperor's (Charles V.) forces against Rome in 1527, 240; takes and sacks Rome, but is himself killed, 240

Bourbon isle, acquired by the British 1810, 1169

Bourienne, Bonaparte's secretary; quotations from, 1018, 1030; withdraws Napoleon from the Assembly, 1799, 1031; chargé d'affairs at Hamburg, 1067; instances of Napoleon's infringements of the continental system given by, ib.

Boutetort, lord, succeeds Amherst as governor of Virginia; opens the session; dissolves the Assembly, 862

Boydell, John, a skilful engraver; his large business in engravings, 934; his Shakespeare collection, ib.

Boyne, battle of the, July 1, 1690, 637

Braddock, gen.; his unsuccessful campaign on the Ohio, 1755; falls into an ambuscade, 828; and is slain, ib.

Brandenburg, elector of. See Frederick I. of Prussia.

Brandreth, Jeremiah, captain of the Derbyshire insurrectionists; his conduct in the insurrection, 1817, 1124

Brandywine, battle of the, Sept. 13, 1777, 882

Brathwaite, sir J., captures Pondicherry, 990

Bray, Dr., founder of parochial libraries; and one of the founders of the "Christian Knowledge Society," and the "Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts," 671

Breadalbane, lord, submits to the English government; is employed by it to conciliate the rebel Highland chiefs, 646; his plans not successful; under suspicion of appropriating the secret money, ib.; committed to Edinburgh Castle on a charge of high treason, 649; subsequently obtains a pardon, and is released, ib.

Breaking the line, whose invention was this? discussed, 900

Breda possessed by Dumouriez, 1793, 993

Breed's hill. See Bunker's hill.

Brereton, col., attempts to quell the Bristol riots, 1831, 1194; tried by court martial; shoots himself, ib.

Brest, expedition against, 1694; its failure, 659

Bridges and their designers, 935, 1144

Bridgewater, Francis Edgerton, duke of; his canal schemes; carried out by Brindley, 923; the father of British inland navigation, ib.; with his brother, the marquis of Stafford, the chief promoter of the Staffordshire canal, ib.

Bridport, lord, mutiny in his fleet at Spithead, 1797, 1015; offers redress and pardon, ib.

Brienne, Loménie de, archbishop of Toulouse; controller-general of France; dismisses the notables, 814; his scheme of La Cour Plenière, ib.; dismissed his controllership, ib.

Brienne, battle of, Jan. 29, 1814, 1092

Brigantes, revolt of, 11; joined by the Mæatæ; the revolt suppressed, ib.

Brindley, James, a millwright, 923; employed by the duke of Bridgewater to construct canals; his great works of the aqueduct over the Irwell, ib.; and the subterranean canals at Worsley, ib.; appearance of, ib.

Brissot, a Paris deputy at the Assembly on the left side, 974; heads a faction, 977; quarrels with Clavière; forces on a war with Austria, ib.; in prison, 995

Bristol, formerly the famous port of the West, 603; slave trading pursued by the merchants of; not discontinued till George III.'s reign; streets, ib.; increase of population, ib.; glass manufactories in, 607; great riot at, Oct., 1831, 1194

Britain, civilization and population of, at the time of Cæsar's invasion, 4; first invasion of, by Cæsar, and his retreat, 5; second invasion by, ib.; condition of the country at the time, ib. et seq.; strength and prosperity of, A.D. 296, 11; panegyric of Eumenius on the state of, ib.; Roman provinces of, 12; review of the domestic condition of, at the close of the third century, ib. et seq.; never a secure possession to the Romans, 15; resistance of, to the emperor Honorius, 18; close of Roman rule in Britain, A.D. 409, ib.; mixed character of the population of, at the time of the invasion of the Saxons, ib.

British army under Maximus refuse to return from Armorica, and found a colony in Brittany, 17, 18.

British art, ancient specimens of, 6.

British captives fight as gladiators before Claudius, 8.

British institution established, 1805, 1145.

British writers, chronological and analytical list of, 1311-1316

Britons, character of, by Diodorus Siculus, 4; by Ptolemy, ib.; resistance offered by, to the invasion of Cæsar, ib.

Brittany, position of and character of the early inhabitants of, 3; assistance afforded to, by the Britons, ib.; probable foundation of a British colony in, A.D. 388, 18; continued connection of, with Cornwall and Wales, ib.; successfully resists the emperor Honorius, and maintains its independence, A.D. 409, ib.

Britton, Thomas, the musical coal-man, 747

Brock, major-general; opposes Hull's invasion of Canada, 1812; drives him across the river Detroit, and compels him to surrender, Aug. 16, 1097; praises the conduct of the Indians employed in the British army, ib.

Brodie, sir Benjamin, his remarks on Oxford's insanity, 1240

Broglie, marshal de, minister of war; commander of the French troops, 962; leaves Paris for the frontiers, 963

Broke, captain of the "Shannon," challenges the American frigate "Chesapeake" to a fight, and succeeds in capturing her, June 1, 1813, and restoring the prestige of the British navy, 1098

Brooklyn, battle of, Aug. 27, 1776, 879

Brougham, lord; his eulogy on Erskine, 1008; his description of Robespierre's character, 1006; account of Wellington's interview with Pitt; and of Pitt's death-bed, 1052; his efforts in bringing about the repeal of the orders in council declaring France and her allies in a state of blockade, 1812, 1184; heads the opposition in parliament to the renewal of the income tax in 1816, 1113; defeat of the bill, 1114; his declamatory attack upon the regent, ib.; describes the state of the American trade in 1816, 1115; moves an inquiry into the state of education among the London poor; impulse given to the committee's proceedings by his energy, 1120; queen Caroline's chief legal adviser; defends her title, 1150; queen's attorney-general, 1820, 1151; announces the queen's arrival in England; opposes the appointment of a secret committee; defends his own conduct, ib.; takes part in the conference for averting a public proceeding, 1152; conducts the queen's defence at her trial, 1153; lays the case of Mr. Smith, a missionary, before parliament, 1824, 1161; supports the Canning ministry, 1165; objects to the duke of Wellington being prime minister; states that the schoolmaster is abroad, 1174; originates the "Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge," 1826, ib.; promotes the formation of the London University, ib.; speech on law reform, 1175; obtains the appointment of two commissioners to inquire into the state of the common law, and the law, and the laws affecting real property, ib.; fails in obtaining the establishment of local jurisdiction, 1830; subsequent partial adoption of his views, 1179; protests against the lord steward's treatment of the Commons; subsequent explanation, ib.; his attack upon the Wellington ministry, ib.; apologizes for his strong language, 1180; gives notice in parliament of his intention to introduce the subject of reform; on the resignation of the Wellington ministry he postpones his motion for a short time; lord chancellor, 1187; reluctance to accept this office, ib.; introduces a bill for establishing a new court in bankruptcy, 1831, 1188; boldness in urging the king to dissolve parliament, 1190; speech on the Reform bill, 1192; his Bankruptcy Court bill receives the the royal assent, 1193; with lord Grey obtains the king's permission to create peers to insure the passing of the Reform bill, 1198; speech of, on moving the second reading of the Poor Law Amendment bill, 1834, 1212; his hostility with lord Durham; speeches at Inverness, at the Grey banquet, Edinburgh, and at Salisbury, 1213; excluded from the Melbourne ministry, 1835; his indefatigable energy, 1217; speech on submitting a series of education resolutions to the Lords, ib.; his attack on the earl of Durham's proceedings; proposes and carries an Indemnity Act, which causes the earl's resignation, 1233; his speech on the enthusiasm manifested towards the queen, 1234; his "Historical Sketches of Statesmen" noticed, 1256

Browne, marshal, commands an Austrian army; defeated at Losowitz, 1756, 831; encamps before Prague, 1757, 835; defeated by Frederick at Prague, May 6, where he receives his death wound, ib.

Browning, Mrs., poetical quotation from, 1161; her poetry, 1259
Bruce, Robert, the elder, a claimant for the crown of Scotland in 1291, 123; agrees to do homage to Edward I., 124; sides with Edward in his invasion of Scotland, ib.
Bruce, Robert, the younger, stabs Comyn, 127; assumes the crown of Scotland in 1306, ib.; is defeated by the earl of Pembroke, ib.; obtains some successes in 1307, and Edward I. assembles an army to attack him, but dies, ib.; is recognized as king in 1309, ib.; successes of, 128, 129; wins the battle of Bannockburn, on June 24, 1314, ib.; concludes a truce with Edward II. in 1323, 131; invades England in 1327, ib.; dies in 1328, ib.
Bruce, David, succeeds his father in 1328, 133; is attacked by Edward Balliol, who continues the struggle for some years, 135; returns from France to his kingdom in 1341, ib.; invades England in 1346, is defeated by queen Philippa at Nevill's Cross, is taken prisoner, ; lodged in the Tower, 138
Brueys, French admiral; conveys Bonaparte and his troops to Egypt, 1798, 1020; defeated by Nelson at the battle of the Nile, Aug. 1, 1022; killed in the battle, ib.
Bruges surrenders to Marlborough, 1706, 706
Brunanburgh, ode on the battle of, from the Anglo-Saxon chronicle, 39, 40
Brunswick, C. W. Ferdinand, duke of, his proclamation, 1792, 970; his advance into France; stopped by the battle of Valmy, 982; retreats, ib.; lieutenant-general of the Prussian army, 1806, 1060; receives his death wound at the battle of Jena; dies Nov. 10, 1806, 1061
Brunswick, W. Frederick, duke of, headed the German insurrection, 1809, 1073; heads the Brunswickers at Waterloo, 1105
Brussels saved from a bombardment by William III., 668
Brydon, Dr., the sole survivor of the British army retreating from Cabul, 1842, 1251
Buckingham, Stafford, duke of, in conjunction with the duke of Gloucester, arrests earl Rivers, lord Grey, and sir Thomas Vaughan, and takes Edward V. into his charge, 202; rewards heaped upon by Gloucester, ib.; Morton, bishop of Ely, committed as a prisoner to the custody of, 203; harangues the citizens of London in favor of Gloucester's claim to the crown, 205; with a deputation of citizens solicits Gloucester to become king, ib.; receives the estates of the earldom of Hereford from Richard, 207; with Morton, organizes an insurrection against Richard, 208; unsatisfactory causes assigned for, ib.; it is suppressed, and he is executed at Salisbury, Nov. 2, 1483, ib.
Buckingham, George Villiers, duke of, sudden rise and promotion of, by James I., 413; procures the release of Raleigh from the Tower, 415; accompanies prince Charles in his incognito visit to Spain in 1623, 419; they return home, ib.; popularity of, on the breaking off of the Spanish match, ib.; is impeached by the Commons in 1626, 421; is elected chancellor of the University of Cambridge by command of the king, ib.; asserted to have been the promoter of the war with France, 422; commands the expedition to aid the Protestants in Rochelle, ib.; attempts to take the Isle of Rhé, and fails, ib.; is denounced by Coke, in the House of Commons, 423; character of, by Clarendon, ib.; is appointed to command a second expedition to relieve Rochelle, ib.; is assassinated by Felton, Aug. 23, 1628, 424; execution of Felton, ib.
Buckingham, George Villiers, duke of, becomes a member of the Cabal ministry, in 1667, 552; seeks popularity, and advocates liberty of conscience, 552; character of, by Dryden, ib.; complicity of, in Charles becoming a pensioner of France, 553; retires from the Cabal ministry, 558; committed to the Tower for opinions expressed in the House of Lords in 1677, 560
Buckingham, duke of, privy seal, 689; supports the motion for inviting the princess Sophia to England, 705; a great art collector, 752
Buckingham, duke of, made duke, 1822, 1155; account of George IV.'s unreservedness, 1166
Buckingham, J. S., proprietor of "The Calcutta Journal;" proceedings against, for his strictures on Indian affairs, 1172
Buckinghamshire, low state of agriculture in; dairy farming; produce of butter; duck rearing, and pillow-lace making, 913
Buenos Ayres captured by sir Home Popham, 1806, 1060; regained by the French, ib.; Whitelock's expedition against, 1807, 1064; his failure, ib.
Büller, Charles, proposes the adoption of a systematic colonization, 1264
Bunker's Hill, battle of Breed's or, June 17, 1775, 876
Bunyan, John, release of, from prison, after twelve years' confinement, 557
Burdett, sir Francis, duel with Paull, 1807, 1056; conduct of, in the proceedings between Jones and parliament, and subsequent results, 1810, 1078; chairman of the London Hampden Club, 1121; revives the question of parliamentary reform, 1818, 1129; returned M.P. for Westminster, ib.; again agitates reform, 1819, 1131; found guilty of seditious libel and punished, 1150
Burgesses summoned to parliament, by Simon de Montfort, in 1264, 112
Burgh Castle, Roman ruins of, 13
Burghersh, lord, British minister at Florence; announces Napoleon's escape from Elba, 1102
Burgos Castle invested without success by Wellington, 1812, 1087
Burgoyne, general, moves for an inquiry into the East India Company's affairs, 869; invades the United States; recaptures Ticonderoga; secures Fort Edward, 882; his difficulties in procuring provisions, ib.; retreats to Saratoga; yields to Gates on certain conditions; the convention of Saratoga, ib.; cold treatment of, by the British government; vindicates the convention of Saratoga, 887; defends his conduct in employing Indians, ib.
Burhampoor taken by Col. Stevenson, 1055
Burke, Edmund; his speech on American taxation, April 19, 1774, 850-871; first speech in parliament, Jan. 1766, 852; said to be the author of Junius's writings, 858; opposes Bedford's proposed coercionary measures towards America, 862; moves an inquiry into the American disorders, 863; his pamphlet on American taxation, 871; urges government to adopt conciliatory measures towards America, 873; his burst of oratory on America's rapid growth, ib.; remarks on the public opinion regarding the American war, 884; speech on economical reform, Feb. 11, 1780, 889; his proposals, ib.; bill obstructed in its progress through committee, ib.; rejection of the practical measures, 890; rejected as M.P. for Bristol, 893; charges against him; his defence, 894; returned for Malton; brings forward his Civil List bill; it is rejected, ib.; his speech denouncing the American tax, 898; obtains office in the Rockingham ministry, 900; compelled to compromise his scheme of economical reform; passing of his bill; proposes a bill for regulating the profits of the office of paymaster of the forces, 901; resigns office on the accession of the Shelburne ministry, 1782, 905; an agricultural improver, 913; draws up the ninth and eleventh report on Indian affairs, 951; commends Pitt's speech on taxes, 956; passion displayed by, in the debate on the Regency bill, 957; his opinion of the French revolution, 966; opposes an increase of military power; declares France to be ruined, 967; renounces Sheridan's friendship and political opinions, 968; opposes Fox's motion for the repeal of the Test act, ib.; his "Reflections on the Revolution," published; its remarkable popularity; his opinions on the revolution, 969; his hatred towards the French revolutionary doctrines causes him to break friendship with Fox, 970; intensity of his hatred exemplified, ib.; raises the cry of the church in danger, ib.; anecdotes of, 974; applauds the Polish revolution, 977; remarks of, on the September massacres, 981; indignation of, at the results of the duke of Brunswick's campaign, 982; deprecates the proceedings of the French against their royal family, 985; oratorical dagger speech on the Alien bill, 987; note on the dagger scene, 988; speech of, on the expediency of war, 991; his idea of the policy that ought to be pursued towards France, 992; French opinion of, 993; shows the difficulty of negotiating with France, 995; regrets Britain's treatment of the French fleet at Toulon, 1000; objects to "a regicide peace," 1012; death of, July 9, 1797, 1016; description of the United Irishmen by, 1023; urges government not to abandon law, ib.; his remarks on scarcity, 1033
Burke's opinion of the ancient Britons, 6
Burnes, sir Alexander, his remarks on Russian intrigues in Cabul, 1248; his position at Cabul, 1249; massacre of, by the Afghans, 1841, 1250
Burnes, Charles, murdered by Afghans, 1250
Burnet, Dr. Gilbert, preaches at William III.'s coronation, 626; his "Pastoral Letter" condemned and publicly burnt at Charing Cross, 1693, 655; preaches at Whitehall, Dec. 2, 1697, 669; preceptor to duke of Gloucester, 632; his system of education, ib.; carries the news of William III.'s death to Queen Anne, 688
Burney, Fanny, writings of; description of court life by, 1139
Burns, Robert; his description of the Ayrshire farm laborer, 920; first volume of his poems published, 1786; his rapid and extensive popularity; character of his writings, 1136
Burrard, sir Harry, appointed second in command in Portugal, 1808, 1068; arrives at Vimiero, 1069; spoils Wellington's plans, ib.
Busaco, battle of, Sept. 27, 1810, 1079
Bussey, M. de, French minister in London, 1761, 843; delivers the French ultimatum, is dismissed England by Pitt, ib.
Bustard, formerly abundant in Wiltshire; boldness of; its extinction in the county, 916
Bute, John Stuart, earl of, groom of the stole to the prince of Wales, 1756, 831; instils him with a knowledge of the constitution, 841; appointed a member of the council and cabinet by the prince, now George III.; animadversion against his influence; Pitt's indignation at the tone of the king's first address to the Privy Council, prepared by, ib.; intrigues with Doddington against the ministry; proclaims the policy of the new reign, ib.; secretary of state, 1761, 842; condemns Pitt's proposal of war against Spain as rash, 843; rejoices at Pitt's fall, 844; whom his party lampoon and caricature, ib.; alienates Frederick of Prussia by refusing to grant his subsidy, ib.; attempts to carry out Pitt's plans, ib.; in his anxiety to obtain peace he offers to give up Havannah and Manilla, 845; prime minister, 1763, 846; attempts to restore the influence of the prerogative, ib.; attacked by Wilkes and Churchill, ib.; popular dislike towards; resigns his employments, April 8, 1763, ib.; negotiates for Pitt's return to power, 847
Butler, col., commands the force which destroyed Wyoming, 1778, 887
Butler, Charles, anecdote of Burke, by, 974
Buxton, T. F., his resolution for abolishing slavery, 1823, 1161
Byng, admiral sir George, joins Leake off the Spanish coast, 1706, 703; cruises in the channel on the watch for the French fleet conveying the Pretender and forces to Scotland; it evades him, 1708, 715; he makes pursuit, but does not follow it up when they return to France, ib.; sails for the Mediterranean, June 4, 1718; anchors in the Bay of Naples; pursues and destroys the Spanish fleet, Aug. 11, 771
Byng, admiral John, despatched to the relief of Port Mahon; attacked by de la Galissonière, May 21, 1756, 830; his timidity and proposal to return to Gibraltar; superseded by Hawke, ib.; arrest; imprisonment in Greenwich Hospital; popular fury against, ib.; trial at Portsmouth, ib.; found guilty and sentenced to be shot; efforts made to save him by Pitt and others; execution of, March 14, 1757; his demeanor, 833
Byng, sir John. See Strafford.
Byron, lord George, reproaches England with the humiliation of Venice, 1018; his description of the Waterloo field of battle, 1105; his poetic satire, "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers" published; describes the character of the writings of Coleridge, Wordsworth, and Southey, 1136; popularity; character of his verse romances, and his "Don Juan," 1137; failure of his dramas, 1139
Byron, John, commands an expedition to America, 794

CABAL MINISTRY. See Charles II., Buckingham, and Shaftesbury.
Cabot, John, and his sons, small encouragement given to, in 1496, by Henry VII., 220; discovery of Newfoundland by, 224
Cabul taken by the British, 1249; residence of the British army at, ib.; its retreat from, 1250; retaken by the British, 1252
Cade, John, insurrection of, in 1450, 188; defeats sir Humphrey Stafford, ib.; marches to London, and beheads lord Say, 189; defeated by the citizens of London, and killed, ib.
Cadiz burned by the earl of Essex in 1596, 384; unsuccessful expedition to, 1702, 690
Cadoudal, Georges, a royalist against Bonaparte; apprehended, executed, 1804, 1046
Caer-Caradoc, notice of, 8
Cæsar, history of England commences with, 3; his description of the Veneti, applicable to the Britons, 3; first invasion of Britain, 5; battle with the men of Kent, ib.; retreat of, ib.; second invasion of, ib.; description of "the inland people" by, ib.; advance of, into the interior, 6; opposed by Cassivelaunus, ib.; crosses the Thames at Coway Stakes, ib.; advances to St. Alban's, ib.; enumeration by, of the tribes he encountered, ib.; return of, to Gaul, taking hostages, ib.; did not conquer Britain, according to Tacitus, ib.
Caillemot, a Huguenot commander, killed at the Boyne, 1690, 638
Cairo taken by Bonaparte, 1798, 1021.
Calais, siege of, by Edward III., 138; Froissart's story of the six burgesses, 139; an English colony founded in it, ib.; bombarded by the English, 1694, 659
Calcutta purchased by the old E. I. Company, 700; captured by Surajah Dowlah, 1736; tragedy of the Black Hole of, 978; retaken by Clive, January 2, 1757, 978, 979
Calder, sir Robert, engages the French and Spanish fleets, and captures the Spanish vessels, July 22, 1805; tried and reprimanded, 1049; returns home just before the Trafalgar victory, 1051
Calendar Reform Bill, 1751, its provisions, 822
Caligula, intended invasion of Britain by, 7; pretended triumph of, ib.; Napoleon at Boulogne and, compared, 1047
Callcott, character of his paintings, 1047
Calonne, controller-general of finance, 1783; convokes the notables, 958; shows the deficit in the finance; proposes a land tax on all classes; dismissed, 1787, ib.
Camalodunum attacked and destroyed by Boadicea, A.D. 61, 9
Cambacérès, consul with Bonaparte, 1799, 1032; has charge of the judicial administration, 1034
Cambridge, duke of, marries princess Louisa of Hesse June 1, 1818, 1129
Cambridge university, James Pechell, the vice-chancellor, deprived of office for refusing a degree to a Benedictine monk, 586
Cambridgeshire, land of, 914; quantity unreclaimed in 1794, 1806, 1846, ib.; drainage and reclamation of the fens of, by the earl of Bedford and Rennie, ib.
Cambronne, general, accompanies Napoleon in his march to Paris, 1815, 1102; death of, at Waterloo, 1107
Camden, battles of, August 16, 1780, 892; and April 25, 1781, 896
Camden, lord, sir Charles Pratt, lord chief justice, declares Wilkes, as M.P., free from arrest, 847; gives a verdict in favor of a printer of the "North Briton," 848; thanked by the common council for his judgment on the general warrant question, 849; opposes the taxation of Americans, 852; Lord Chancellor, 1766, 854-865; disclaims the measures adopted by the ministry, 860; dismissed his office, ib.; supports Pitt's ministry, 1784, 952; and Fox's libel bill, 1792, 976
Camden, earl, lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 1795, 1023; recalled, 1798, 1024; holds office in the Portland ministry, 1807, 1062; secretary for war and the colonies, 1804, 1325
Cameron, Dr. Archibald, executed 1753, 821
Cameron of Lochiel joins the young Pretender, 1745, 801; accompanies the prince in his flight to France, September 17, 1746, 818
Cameronians; they reject the dispensing of the Test Act, 633; oppose the union of the two kingdoms, 1706, 712; and burn the articles at the market cross of Dumfries, Nov. 30, ib.; ordered to return home by the duke of Hamilton, ib. See Covenanters.
Cameronian regiment, it defeats the Highlanders at Dunkeld, 1690, 645

Camisards. See Cevennes; Cavalier.
Camming, Thomas, a Quaker, sent against Fort Louis, which he takes, 1758, 837; Goree surrenders to him, ib.
Campan, Madame, conduct of, at the storming of Versailles, 1789, 965
Campbell, colonel. See Argyle, A. C., duke of.
Campbell of Finab, his exploits in Darien, 676
Campbell, A. See Argyle, Earl of.
Campbell, sir Archibald, defends Rangoon against the Birmese, 1170; his campaign of 1825; takes Donoopew; by repeatedly defeating the Birmese he compels them to agree to the treaty of Yandaboo, ib.
Campbell, sir Colin, lieutenant, 1055; his description of the battle of Assye, ib.
Campbell, John. See Argyle, duke of.
Campbell, John, lord, anecdotes of George III., 1003; of lord Ellenborough and Hone's trial by, 1127; his remarks on the appeal of murder in 1818, 1131; his opinion of government's conduct toward the Cato street conspirators, 1149; his feelings at the dissolution of Parliament, 1831, 1190
Campbell, sir John, attorney-general in the Melbourne ministry, 1224
Campbell, sir Neil, appointed to watch over Napoleon at Elba, 403
Campbell, captain Robert, of Glenlyon, his share in the Glencoe massacre of 1692, 648; not prosecuted, 649
Campbell, Thomas, quotation from, 1232; wide reputation of his "Pleasures of Hope" and lyrics, "Gertrude of Wyoming," published 1809, 1138
Camperdown, battle of, fought between De Winter and Duncan, Oct. 11, 1797, 1019
Campion, the Jesuit, trial and torture of, for a conspiracy against Elizabeth in 1581, 358
Campo Formio, peace of, Oct. 17, 1797, 1019, 1040
Canada ceded by France, 1763, 909; doubtful loyalty of, towards England, 1793, 991; disputes with the mother country, 1233; insurrection in, 1233; lord Durham's government, ib.; his report on, 1234
Canals, construction of, by Bridgewater, Brindley, and others, 923; increased sums expended on navigation and, 1014; constructed by Telford, 1144
Canning, George, one of Pitt's supporters, 1008; story of his proposed connection with the Jacobins; advocates a continuance of the war, ib.; defends Pitt's coercive policy, 1010; starts the "Anti-Jacobin," Nov., 1797, 1018; retires from office, 1801, 1036; Foreign Secretary, 1807, 1062; obtains a knowledge of the secret article of Tilsit, 1066; in favor of aiding the Spaniards, 1068; remarks on Moore's retreat in Spain, 1809, 1071; duel with Castlereagh, 1077; resigns, ib.; grief at Perceval's death, 1083; returns from Lisbon, and takes his seat in parliament, 1123; President of the Indian Board of Control, 1816, 1123, 1148; imprudent expression regarding Ogden's petition, 1129; offers duel to the author of an anonymous pamphlet, ib.; vindicates the government's conduct towards queen Caroline, 1151; refusing to take part in the proceedings against the queen he tenders his resignation; but the king insists on his retaining it, and following his own conduct with respect to the queen, 1152; his interest in the queen's trial, 1153; resigns his office, Dec. 12, 1820; the king refuses to readmit him into the cabinet after the queen's death, 1154; his Roman Catholic relief bill thrown out twice, 1156; appointed Governor-General of India, ib.; but before he has started for India he is appointed Secretary for Foreign Affairs; his instructions to the duke of Wellington, the British representative at the Congress at Verona, 1151; and to the British ambassador at Paris; his declaration of neutrality, ib.; his declaration of April, 1823, ib.; his policy of the recognition of the Spanish provinces in South America; opposition towards it, 1153; the king fails in obtaining Canning's dismissal, ib.; conditions upon which a state which has successfully asserted its independence should be recognized by a neutral state, ib.; discussions with the United States minister concerning the Spanish South American states, the Oregon territory, and the right of search, 1159; his warlike attitude and promptitude prevent the war of Spain against Portugal, ib.; speech intimating Spain's aggression, and the conduct of the British government, ib.; defends Huskisson, 1160; progress and liberty, 1161; his resolutions for ameliorating the condition of slaves agreed to, ib.; his position with regard to the Catholic question, 1164; dislike of lord Eldon and the duke of York towards, ib.; anecdote of Canning and the chancellor at the funeral of the duke of York, where the former catches a cold, ib.; opposite opinions of Peel and Canning on Catholic Emancipation, 1165; the king orders him to form a ministry; first Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer, 1827, 1165, 1167; his offers to cabinet ministers rejected, 1165; his appearance and manner on meeting parliament, May 1, 1827, ib.; opposition shown towards him, ib.; attack of lord Grey, 1166; charged with having pledged himself not to press the Catholic question, ib.; the charge probably a calumny, ib., 1168; assigned causes of the hostility shown towards: speaks for the last time in parliament, June 18, on the Corn trade; unable to obtain relaxation; the king sends his physician to attend him; death of, Aug. 8, and burial, Aug. 16, 1827, 1167; concludes the treaty on Grecian affairs, ib.; principle of international law laid down by, ib.; statesmen composing his cabinet, ib.; note, on the negotiations preceding his premiership, ib.; difficulties of carrying out his Indian peace policy, 1170
Canterbury burnt by the Danes, 47
Cantium (Kent) resistance offered by the people of, to the invasions of Cæsar, 4
Canterbury fanatics. See Riots.
Canton blockaded by the British, 1839, 1246; again attacked by them, 1841, 1247
Canute proclaimed king of England on the death of Sweyn in 1014, 48; becomes sole king on the death of Edmund in 1017, ib.; exiles the sons of Edmund, ib.; marries Emma, the widow of Ethelred, ib.; proscriptions by, and tyranny of, ib.; introduction of Danish customs by, ib.; reproval of his flatterers by, ib.; benefits effected by, ib.; pilgrimage to Rome, in 1030, ib.; death of, in 1035, 49; buried at Winchester, ib.; union of the Saxon and Danish races accelerated by, ib.
Canute, king of Denmark, invades England in 1069, and is forced to retire by William the Conqueror, 59
Capital punishment, abolition of, for thefts, 1118, 1130, 1161; in the years before and after the Queen's accession, 1210
Caractacus, opposition offered by, to the invasion of Plautius, 7; continued resistance of, to the Romans, 8; defeat of, ib.; speech of, at Rome while a prisoner there, probably an historical embellishment, with a foundation on facts, ib.; allusion of, to the houses of the Britons, 5
Caradoc. See Caractacus.
Carausius, usurpation of, A.D. 286, 11; naval power of Britain during the reign of, ib.; murdered by Allectus, ib.; probably calculated on assistance of Germans in Britain when he revolted, 14
Carisbrook Castle, Charles I. imprisoned in, 482; he attempts to escape from, 484
Carleon, description of, by Giraldus Cambrensis, 14.
Carleton, captain George, quotations from, illustrative of Peterborough's Spanish campaign, 1705, 1706, 701
Carleton, a British general; makes his way into Quebec, defending it against Montgomery and Arnold, 1775, 877; defeats the Americans; retires from Quebec, 1776, 878
Carlisle invested by the Pretender's army, 1745; and capture, Nov., 807; taken by the duke of Cumberland, Dec. 30, 813
Carlisle, earl of, removed from the lord-lieutenancy of Ireland, 1782, 904; his excessive gaming, 941; first Commissioner of Woods and Forests, 1167; Lord Privy Seal, 1834, 1212
Carlos, Don, duke of Parma. See Charles III. of Naples.
Carlsbad, congress of, Aug. 1, 1819, 1225
Carlton House remodelled by Holland; pulled down, 1826, 1143
Carlyle, his remarks on the negro question, 1206; on the position of the agricultural laborer in 1840, 1230; on the advisability of the laboring classes emigrating, 1237; his petition for the Copyright Bill, 1253; character of his historical works on Cromwell and the French Revolution, 1256
Carmarthen, marquis of. See Leeds, duke of.
Carnac, druidical remains at, 4
Carnot compels the duke of York to raise the siege of Dunkirk, 1793, 996; captures Charlerol; and wins the battle of Fleurus, 1006; a member of the French Directory; Bonaparte submits a plan for invading Italy to, 1010; escapes being arrested by, 1017
Carnutes, Cæsar's notice of, 6
Carnwath, Robert, earl of, impeached of high treason, tried and found guilty, 766; but is reprieved, 766; released from prison by an act of grace, 770
Caroline, queen, wife of George II.; influences her husband in retaining Walpole prime minister in opposition to electing sir S. Compton, 779; receives a jointure of 100,000*l.*, ib.; her assistance to, and influence over her husband, 780; appointed regent, 1735, during the king's absence in Hanover, 786; regards the Porteous riots of 1736 as an insult to her authority, 788; taken ill, Nov. 9, 1737; dies Nov. 20, ib.; character of, ib.
Caroline, Matilda, sister of George III., born 1751, married in 1766 to Christian VII. of Denmark; unhappy marriage; charged with infidelity, and imprisoned in Kronberg castle; rescued by the British government, 868; retires to the castle of Zell, Hanover, dying in 1775, ib.
Caroline. See George IV.
Carteaux, general, suppresses a revolt at Marseilles, 998; marches against Toulon, 1792, ib., 999; replaced in his command by general Dugommier, ib.
Carter, rear-admiral of the blue; slain at La Hogue, 1692, 651
Carteret, lord, secretary of state; removed from that office, 1724; appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 777; offers 300*l.* for the discovery of the author of the Drapier's letters, ib.; his motion for Walpole's removal rejected, 795; becomes a favorite of Geo. II., 796; secretary of state, 1742–1744, 798; controls the cabinet, an object of attack to the opposition, ib; created earl Granville, ib.; obtains the king's confidence, 1747; fails in an attempt to obtain the administration of affairs, 819; president of the council, 1761, 843
Carthagena, attack upon, 1741, 793
Cartismandua, queen of the Brigantes, betrays Caractacus to the Romans, 8
Cartwright, Dr., invents the power loom; his anxiety on account of it; parliamentary grant to; number of looms employed in 1813, '33 and '56, 926
Cassano, battle of, 27 April, 1798, 1030
Cassivelaunus, or Caswollon, opposes the advance of Cæsar, 5
Castanos, general, compels the French to surrender at the battle of Baylen, 1808, 1069
Castle, John, betrays his fellow Spencean philanthropists, 1122
Castlereagh, lord, temporary Irish secretary, 1025; applies the secret service money to the making converts to the government measure of the Union, 1027; description of; moves the third reading of the Union bill, 1028; war and colonial secretary, 1807, 1062; challenges Canning to a duel, which takes place on Wimbledon Common, Sept. 22, 1809, 1077; cause of the quarrel, ib.; resigns, ib.; foreign secretary, 1812, 1082; 1148; one of the plenipotentiaries at the Congress at Vienna, 1814, 1109; his diplomacy with regard to the annexation of Saxony to Prussia, ib.; reception by the House of Commons, 1113; offensive declaration made by, ib.; with Wellington he represents Great Britain at Aix-la-Chapelle, 1818, 1130; takes part in the conferences for averting a public proceeding in the case of queen Caroline, 1152; commits suicide, Aug. 12, 1822, 1156; his foreign ministry, ib.
Catalonia invested by the French, 1693, 657
Cathcart, lord, death of, on his way to Carthagena, 1740, 793
Cathcart, lord, commander of the land forces sent against Denmark, 1807, 1065; present at the battle of Dresden, 1813, 1090
Cathelineau, Jaques, heads the Vendean insurgents, 1793, 1000; killed, 1000
Catherine of Aragon. See Henry VIII. and Wolsey.
Catherine II. of Russia, her influence procures the Polish throne for Stanislaus, 866; refuses to aid the British against America, 876; begins to reign, 1762, 1325; agrees to raise an army for Spain, 977; death of, Nov. 10, 1796, 981
Catholic relief bills passed, Feb. 1782, 903; and April, 1829, 1178
Catholics, Roman, their ineligibility for civil offices, 624; oppression of Protestants in Ireland by, 1689, 627; struggle of the, in Scotland, 629; Catholic sovereigns represented at the Hague, 1691, 642; treaty of Limerick allowing them certain religious privileges, 644; penal laws against, 1699, 681; proceedings against Popish priests, 1745, 811; certain laws against, repealed, 1778, 890; fanaticism against, roused; Protestant Associations against, formed, 890; the Gordon riots against, 891; the relief bill passed, 1782, 903; allowed to vote at elections, 1793; bill introduced for repealing all the civil disabilities of, 1024; government's desire to emancipate them, 1026; George III.'s opposition to the repeal of the disqualification laws, 1035; he requires Pitt never to support Catholic emancipation, 1046, 1062; opposes the enlistment of, ib.; Grattan's speech on the emancipation of, 1131; partial success of the Catholic relief measure, 1821-2, 1156; state of the Catholic question; rejection of the relief bill, 1164; sensation caused by the duke of York's speech on the bill, ib.; on lord Liverpool's illness the advocates for and against Roman Catholic relief marshal themselves under the leaderships of Canning and Peel; the debate in parliament, 1165; charges against Canning respecting the Catholic question, 1166; first majority obtained (1826) in favor of their claims, 1176; this resolution is not taken into consideration, ib.; Roman Catholic Association founded 1823; dissolved during the Canning ministry; revived, 1828; it secures the election of O'Connell for Clare, ib.; ministerial views on Catholic Emancipation, ib.; George IV.'s unwillingness to consent to his ministers attempting to settle the question, ib.; Emancipation announced by government, 1177; violent debates on the bill, ib.; it receives the royal assent, April 13, 1829, 1178; O'Connell obtains admission into parliament under the terms of the new act, ib.
Cato Street Conspiracy; antecedents of the ringleader, Arthur Thistlewood, 1150; who forms a plan of assassinating the members of the Cabinet, ib.; plot divulged and frustrated; trial and execution of Thistlewood and five accomplices, ib.
Cavalier, leader of the Camisards, repels marshal de Montreuil, and concludes an amnesty with marshal Villars, 1703, 691; died aged, a governor of Jersey, and major-general, 691
Cave, starts the Gentleman's Magazine, 1731, 935; deterred from publishing parliamentary proceedings by being prosecuted for publishing lord Lovat's trial, 965
Cavendish, lord John, censures the ministers for their conduct of the American war, 899; resigns office, 1782, 905; censures the terms of peace, 908; chancellor of the exchequer, March to July, 1782, 1325; April to Dec., 1783, ib.
Cavendish, sir Henry, M. P. for Lostwithiel; his reports of the debates of parliament, 1768–77, 855; his remarks on parliamentary privileges, 857; quotations from his debates, 856–7, 862–3–4
Caxton, William, commences printing in England, about 1474, 187; prints earl Rivers' "Dictes and Sayings of Philosophers," which is presented to Edward IV., 200; notice of other works printed by, ib.
Cecil, William, lord Burleigh, is arrested with Somerset, to whom he was secretary, 310; caution of, during Northumberland's rebellion, 317; intrigues in favor of queen Mary, 318; appointed to the Privy Council on the accession of Elizabeth, 335; occupations of, during the reign of Mary, 336; prepared scheme for the restoration of Protestantism, ib.; principle of, with regard to the right of national intervention, 338; skill displayed by, in the treaty of Edinburgh in 1560, 340; reasons of, for refusing Mary a safe conduct from France to Scotland, 342; intrigues carried on by, at the Scottish court, 345; opinions of, as to the measures to be taken with Mary of Scotland on her taking refuge in England, 351; protest of, against the duke of Norfolk being tried for high treason, 353; opinion of, as to the inefficacy of penal laws against religious beliefs, 359; advises the Council to dispatch the warrant for Mary's execution, 364; complaint of, in 1569, of the decay of obedience in the people, 382; opposes the attack on Spain in 1596, but is overruled, 384; death of, in August, 1598, 388
Cecil, Robert, earl of Salisbury, the rival of Essex and Raleigh, 389, announces to the House of Commons in 1601, the queen's intention to abate monopolies, 392; causes James I. to be proclaimed on Elizabeth's death, 396; entertains James at Theobald's, and becomes prime minister, ib.; remonstrates against Coke's unfairness on Raleigh's trial,

397; compelled by James to negotiate a treaty with Spain, 400; receives a communication from lord Mounteagle, with a letter that leads to the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot, 401; lesson of, to James, as to his lavishness to Carr, 406; endeavors to procure from parliament a fixed revenue for the king, 409; death of, in May, 1612, 411
Cemeteries, want of, in England, 1842, 1228
Cerat heads the assassins of Sept. 1792, 980
Cevennes, the revolt of 1702-4, in the, 691
Ceylon acquired by the British, 1170
Chadwick, Edwin, reports of, on the state of the workhouse at St. Lawrence, Reading, 1210; on the sanitary condition of the laboring classes, 1227; and on interment in town, 1228
Chairs, extensive manufactory of, in Buckinghamshire, 912
Chalier, a Piedmontese; a Girondin leader; establishes the Girondin party at Lyons; his atrocities; defeated by the sections, and killed, 1793, 997
Chalmers, Dr. Thomas, his oratorical powers; popularity of his "Astronomical Discourses," published in 1816, 1139; character of his political economy writings, 1141
Chambers, Richard, resistance of, to the payment of illegal customs' duties, 426; refuses to pay Ship-Money, and is imprisoned, 430
Chambers, sir W., one of the founders of the Royal Academy, 931; his architectural designs, 934; death of, 1796, 1143
Champion, colonel, invades the Rohilla country, 1774, 948
Championnet, a French general, enters Palermo; abolishes royalty; establishes a republic, 1799, 1030
Chandernagore surrendered to the English, 1757, 834; again captured by the English, 1778, 949
Chandos, marquis of, opposes the Reform bill, 1189; his amendment of the bill, 1191
Channing, Dr., remarks of, on the abolition of slavery, 1207
Chantrey, style of his sculpture, 1145
Chapelier, guillotined, 1794, 1001
Charette commands the Vendeans, 1793, 1000; resumes arms on the occasion of the Quiberon expedition, 1795, 1009
Charlemagne, character of, ; career of, ; benefits derived by Egbert from, 24
Charlemont, lord, panic of his troops at Barcelona, 702
Charlemont, earl of, commander-in-chief of the Irish volunteers, 1782, 903
Charleroi, siege and capture of, by the French, June 25, 1794, 1006
Charleroy captured by the French, 1693, 57
Charles I., visit of, when Prince of Wales to the court of Spain in 1623, to see his proposed bride, 419; succeeds his father, March 27, 1625, 420; change in the manners of the Court on his accession, ib.; marriage of, with Henrietta Maria of France, ib.; favor shown to the Roman Catholics by the king, ib.; the first parliament meets and demands redress of grievances, ib.; it is dissolved, ib.; writs issued under the privy seal, demanding loans from private persons, ib.; failure of the naval expedition against Spain, ib.; meeting of the second parliament, Feb. 6, 1626, ib.; it impeaches Buckingham, ib.; Charles commits sir John Eliot to the Tower for his speech in the House, but releases him soon afterward, ib.; dissolves the parliament, 421; disputes of, with the Lords as to infringements on their privileges, ib.; subsidies illegally levied, and harsh measures pursued against such as resist, ib.; dismisses the queen's foreign attendants, 422; war with France and its causes, ib.; failure of the expedition to aid the Protestants in Rochelle, ib.; meeting of the third Parliament on March 17, 1628, ib.; debates in, on the Petition of Right, 423; gives his assent to the Act, ib.; prorogues parliament on its remonstrating against his arbitrarily levying customs' duties, ib.; prepares a second expedition under Buckingham to relieve Rochelle, 424; Buckingham is assassinated, ib.; the expedition sails, fails in affording relief, and Rochelle surrenders, ib.; parliament meets, and makes fresh remonstrances against the king's arbitrary conduct, ib.; progress of religious differences in the church, ib.; a remonstrance carried in the Commons against popish innovations and arbitrary taxation, 425; dissolves the parliament, and imprisons some of the members, ib.; a force raised in Scotland to assist Gustavus Adolphus, ib.; jurisdiction of the Star Chamber extended, 426; continued exactions of, during the cessation of parliaments, ib.; spirited resistance of individuals to them, ib.; the imprisoned members refuse to plead in the King's Bench, and are recommitted, 427; Wentworth appointed Lord President of the North and Lord Deputy of Ireland, ib.; prosecutions and severe punishments of the Puritan writers Prynne and Leighton, 428; republication of the Book of Sports, ib.; raises money by the sale of new monopolies, 429; issues a proclamation against the increase of houses in London, and raises money, in 1633, by extorting fines to avoid their being pulled down, ib.; other arbitrary proclamations, and hackney-coaches forbidden, in 1635, to pass up and down London streets, ib.; first project of Ship Money, ib.; the writs of Ship Money extended in 1636, 430; the judges give their opinion in favor of the writ, ib.; Hampden and many others refuse to pay, ib.; judgment given against him in 1637, ib.; increased resistance to the payment after the judgment, 431; prosecutions of Prynne, Burton, and Bastwick for their writings, ib.; patronage given by Charles to the Fine Arts, ib.; despotic interference of, with private property in London, but not productive of any public improvement, ib.; visit of Mary de Medicis to, in 1638, 432; employs Inigo Jones to build Whitehall, ib.; note on the portraits of, by Vandyck and Mytens, ib.; visit of, to Scotland in 1633, ib.; with Laud endeavors to impose episcopacy on Scotland, ib.; outbreak in 1637 against it, and adoption of the National Covenant, 433; meeting of the General Assembly, ib.; the Covenanters take up arms, and seize Edinburgh and other places, ib.; he advances to Berwick with an army, and on June 18, 1639, a pacification is agreed to, 434; calls a parliament, which insists on the discontinuance of abitrary taxation, and the punishment of the judges, ib.; it is dissolved after sitting three weeks, ib.; the Convocation grants money, and passes canons that render the church still more unpopular, ib.; the Covenanters assemble fresh forces in 1640, and cross the Tweed, ib.; he assembles an army at Yore, advances to meet them, and is completely routed at Newburn near Newcastle, 435; calls a Great Council of Peers at York, ib.; agrees to a truce with the Scots, ib.; summons a new parliament (afterward named the Long Parliament), which meets in November, 1640, ib.; character of the House of Commons, ib.; difficulty of relating its history, 436; opens the sitting in a tone of conciliation, 437; Strafford is impeached by the Commons, ib.; Laud arrested and impeached by the Commons, 438; Finch, Windebank, and the Ship-Money judges impeached, ib.; trial of Strafford, ib.; Charles consents to his execution, 441; assents to the Act for preventing the dissolution of the Parliament without its own consent, 442; the two Houses remonstrate against the queen quitting England, and she agrees to remain, ib.; the Star Chamber and High Commission courts abolished by Act of Parliament, ib.; visits Scotland, and endeavors to conciliate the nation, 443; breaking out of the Irish insurrection of 1641, ib.; the rebels pretend to have the king's commission, 444; he returns to London, ib.; remonstrance of the Commons, ib.; magnificent entertainment given to, by the corporation of the city, ib.; formation of parties for the approaching struggle, 445; Hyde becomes the king's adviser, and Lord Falkland is made secretary of state, ib.; receives the remonstrance from the Commons, and publishes an answer to it, drawn up by Hyde, ib.; takes up his residence at Whitehall for the Christmas of 1641, ib.; popular tumults and cry against the bishops, 446; twelve bishops protest against the force used towards them, and are committed to the Tower for treason, ib.; the question of the militia raised in Jan., 1642, ib.; his rights invaded by the claims of the Commons, 447; refuses a guard to the Commons, and on Jan. 3 attempts to seize the Five Members, ib.; despondency at Whitehall, and tumults in the city, occasioned by the attempt and its failure, 448; leaves Whitehall and goes to Hampton Court, ib.; refuses his assent to the militia bill, but assents to that for excluding the bishops from the House of Lords, ib.; the queen leaves England, ib.; he is refused entrance into Hull, 449; some peers and commoners join him at York, ib.; he receives propositions from the parliament, ib.; sets up his standard at Nottingham, 453; attempts to negotiate with the parliament, 454; but it refuses, unless the king's proclamations, declaring them traitors, are withdrawn, 455; marches on Shrewsbury, and publishes a "Protestation," ib.; the first encounter in the civil war takes place at Worcester, ib.; want of money of, ib.; battle of Edgehill, Oct. 23, 1642, 456; marches upon London, 457; Parliamentarians defeated by the royal army at Brentford, Nov. 12, 1642, ib.; the royalists retire, ib.; the Londoners march to Turnham Green, and the royal army retires into winter quarters at Oxford, 458; the war spreads through England, ib.; the queen lands with an army, ib.; sufferings of the Royalists at Oxford, ib.; Reading surrenders to Essex, 459; proceedings of the war in other quarters, ib.; Edmund Waller's plot, ib.; defeat of the Parliamentarians at Chalgrove Field, and death of Hampden, ib.; the queen joins her husband, 460; various incidents of the war, ib.; Rupert takes Bristol, July 27, 1643, ib.; Gloucester besieged by Charles, August 10, 461; relieved by Essex, Sept. 5, ib.; battle of Newbury, ib.; anecdote of the king trying his fortune with Lord Falkland, by the Sortes Virgilianæ, 462; the Scots invade England, 464; he withdraws his troops from Ireland, who are afterward defeated at Nantwich, ib.; convokes a parliament at Oxford, Jan. 22, 1644, ib.; is besieged by Essex and Waller in Oxford, and quits the city on June 3, ib.; defeats Waller at Cropredy Bridge, 465; marches to the relief of York, ib.; but is defeated at Marston Moor, July 2, ib.; the queen leaves England, ib.; he is defeated at the second battle of Newbury, 466; negotiates with the Parliament, ib.; treaty of Uxbridge, ib.; victories of Montrose, 467; battle of Naseby, June 14, 1645, 468; the king's cabinet captured and opened, ib.; surrender of Bristol, 469; Basing House taken, ib.; Montrose defeats an army under Baillie, 470; Charles attempts to join him, but is defeated by Poyntz at Rowton Heath, and retires to Wales, ib.; Montrose defeated at Philiphaugh, ib.; defeat of Digby at Sherborne, his cabinet taken, and its contents published, 471; the king sets out for Oxford, ib.; desires his son to leave England, ib.; overtures for pacification, ib.; letter of, to the queen, ib.; Lord Hopton accepts the command of the western army, 472; but the army is soon after dissolved, and the war terminates in that quarter, ib.; Prince of Wales leaves for Scilly, ib.; the king's proposal to Parliament being rejected, he negotiates through Montreuil, with the Scots to take up his cause, ib.; Fairfax gradually draws his troops round Oxford, ib.; injunctions of the king to his wife, ib.; account of his flight given by Hudson and Ashburnham, 473; adventures on the way to the Scottish army, ib.; the Scots endeavor to induce him to consent to the abolition of Episcopacy, 474; is surrendered by the Scots to the English Commissioners, ib.; capitulation of Oxford, ib.; end of the first civil war, ib.; confinement of, at Holmby House, 475; is removed from Holmby by Joyce, 477; treatment of, by the army, ib.; proposals of the Independents to, 478; he rejects them, ib.; popular movement in London in favor of the king, 479; he is lodged at Hampton Court, ib.; the Independents still endeavor to come to terms with, but he continues to treat with both parties, 480; a letter of, intercepted by Cromwell and Ireton, ib.; escape of, from Hampton Court, ib.; narrative of the escape, 484; goes to the Isle of Wight, ib.; Berkeley's mission to the army, ib.; Scotch and English negotiations with, 482; is imprisoned in Carisbrook Castle, ib.; parliament declares against any further treaty, ib.; royalist reaction, 486; and riots, ib.; his attempt to escape from Carisbrook Castle, 484; Lord Goring rises in favor of, ib.; Scotch army enters England under the duke of Hamilton, in aid of, ib.; Cromwell marches from Wales, ib.; and defeats them at the battle of Preston, 485; Cromwell's victory disarranges the king's schemes, ib.; treaty of Newport, ib.; skill displayed by, in discussion, and appearance of, at Newport, 486; concessions made by, at Newport, ib.; letter of, to his son, ib.; is carried to Hurst Castle, 487; is removed to Windsor by Harrison, 488; treatment of, ib.; ordinance for his trial, ib.; High Court of Justice appointed, ib.; the king before the High Court, 489; trial of, Bradshaw presides, ib.; is sentenced to be executed, ib.; sentence of condemnation, ib.; behavior of, after condemnation, 490; his execution, Jan. 30, 1649, ib.; remarks on, and his execution, ib.; buried at Windsor Castle in St. George's Chapel, 491
Charles II. leaves England for Scilly in 1646, 472; goes first to Jersey, then to France, and afterward to Holland, ib.; is an exile at St. Germain's, 493; is proclaimed King of Scotland at Edinburgh, on Feb. 5, 1649, ib.; commissioners from Scotland to Charles at the Hague, requesting him to return to his kingdom, ib.; he refuses their proposals, and dismisses them, ib.; urged by the marquis of Ormond to show himself in Ireland, but only goes as far as Jersey, in consequence of hearing of the fall of Drogheda, 494; double-dealing of, in negotiations with the Scottish Parliament, 496; gives Montrose a commission to wage war in Scotland, ib.; who is defeated at Craigchonichen, by colonel Strachan, ib.; consents to proposals of Scottish Commissioners, and goes to Scotland, 497; political morality of, ib.; supposed influence of the preachers upon the character of, ib.; made to sign a declaration against Popery and Heresy in the Scottish camp, 498; battle of Dunbar, ib.; crowned at Scone, ib.; marches into England at the head of a Scotch army, 499; issues proclamations, ib.; battle of Worcester, in which he is totally defeated by Cromwell, ib.; escape and adventures of, 500; and return to France, 501; settles at Cologne, and prepares for a landing in England, 515; Wilmot organizes a general insurrection throughout England in favor of, ib.; which fails through Cromwell's politic measures, 516; dissoluteness of, at Cologne, 520; Sindercomb's plot in favor of, discovered, 522; meets his brother James at Calais, intending to proceed to England, 529; endeavors to persuade Monk to join his cause, ib.; court of, at Breda, 532; the Presbyterians send a deputation to him to offer the crown on conditions, ib.; Monk gives in his adhesion to his cause, ib.; letter of Charles to the new parliament in April, 1660, and Declaration from Breda, ib., 533; meeting of the Convention Parliament on April 25, 1660, ib.; debates in the House on the Bill of Indemnity, ib.; the regicides and others excepted from it, ib.; he embarks for England, ib.; and lands at Dover, 533; enters London amidst the general joy of the people, ib.; the Convention Parliament declares the Long Parliament to be dissolved, and abolish knight-service and purveyance, 534; a large revenue settled on the Crown, ib.; money granted to enable him to disband the army, ib.; difficulties as to the Church and Crown lands, 535; Act of Indemnity and Oblivion passed, ib.; number of exceptions to it, 536; the regicides tried and executed, ib.; insulting disinterment of Cromwell, Ireton, Bradshaw, and Blake, ib.; the king's declaration respecting Episcopacy, ib.; a bill, founded on the declaration of Breda, brought into the House, and rejected, 537; the Convention Parliament dissolved, Dec. 29, 1660, ib.; the Navigation Act, and a Post-office Act, re-enacted by the House before its dissolution, ib.; insurrection of the Fifth-Monarchy men in April, 1661, suppressed, ib.; proclamation of, against Quakers, Anabaptists, and other sectaries, ib.; the coronation, ib.; a new parliament meets on May 8, and ultra-royalism of its character, ib.; provisions of, for strengthening the prerogatives of the Crown, 538; passing of the Corporation Act, ib.; and of the Act of Uniformity, 539; attempts to force Episcopacy upon Scotland, ib.; the urgency of parliament for more punishments of the Revolutionists resisted by Charles and Clarendon, ib.; Vane and Lambert tried and condemned for high treason, 540; letter of the king, approving of Vane being "put out of the way," on account of his defence, ib.; marriage of, to Catherine of Braganza, ib.; presents his mistress, Lady Castlemain, to the queen, ib.; sells Dunkirk to the French, 541; profligacy of the king and Court, ib.; a dispensing power to relax the penal laws in ecclesiastical matters denied him by the parliament, 542; the Triennial Act repealed, ib.; war with Holland commenced in 1665, ib.; first appearance of the great Plague in 1665, ib.; the Five-Mile Act passed against the non-conformists, 544; the Settlement Act of 1662 passed, ib.; naval fight of four days with the Dutch, 545; the Licensing Act and restrictions on the Press, ib.; the Great Fire of London, 545 et seq.; the king and duke of York set examples of activity, 546; change in the temper of parliament towards, 548; commissioners appointed to examine the public accounts, ib.; his disgraceful state of indebtedness, ib.; insurrection of the Covenanters in Scotland, suppressed by Dalziel, 549; state of the navy in 1666, ib.; insurrection of the sailors for want of pay, 550; the Dutch attack and burn English ships in the Medway, in 1667, ib.; peace concluded with Holland, ib.; Clarendon deprived of office, ib.; formation of the Cabal ministry, 552; character of the ministry, ib.; principles of, and conduct of the king, ib.; his desire to imitate Louis XIV., ib.; general corruption of political parties, ib.; constitutional restraints against his becoming despotic, 553; movements of the Cabal in favor of toleration towards non-conformists, ib.; the House of Commons negative proposals for a union of Protestants, ib.; conclusion of the Triple Alliance, between England, Holland, and Sweden, in 1668, ib.; the duchess of Orleans visits England, 554; secret treaty concluded with Louis XIV., on May 22, 1670, for the conquest of Holland, and the receipt of a pension, ib.; the Commons vote a grant for a war against France, ib.; the Conventicle Act renewed, ib.; renewed persecution of non-conformists, ib.; the king's French concubine, 555; growing discontent of the House of Commons at the king's foreign policy, ib.; mutilation of Sir John Coventry, and passing of the Coventry Act, ib.; attempt of Blood to steal the regalia, ib.; he is pardoned and pensioned by the king, 556; the shutting up of the Exchequer, ib.; public alliance with France, and war with Holland, ib.; Declaration of Indulgence in religion issued by, 557; unpopularity of the measure, ib.; the parliament declares that penal statutes cannot be suspended but by Act of parliament, ib.; the Declaration is withdrawn, and the Test Act passed, ib.; the Commons address the king against the marriage of the duke of York with Maria Beatrix of Modena, and they vote standing armies, the alliance with France, and the ministry, to be grievances, 558; they are prorogued, the Cabal ministry is broken up, and that of the earl of Danby formed, ib.; composition of the House of Commons in 1673, ib.; peace made with Holland, ib.; enormous sums lavished by the king on the duchess of Portsmouth, 559; receipt of a pension from France by, ib.; the licenses of coffee-houses withdrawn, in order to suppress seditious discourse, in 1675, ib.; they are re-opened, ib.; parliament meets, and Buckingham, Shaftesbury, and two other peers, are sent to the Tower for maintaining that the long prorogation amounted to a dissolution, 560; the king obtains a large grant from the Commons by means of bribery, ib.; the Prince of Orange arrives in England, in 1677, and marries the princess Mary, ib.; contentions between the parliament and the king, ib.; the statute inflicting the punishment of death for heresy repealed in 1678, 561; personal popularity of the king, ib.; announcement of Titus Oates's Popish Plot, ib.; excitement produced, and progress of the development, ib.; murder of sir Edmondbury Godfrey, 562; the Commons pass an Act to exclude Catholics from both Houses, ib.; the king's notion of the Plot, and his support of the queen against Oates's accusation, 563; sweeping committal of prisoners, and chief justice Scroggs's intemperate behavior on their trial, ib.; convictions obtained on doubtful or insufficient evidence, ib.; the ultimate effects of the plot, ib.; disclosures to the public of the secret treaty between Charles and Louis XIV., ib.; the king's letters read in the House of Commons, ib.; indignation of the House, and Danby is impeached, 564; the parliament is dissolved, in 1679, and great excitement produced by the election of a new one, ib.; the king affirms the illegitimacy of the duke of Monmouth, to satisfy his brother, before he consents to leave England, ib.; a Cabinet government, on a scheme of sir W. Temple's, appointed to succeed Danby, ib.; the Exclusion bill read twice in the House of Commons, the Habeas Corpus Act passed, and the House prorogued, 565; and dissolved, ib.; fresh prosecutions and convictions on account of the Popish Plot, ib.; persecutions of the Covenanters in Scotland, 566; murder of archbishop Sharpe, 567; insurrection in Scotland, ib.; Monmouth sent to quell it, ib.; battle of Bothwell Bridge, ib.; origin of the terms Whig and Tory, ib.; he is attended by James and the duke of Monmouth, rivals for the succession, on his illness in 1679, 568; sends Monmouth to Flanders, and James to Scotland, ib.; alterations of, at Windsor Castle, ib.; is urged by the duchess of Portsmouth and others to name the duke of Monmouth his successor, 569; the Bill of Exclusion again brought into the House, ib.; it is passed, and carried to the House of Lords by lord William Russell, where it is rejected, 570; the earl of Stafford convicted and executed for participation in the Popish Plot, ib.; levity of the king's behavior, ib.; the parliament impeaches chief justice Scroggs, ib.; the parliament dissolved, and another summoned to meet at Oxford, ib.; he concludes a new treaty with France, and receives a fresh subsidy, 571; the Oxford parliament again introduce the Bill of Exclusion, ib.; the House of Lords refuse to receive the impeachment of Fitzharris, ib.; the House of Commons is suddenly dissolved, after sitting seven days, on March 28, 1681, ib.; the king's Declaration, and the Whig Vindication, ib.; trial of Plunket, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Armagh, for a Popish Plot, and of Stephen College for an attempt to seize the king's person, ib.; both are convicted and hanged, ib.; Dryden produces his "Absalom and Achitophel," after Shaftesbury's arrest for high treason, 572; Shaftesbury is indicted, and the grand jury throw out the bill, ib.; manœuvres of the Court to obtain the nomination of a sheriff of London, ib.; the army establishment, 573; a quo warranto against the Corporation of London, which submits to conditions, ib.; other corporations surrender their charters, 574; trial and acquittal of Count Königsmark for the murder of Thomas Thynne, ib.; satisfaction of the king at the acquittal, ib.; the Rye-House Plot, ib.; trials and executions of lord William Russell and Algernon Sidney, 575; persecution of the Covenanters in Scotland, 576; the University of Oxford publish a decree against seditious books, and its members preach passive obedience, ib.; Evelyn's account of the king's amusements on Sunday, Feb. 1, 1685, ib.; he is struck with apoplexy on Feb. 2, ib.; receives the rites of the Roman Catholic Church, and dies on Feb. 6, ib.; Chelsea Hospital, as founded by, ib.

Charles V., the emperor, succeeds his grandfather Ferdinand in 1516, 231; is chosen emperor in 1519, 233; meets Henry VIII. at Gravelines, and propitiates Wolsey, 234; leagues with Henry VIII. against Francis I. in 1521, 235; wins the battle of Pavia in 1525, and takes Francis prisoner, 238; releases Francis on very hard terms, 239; war of, against Pope Clement VII., ib.; attack and sack of Rome by the troops of, under the Constable de Bourbon, 240; character of the armies at Rome, ib.; is crowned emperor in 1530, 248; opposes the annulling of Henry VIII.'s marriage with Catharine, ib.; objects to the removal of the divorce suit from Rome, 250; caution of, in negotiating the marriage of Philip with Mary, 320; abdicates the crown in Oct., 1555, 331; dies, 334

Charles Albert of Sardinia succeeds to the throne after Charles Felix, 1831, 1187

Charles of Lorraine commands the Austrians; checks the French in Bohemia, 1742, 796; expels the French from Germany, 797; commands the Austrians at Leuthen, 1757, 836

Charles II., of Spain and Naples, represented at the Hague, 1691, 642; his early life and feebleness; the question of his succession, 677; tormented by intriguing agents, 683; alters his will in favor of France, and dies Nov. 1, 1700, 682, 732

Charles III., of Spain and Naples; as Don Carlos, duke of Parma, he invades Lombardy, Naples, and Sicily; crowned king of Naples and Sicily, 784; reigned in Spain, 1759–88, 1310; and in Naples, 1734–59, ib.

Charles IV., of Spain, began to reign, 1788, 1057; concludes the treaty of Fontainebleau with Napoleon, 1067; abdicates the crown, 1808, 1068

Charles, archduke, of Austria; emperor VI. of Germany; his claim to the Spanish throne supported by England; his visit to Anne's court, 1703, 692; lands at Lisbon, 700; proclaimed as Charles III., of Spain, at Denia; he presses for the siege of Barcelona, 701; his partial success in Catalonia, 702; his incompetency; besieged in Barcelona, 1706, ib.; his inactivity in marching on Madrid, 703; Peterborough's disgust of, ib.; his Spanish claims acknowledged by the Estates of Brabant, 706; sustains reverses, 1707, 713; obtains a few successes; enters Madrid, Sept., 1710, 725; discord among his allies; defeat at Villa Viciosa; cause hopeless, ib.; elected emperor, Oct. 8, 1711, 728, 1309; died Oct. 20, 1740, 794

Charles VII., emperor of Germany; as elector of Bavaria he disputes Maria Theresa's succession to the German throne, 795; enters Bohemia; takes Prague; crowned king of Bohemia and emperor of Germany; his capital city, Munich, taken by his opponents, 796; died at Munich, 1745, 798

Charles X., of France; count D'Artois, brother of Louis XVI.; leaves France, 1789, 964; ready to return in arms, 971; urges the emperor of Germany and king of Prussia to rescue Louis, 974; prepares an expedition, but abandons it, and returns to England, 1795, 1009; signs a convention with the allies for the cessation of hostilities, 1814, 1092; ascends the throne, 1824, 1180; government, consecration, and inconsistency of, ib.; his differences with the Chamber of Deputies, 1181; promulgates the royal ordinances, 1830, ib.; the people are roused, 1182; his wavering conduct, 1183; loses his crown, July, 1830, ib.; his movements, ib.; abdicates in favor of his grandson; compelled to leave France; takes refuge in England, ib.

Charles XII., of Sweden; his energy in warring against Denmark, whose navy, with Admiral Rooke's assistance, he succeeds in driving back into Copenhagen, 681; concludes a peace with England, ib.; his career from 1700 to 1707, 713; visited by the duke of Marlborough, ib.; account of the interview, ib.; invades Russia; defeats the native army near the Beresina; and at Smolensko; receives a signal defeat from the Czar Peter the Great at the battle of Pultowa, July 8, 1709, 718; succeeds Charles XI., 1309; reappears in history, after a seclusion of five years, 1714, 768; defeat at Stralsund, 769; and slain at Frederickshall, 1718, 771

Charles XIV., of Sweden, J. J. J. Bernadotte; serves in the army under Jourdan, 1006; joins Bonaparte with an army, 1017; opposes any change in the constitution of France, 1799, 1030; commands the army of Hanover, 1805, 1050; attacked by Benningsen at Pultusk, Dec., 1807, 1062; installed Crown Prince of Sweden, Nov. 1, 1810, 1081; alienates himself from Bonaparte and joins Alexander of Russia, 1087; defeated Oudinot at Gross Beeren, Aug. 23, 1813, 1090; and Ney at Dennewitz, Sept. 6, ib.; his further opposition to the French, ib.; becomes king of Sweden, 1818, 1187

Charleston besieged by the British; capitulates, May 12, 1780, 892

Charlotte, queen, princess of Mecklenberg; colonel Græme's favorable report of her induces George III. to choose her for his queen, 842; he marries her, Sept. 8, 1761; her appearance and character, 842; coronation of the king and queen, Sept. 22, ib.; entrusted with the care of the king, 1810, 1080; death of, Nov. 17, 1818, 1130

Charlotte, princess; public hopes of her marriage with Leopold, which occurs May 2, 1816, 1114; grief at her death, Nov. 6, 1817, 1128; admiration of her conduct, and sympathy with her husband; her dissension with the prince Regent; he causes an inquiry into her conduct; she refuses to marry the prince of Orange, ib.; flies to the princess of Wales; her character, ib.

Charnock joins with Barclay and others in the design against William's life, 1696, 664; the plot is discovered and he is captured, Feb. 22; tried, ib.; found guilty and executed, 665

Charter, the people's, principles of, 1237; parliamentary debate on, 1842, 1260

Charter house, trial and execution of the prior and some of the monks of, for refusing to take the oath of supremacy to Henry VIII., 257; continued persecution of the remainder, 258

Chartism, its prevalence among the laboring classes, 1237; principles advocated by the Chartists, ib.; Chartist riots, 1839, 1238; revival of, 1848, 1284; Chartist designs crushed by the government preparations, 1286

Chartreuse, castle of, surrenders to Marlborough, 1702, 689

Chatham, William Pitt, earl of, speaks in parliament, 1736, 789; gentleman of the bed-chamber to the Prince of Wales, 1738, 791; denounces the convention with Spain, 1739, ib.; supports the grant for continuing the war in Flanders, 1744, 798; speaks against the amendment for securing the independence of the Commons, 806; obtains office under the Pelham administration, 1747, 819; the king refuses to nominate him secretary-at-war; appointed vice-treasurer of Ireland; then paymaster-general; integrity in the discharge of his office, ib.; chagrined at not obtaining the secretary of state seals in 1754; marries lady Grenville, and retires to Hayes, 826; his outburst against the levity of the House of Commons; deserted by Fox, ib.; Newcastle offers him a seat in the Cabinet, and the probability of having the secretary of state seals, to support the subsidies; refuses the offer, 829; opposition speech, Nov. 13, 1755; dismissed from his paymaster office, Nov. 20, ib.; advocates an increased army, 830; opposes the bringing over foreign troops to England, ib.; refuses to agree to a coalition with Fox; appointed secretary of state, 1756, 832; adopts Duncan Forbes' suggestion of enlisting Highlanders into the service, ib.; supports the Prussian subsidy, ib.; endeavors to save adm. Byng; dismissed from office, 1757, 833; king's dislike to; Cumberland urges the dismissal of; freedom of London presented to; Newcastle refuses to hold power with; "Mr. Pitt's administration," ib.; Newcastle made first lord of the treasury, and Pitt secretary of state, having also the ministerial power, ib.; has the whole conduct of the war and of foreign affairs, 835; energy in conducting the latter, 837; his lavishness and energy, 838; appoints Wolfe to the command of the Quebec expedition; invites him to dinner; Wolfe's declamatory conduct, ib.; moves that a public monument be erected in honor of Wolfe, 839; his vigorous prosecution of the war during the conference for peace, 843; promises Frederick of Prussia his assistance, 843; breaks off negotiations with France; advocates war against Spain; his measure defeated by the court party, ib.; resigns his seals of secretary of state, Oct. 5, 1761; his conduct in his interview with the king; receives a pension of £3000; and wife made a baroness; storm of ridicule and abuse against; joy at his fall, ib.; his popularity undiminished, 844; his German policy attacked by Grenville, ib.; his calmness during the receipt of col. Barré's insolent speech; the new ministry adopt his plans, ib.; his patriotic outbreak in parliament; success of his projected expedition against Martinique, and Havannah, 845; dissatisfied with the conditions of the peace of Paris, 1763; states that "that spirit which has made us what we are" compensates for the increase in the national debt, ib.; negotiations for his return to power fail, 847; the king again offers him the premiership; his terms, 851; earl Temple persuades him to give up the negotiation; again applied to, but declines the post, ib.; speech in favor of repealing the American Stamp Act, arguing that a parliament has no right to impose a tax on a colony not represented in it, 852; his reply to Grenville's defence, ib.; huzzaed for his conduct in the Stamp Act Repeal Bill, 853; forms a ministry; lord privy seal and earl of Chatham, 1766; composition of his ministry; his political plans, 854; defends the order for laying an embargo on corn; forces on a parliamentary inquiry into the East India Company's affairs; his Cabinet becomes disordered, ib.; illness and incapacity for business; stated to be a sham, 855; loses his popularity; helpless condition of mind and body; resigns his post; retires to Burton-Pynsent; the struggles of his ministry, ib.; his remarks upon the king's address on opening parliament, 859; his reply to lord Mansfield's speech, 860; announces his union with the Rockingham party; his plan of parliamentary reform, 861; warns the Americans not to carry their liberty notions too far, 863; his strong approbation of Beckford's speech, 864; remarks on the publication of the parliamentary debates, 865; advises government to be moderate and prudent, 870; his speech on America, 871; moves the withdrawal of troops from Boston, 872; urges government to adopt measures of conciliation, ib.; his speech on Gage's conduct, 873; withdraws his son from the British army, 877; his memorandum concerning America; recovers his health slightly after a two years' illness, 1774, 881; occupies his seat in the House of Lords; sensation produced by his reappearance; his speech; moves for an address to the king advising that a stop be put to the American hostilities, ib.; his speech for moving an amendment upon the address;

inveighs against calling in the aid of foreign princes and Indians, 883; lord Suffolk replies defending the employment of Indians, ib.; Chatham counter-replies in an invective against their employment, ib.; lord North presses the king to apply to, to aid in supporting the administration; the king's dislike towards, 884; national feeling towards, 885; description of his appearance, 1778; speaks against the duke of Richmond's address, ib.; description of this his last speech, ib.; swoons while making an effort to address the House a second time, ib.; the accident throws the House into confusion, ib.; death of, at Hayes, May 11, 1778; funeral and monuments, ib.

Chatham, John, earl of, commands the expedition to the Scheldt, 1809, 1075; his indolence, ib.; censured; succeeded by lord Mulgrave, as master-general of the ordnance, 1078

Chaucer's descriptions of the social state of England, temp. Edward III., 143; costume described by, 144; manners of the people, ib.; satire of, on the state of the Church, 146; characteristics of, and his influence on English literature, 148

Chaumont, treaty of, March 2, 1814, 1103

Chauvelin, French ambassador in England, 1792; himself and suit received with reserve and coldness, 975; correspondence with lord Grenville, 976, 987; returns to Paris with mistaken notions of English disaffection, 973; ordered to retire from England, 1019

Chelsea hospital built by Wren, 754

Cherbourg taken by the British, August 8, 1754, 837

Cheshire, its agricultural condition, 918

Chesterfield, lord, his speech against the bill for licensing plays, 1737, 790; lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 1744; sent on a mission to the Hague to obtain the duke of Cumberland's appointment to the command of the confederate armies, 798; opposes the bill making it high treason to hold correspondence with the Pretender's sons, 799; with lord Mansfield's assistance he carries through the bill for reforming the calendar, 1751, 822; secretary of state, 1746-8, 865

Chevalier, P., account of Druidical remains in Brittany by, 4

Chevalier St. George. See Stuart, James.

Cheyte Sing, rajah of Benares; unable to comply with Hastings' extortionate demands, he is arrested, 950; the native population release him and compel Hastings to fly; routed and deposed by Popham, ib.

Chimney tax. See Hearth money.

China, war with, 1245-1248

Cholera in England, 1831, 1195; precautions taken against it, ib.

Christchurch gateway, Oxford, built by Wren, 754

Choiseul, duke de, administrates the foreign affairs of France; his negotiations with England, 843; breaks them off, and signs the Family Compact with Spain, ib.; desires a rupture with England; sudden fall from power, 866

Chollet, battle of, Sept., 1793, 1001

Christian VII., of Denmark, marries Caroline of England, 1766; his character; allows her and his ministers to be arrested, 868; ascends the throne, 1766, 1310; succeeded by Frederick VI., 1806, ib.

Christian Church in Britain, doctrinal dissensions in the, in the fourth century; influence of, in Roman Britain, 17; disunited character of, 18; suppression of the Pelagian heresies in, as related by Bede, 19; conference and disagreement of, with Augustin, 22

Christianity, first appearance and decadence of, in Britain, 6; doubtful statement of the introduction of, into Britain, by Lucius, who reigned A.D. 180, 16; certainly established in Britain as early as the beginning of the fourth century, ib.; persecution of, under Diocletian and Maximian, 17

Chun Castle, an early British work, 5

Chunda Sahib attacks Mahomed Ali, 827; killed, ib.

Church, corrupt state of, in time of Henry II., 83; state of, under Edward III., 145; attempts of Wycliffe to reform, 146; ill effects produced by its privileges of "benefit of clergy," and of sanctuary, temp. Henry VII., 223; position of, in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII., 231; the immunities of the clergy offensive to the laity, ib.; persecution of Richard Hunne for heresy, and for having Wycliffe's books, 232; the Londoners declared by the bishop to be in "favor of a heretical wickedness," ib.; the king maintains his prerogative against the claims of the clergy, ib.; the clergy in Convocation, participate with the Commons in the resistance to Henry VIII.'s demand for a large subsidy, 237; archbishop Usher's scheme for the reformation of, 446; conference of the bishops with the Puritan divines at the Savoy, in 1661, 537; earnest desire of Clarendon to re-establish, in its ancient splendor, ib.; resistance offered by, to the efforts of James II. to introduce Roman Catholics, 586; archbishop Sancroft and six bishops petition to be excused compliance with the king's order for the clergy to read in churches the declaration for liberty of conscience, 592; they are committed to the Tower, 593; brought before the King's Bench to plead, and are held to bail, ib.; tried for a seditious libel and acquitted, 594; public rejoicings at their acquittal, ib.; the bishops refuse King James's request that they would sign a declaration of abhorrence against the proceedings of William, prince of Orange, 597; establishment of societies for religious instruction, 670; feud between the, and the dissenters, 1702, 690; cry of "the church in danger" raised, 1705, 705; provision made at the union of the two kingdoms for the Scottish, 711; the leniency of Dr. Sacheverel's sentence regarded as a triumph of the high, 721; popular disposition in favor of the, 722; Anne determines to uphold and encourage the established English, 1710, 724; schism in the Scottish Kirk; they resent the English government's interference in their affairs, 1736, 788; Burke raises the cry of the church in danger, 1790, 970; a "more evangelical spirit" among churchmen, 1138; chief details of the bill for the reform of the Irish; it is passed, 1833, 1206; the Irish church, ib.; appropriations of the temporal possessions of the Irish Protestant church proposed, 1834, 1212, Lord Russell's resolution to the same effect, 1835, 1216; the "Disruption" in the Scotch church, 1265; the Free General Assembly constituted; the United Presbyterian Church formed, ib.; the effects of the Act for increasing spiritual instruction in populous districts, ib.

Church rates, proposal by government to abolish, defeated, 1837, 1223

Churchill, Charles, assists Wilkes in the "North Briton," 1762, 846; attacks Bute in his "Prophecy of Famine," 1763, ib.; defends Wilkes against Hogarth, 847; Hogarth's portrait of, ib.

Churchill, George, assists his brother the duke of Marlborough at the battle of Blenheim, 698

Chusan Islands captured and evacuated by the British, 1247.

Cibber, sculpture executed by, 752, 755

Cider tax repealed, 1766, 854

Cintra, convention of, 1808, 1069

Cities and towns of England, condition of, temp. Richard I., 96

Ciudad Rodrigo taken by the French, 1810, 1079; and recaptured by Wellington, Jan. 19, 1812, 1085

Clarence, George, brother of Edward IV., created duke of, in 1461, 194; marries Isabel, daughter of the earl of Warwick, 196; joins Warwick in a rising against Edward, ib.; Edward taken prisoner, but escapes, ib.; is defeated at Stamford, and escapes to France with Warwick, ib.; is reconciled to his brother, 198; is accused of participating in the murder of prince Edward, 199; endeavors to obtain in marriage the heiress of Burgundy, but is opposed by Edward, 201; is accused of treason, and convicted; dies in the Tower, Feb., 1478, ib.; no foundation for the statements of his drowning, or that Gloucester was implicated in his death, ib.

Clarence, William, duke of. See William IV.

Clarendon, Constitutions of, passed in 1164, 85; the Pope refuses to confirm them, ib.

Clarendon (sir Edward Hyde) earl of, becomes the adviser of Charles I. in 1641, 445; draws up the answer to the Remonstrance of the Commons, ib.; the Presbyterian party endeavor to obtain his expulsion from office as a condition of the restoration, 531; the Declaration from Breda, written by, 532; double dealing of, 535; address of, as chancellor, to the parliament, ib.; earnest desire to re-establish the Church of England, 538; maintains the principle of the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity, ib.; marriage of his daughter to the duke of York, and his singular conduct, ib.; opposes the desire of parliament for more punishments, 540; advises the sale of Dunkirk to the French, 541; the populace accuse him of having been bribed, ib.; is deprived of office in 1667, 550; character of, ib.; he is impeached on Nov. 12, leaves the country, and is banished by an Act, Dec. 29, ib.; settles at Montpelier in France, 551

Claret. See Wine.

Clarke, Mrs., the duke of York's favorite; allowed to tamper with military matters, 1071

Clarkson, Thomas, his zealous efforts to obtain the abolition of the slave trade, 1057

Claudius, invasion of Britain by, 7; joins Plautius, takes Camalodunum and returns to Rome, 7

Clausel, gen., commands the French at Salamanca after Marmont's death, 1087

Claverhouse (John Graham, of), cruelties of, towards the Covenanters, 566; is defeated by them at Drumclog in 1679, 567; behavior of, at the battle of Bothwell Bridge, 567; causes Brown, "the Christian carrier," to be shot, and insults his wife, 568

Clavering, gen., a member of the council of Calcutta, 948; claims the governor-generalship, 949; and assumes its powers; he is compelled to give it up; death of, ib.

Claviere, minister of finance, 1792, 977; quarrels with Brissot, ib.; resumes his office, 979

Clay, Henry, an American plenipotentiary for signing the peace of Ghent, 1101

Clement XIII., pope, 1758-1769; defends the Jesuits, 866

Clement XIV.; he suppresses the Jesuits, 1773, 866; pope, 1769-1774, 1310

Clergy, the position and condition of, in the 15th century, 186; intercourse of, with the laity, ib.; payment of curates, ib.; dislike of, to the monastic orders, ib.; influence of domestic chaplains, ib.; influence of, in the making of wills, ib.; injurious effects of the "benefit of clergy" upon the morals of the people, temp. Henry VII., 222; increased dissatisfaction of the people with the oppressions of, 246; statutes passed in the parliament of 1529 against ecclesiastical abuses, ib.; resistance offered by them to the passing of, ib.; visited with heavy penalties for submitting to Wolsey as legate, 250; Act abolishing the payment of annates by, to the see of Rome, carried into effect in 1533, 251; ordered to preach at Paul's Cross that the pope hath no authority in the realm, 254; visitation of the monasteries ordered in 1535, ib.; delinquencies of the monks, 259; dissoluteness of the inmates of religious houses exposed by the visitation commissioners, 274; occasional exceptions, ib.; character of the parochial clergymen, 297; married clergy expelled from their livings in 1554, 324; increased severity of the persecution against married clergymen, 328; state of, at the commencement of the Civil War in 1642, 450; number ejected from their livings on the adoption of the Presbyterian Covenant, in 1643, 464; legal provision for, not interfered with during the Civil War, 535; the ejected ministers restored in 1660, ib.; income of the clergy compared with that of other grades of society, 620; their condition and character, temp. queen Anne, ib.; exhorted by Burnet to "labor more," ib.; divisions among the clergy regarding the Comprehension Bill and the reforming the liturgy, 1689, 624; introduction of the terms High and Low Church, about 1689, ib.; the episcopalian clergy of Scotland "rabbled," and turned out of their livings by the Covenanters, 629; Protestant clergy of Ireland deprived of their benefices, seek refuge in England, where they are aided by public subscriptions, and appointed to lectureships, etc.; their property in Ireland is transferred to the Roman Catholics, 633; division in the Church, 635; queen Anne restores the "first fruits and tenths" of all preferments to the church for the benefit of the; it is popularly known as "Queen Anne's Bounty," 693; the English clergy, 1737-1783; their disregard of morality; neglect of their sacred functions, 944; their conviviality, card-playing, and apathy, ib.; Cowper's description of the clergyman of his time, 1135

Clerk, John, of Eldin, his claim to the idea of breaking the line of battle at sea considered, 900

Clinton, sir Henry, appointed commander of the British army in America, 1778, 886; sails from New York; invests Charleston, which capitulates, May 12, 1780; returns to New York leaving Cornwallis in command, 892; Washington's letter to, remonstrating against Cornwallis' severities, ib.; his reply, ib.; accepts Arnold's treacherous overture; and opens a secret correspondence with him, 893; demands André's release, 893

Clive, Robert, lord; general in the Indian army, which he enters as ensign, 827; captain; attacks and takes Arcot; besieged therein by Rajah Sahib, ib.; who, however, is compelled to raise the siege, ib.; Clive takes Trichinopoly; returns to England; marries Miss Maskelyne; appointed governor of Fort St. David, and lieutenant-colonel, 1755, 827; returns to Fort St. David, June; appointed to the command of the expedition against Surajah Dowlah; retakes Calcutta, Jan. 2, 1757; his successful night attack frightens the subahdar into a peace; enters into an alliance with him; Chandernagore taken from the French; his unscrupulous policy towards Omichund, 834; his own defence of his conduct in 1773; defeats Surarajah Dowlah at Plassey, June 23, ib.; instals Meer Jaffier into the subahdarship of Bengal; his character; establishes the British ascendancy in India, 835; governor and commander-in-chief of Bengal; establishes the British power in India, 860; returns to England, 1767, ib.

Closter-seven, convention of, Oct. 22, 1757, agreed to by the duke of Cumberland, 836; the king refuses to ratify it, 837

Cloth. See Wool; Yorkshire; Leeds.

Clothing, dearness and scarcity of, in the 15th century, 184

Club-life, picture of, early part of George III.'s reign, 941

Coal, practice of melting iron with coal introduced by lord Dudley, 1619, 605; extensive fields of, in South Wales, ib.; Newcastle trade in, and enormous consumption of, by London, in queen Anne's time, 610; cruelties inflicted on women and children employed in coal mines, 1229

Coal-trade to France, and restrictions on exportation, in the reign of Henry VIII., 296

Cobbett, William, his partiality for the Wiltshire Downs, 916; attributes the panic of 1816 to the scarcity of corn, 1116; advocates parliamentary reform; sudden influence of his writings among the laboring classes in 1816, 1121; flies to America, and ceases to publish his Register for four months, 1125; personal appearance of; takes his seat on the Treasury bench in the Commons, 1833, 1202; his speech against appointing Mr. Sutton speaker, 1203; against Agnew's Sabbath observance bill, 1204; his intemperate motion to dismiss Peel from the Privy Council as the author of the currency bill of 1819, rejected, 1205

Cobden, Richard, insists upon the total repeal of the corn duties, 1261; his speech laying the responsibility for the country's distress on sir R. Peel, 1264; his speech on moving for an inquiry into the agricultural distress; his motion rejected, 1273

Cobentzel, Austrian plenipotentiary, at Udine, 1797; Bonaparte's simile with his tea service, 1018

Cobham, lord, captures Vigo, 1719, 772

Coburg, prince of, commands the French at Neerwinden, 1793, 993; his contradictory proclamations, 994; commands the allied army, 996; driven over the Sambre by Jourdan, 1000

Cockburn, admiral, with general Ross, incites the American negroes to revolt, 1814, 1096

Codrington, sir Edward, admiral in command of the allied fleet; interferes with Turkey's conduct towards Greece, 1173; gains the battle of Navarino, ib.

Coercion Bill for Ireland, 1204; becomes law, April 2, 1833, 1205; proposed renewal of, not carried, 1834, 1213; passed in a modified form, ib.

Coffee, tax on, 17th century, 613

Coffee-houses, 939

Cogidubnus, British legate at Chichester, under the Roman empire, 14

Cohorn, engineer of the States-general; besieged in Namur, 1692, 652; wounded, ib.; aids in recapturing Namur, 1695, 662; aids Marlborough in his campaign of 1702, 689; with him plans the capture of Antwerp, 692

Coifi, chief priest of the Northumbrian Saxons, converted by Paulinus, destroys the idols, 23

Coinage. See Money.

Coins, ancient British, 7, note

Coke, Mr., his agricultural improvements of Norfolk, 910

Coke, sir Edward, bitterness of his speech as attorney-general against the earl of Essex, 391; brutality of his conduct when prosecuting Raleigh, 398; as lord chief justice, issues a warrant to apprehend the earl of Somerset for the murder of Overbury, 413; dissatisfaction of James with his conduct on the trial, 414; opposes the arbitrary measures of the king, and is dismissed, ib.; draws up a petition in the Commons, in 1621, against the growth of popery, 419; assists in the debate on the Petition of Right in 1628, 423; denounces the duke of Buckingham in the House of Commons, ib.

Colchester, the ancient Camalodunum, 6; description of the castle of, 7; supposed temple to Claudius at, 8
Colchester, lord, his account of the battle of Steinkirk, 654
Colchester, Charles Abbot, lord, his account of the king's refusal to make concessions to Catholics, 1036; quotations from his diary, 1046, 1047, 1049, 1057, 1058, 1062, 1071, 1078, 1080, 1083; as Speaker gives the casting vote for censuring lord Melville, 1048
Colepepper committed to the Gate House for presenting the Kentish petition, 1701, 685
Coleridge, S. T., remarks of, on the French Revolution of 1789, 966; on Burke's "Reflections," 969; and on Robespierre, 1006; character of his poetic labors, 1137; failure of his dramas, 1139
College, Old, of Physicians, built by Wren, 654
Colli commands the Austro-Sardinian army against Bonaparte, 1796, 1011
Collier, Jeremy, castigates play writers, 671
Collingwood, Cuthbert, commands the Excellent at the battle of St. Vincent; supports Nelson in the contest, 1014; watches the French and Spanish fleet, 1049; aids Nelson in gaining the victory of Trafalgar, Oct. 21, 1805, 1051; his grief for the loss of Nelson, ib.; his advice to Duckworth, 1063
Collins, publication of his "Eclogues," 1742, and "Odes," 1746, 936
Collins, character of his paintings, 1147
Collot d'Herbois aids in destroying Lyon, 1793, 997
Colonization, systematic, plan of, proposed by Charles Buller, 1164
Combermere, viscount, commander-in-chief of India, 1171; bombards Bhurtpore, Nov. 23, 1825, and captures it, Jan. 18, ib.
Combination laws passed in the 18th century; repealed in the 19th, 821
Committee of Public Salvation instituted 1793, 994
Companies, mania for, 1689–1714, 614
Comprehension Bill introduced, not passed, 1689, 624
Compton, Henry, bishop of London, preaches the sermon at the opening of St. Paul's cathedral, Dec. 2, 1797, 669
Compton, sir Spencer, treasurer of Prince of Wales, 1727, 779; speaker of the House of Commons, ib.; Walpole draws up the royal speech for him; disappointed at not obtaining the premiership, ib.; first lord of the Treasury, 1742, 865
Conan, the leader of the British forces under Maximus, founds a colony in Brittany, A.D. 388, 18
Condé, prince de, flies from Paris, 1789, 963
Condé, surrendered to the Allies, July, 1793, 996
Condorcet, a republican, 973; a left side member of the Legislative Assembly, ib.
Conflans, a French admiral, defeated by Hawke, 1759, 839
Congress. See Hague, Verona, Vienna, Laybach, Carlsbad, Troppau, Radstadt.
Congreve, his estimate of the female character of his day, 743
Coningsby, lord, impeaches the earl of Oxford, 1715, 761
Constable, character of his painting, 1147
Constantine, accession of, to the government of Britain, 11; glowing account of prosperous state of Britain under, 12
Constantine raised to the imperial throne by the aid of the army in Britain, A.D. 306, 17; the civil government of Britain remodelled by, ib.; death of, A.D. 337, ib.
Constantinople, treaty of, July 8, 1833, 1225
Constantius, the emperor, supports the authority of Paulus, and applauds his savage cruelties, 17
Constitutional charter issued by Louis XVIII., 1814, 1102
Contades, mareschal de, defeated by Ferdinand, 1759, 838
Contemporary sovereigns, tables of, 1308–11
Convention, English, of 1689, declared a parliament, 623
Convention, Scotch, of 1689, proceedings of, 629
Conversation, the, of the 18th century, 942
Conway, general, takes the citadel of Aix, 1757, 836; valor displayed in campaign of 1761, 843; votes against the ministry on the question of the legality of general warrants, 849; dismissed from his regiment and parliament for so doing, ib.; secretary of state, 1765, 851; introduces the repeal of the American Stamp Act bill, 853; enthusiasm towards him for being the mover, ib.; secretary of state, 1765–1768, 854, 865; moves for the cessation of war, 899
Conyngham, marquis of, lord steward; governor of Windsor castle; delays swearing in the members of parliament, 1179; postmaster-general, 1834, 1211; lord chamberlain, 1224
Cook, captain, his voyages and discoveries; visits Otaheite, New Zealand, and New South Wales; discovers the Society Islands, 990
Cook, Thomas, chairman of E. I. Company; concerned in bribing members of parliament, 661
Cooke, Henry, restorer of the Raffaelle cartoons, 757
Cooke, M.P. for Middlesex; death of, 858
Cookham, its high parochial condition, 1209
Cooksworthy discovers a fine clay for porcelain, 937
Coote, sir Eyre, commander of the British forces in India, 950; defeats Hyder Ali, July 1, and Aug. 27, 1781, ib.
Coote, sir Eyre, conducts the siege of Flushing, 1809, 1075
Cope, sir John, commander-in-chief of Scotland, 802; marches from Stirling in pursuit of the rebels, 1745; declines to encounter the prince's army among the mountains; marches on to Inverness, ib.; embarks at Aberdeen; lands at Dunbar, Sept. 18; marches towards Edinburgh, 803; takes up his position at Preston to receive his opponent, where his troops are routed on the 22d in the battle of Preston Pans, 804
Copenhagen, battle of, April 2, 1801, 1037; bombarded by the British, 1807, 1066
Copley. See Lyndhurst.
Copley, J. S., West's rival in painting; example of his style, 1146
Copper mines and smelting, 605–610
Copyright act passed, 741; service rendered to literature by, ib.; passing of the new copyright act, 1842; Macaulay's amendments, 1253; beneficial application of, to old copyrights about to expire, 1254
Coracles, small fishing boats used by the Britons, 5
Coram, captain. See Foundling.
Corday, Charlotte, cause of her assassinating Marat; the deed is done July 13, 1793; she is executed, 995
Cork capitulates to Marlborough, Sept. 29, 1690, 641
Cornish, alderman, his attainder reversed, 1689, 633
Corn-law, the first passed in England in 1903, 181; effects of that passed 1815, 1114, 1156; a new act passed, 1822, 1156; relaxation of the, resisted, 1826, 1164, fears of their being repealed, 1164; general opposition manifested towards the Corn-laws; the Anti-Corn-law League, 1243; sir Robert Peel refuses to propose any alteration in the Corn-laws, 1261; after a prolonged debate sir Robert Peel's bill is adopted, ib.; a Corn-bill for Canada passed, 1264; debates on the 1268; proposed to be modified by sir R. Peel, 1275; their repeal advocated by lord J. Russell, ib.; different opinions of the Cabinet members as to their repeal, 1276; sir R. Peel's plan for a new Corn-law Bill, 1277; debate on the bill, 1278; it is ultimately passed, ib.; and received the Royal Assent, June, 1846, ib.; banquet at Manchester to celebrate the repeal of the Corn-laws, 1236
Corn trade at the end of the 17th century, 611
Cornwall, mineral products and condition of, temp. William and Anne, 605; agriculture of, 917
Cornwallis, Charles, sails from Cork with seven regiments, Feb., 1776; presens at the battle of Brooklyn, 879; follows Washington in his retreat as far as Trenton, ib.; routs the Americans at the battle of the Brandywine, Sept. 13, 1777; occupies Philadelphia 882; left in command of Charleston, 892; his severities towards deserters and prisoners, ib.; defeats Gates at Camden, Aug. 16, 1780, ib.; his march through Carolina; crippled by the defeat of Tarleton at Cowpens, 1781, 896; defeats general Greene at Guilford, Mar. 15; recommends a vigorous attack upon Virginia, ib.; marches into Virginia without orders; enters Charlottesville, and Yorktown, which last he fortifies, ib.; besieged, 897; loses hope, and surrenders Yorktown, Gloucester, and his army, Oct. 19, 897; his approbation of the conduct of the French, 898; appointed governor-general of India, 1786; labors to improve the administration and finance; complains of the insufficient European troops, 988; Tippoo forces him into a war; Cornwallis takes Bangalore, Mar. 21, 1791; defeats Tippoo, May 15; compelled to retreat by sickness and famine, 989; capture of Seringapatam, Feb., 1792; makes peace with Tippoo, Mar., ib.; describes France's ability to carry on war in a state of anarchy, 1006; unwilling to accept the command of the allied armies, 1794, 1023; master-general of the ordnance; advice as to volunteers, ib.; lord-lieutenant of Ireland and commander-in-chief, 1798; arrives in Dublin, June 20, 1024; he softens the ferocity of the troops, 1025; marches against the French under Humbert; and compels him to retreat to the quarters of general Lake, by whom the French are made to surrender, ib.; accused of being too lenient, ib.; advocates the emancipation of the Catholics, 1026; wishes to postpone the introduction of the Union measure, 1027; his opinion of Grenville's answer to Bonaparte, 1800, 1033; remarks of, on the influence of the king's narrow views on Irish affairs, 1036; has no hopes of peace, 1801, 1039; conducts the negotiations for peace at Amiens, 1801, ib.; his interview with Napoleon, ib.; difficulties in diplomacy, ib.; peace of Amiens concluded, ib.; governor-general of India, 1805; died Oct. 5, 1805, 1055
Coronation oath, dubious construction of, 625; difficulties caused by this in George III.'s time, 1035, 1046, 1061; and in George IV.'s reign, 1176
Corporation and Test Acts, attempts to obtain the repeal of the, 1730, 781, 968; repealed, 1828, 1175
Corruption, parliamentary, 1693, 4, 661, 774
Corry, chancellor of Irish exchequer; duels with Grattan, 1027
Corsica ceded to France, 1768; Paoli's resistance, 865; revolt of, 1794; annexed to Great Britain; restored to France, 1007
Corunna, battle of, Jan. 16, 1809, 1070
Cossein, Meer, subahdar of Bengal; quarrels with the English; war for deposing him; murders 150 prisoners; defeated, 869
Costume, extensive use of hoop petticoats, 742; note on the Highland, 865; pride taken in dress by the gentlemen, temp. 1737–1783, 942; Prince of Wales's, on his introduction to the house of peers, 1783, 952
Cotton, the first mill, established by Arkwright, 915, 925; trade in 1788, 923; John Kaye introduces the fly shuttle; improvements in machines for spinning, ib.; demand for yarn; Hargreaves completes his spinning jenny, 1767, 924; domestic cotton spinning about to cease, ib.; Arkwright's invention of his patent spinning machine, ib.; difficulties of bringing it into general use overcome, 925; invention of the spinning mule by Crompton; the machine completed, 1779, ib.; given to the public, ib.; rush to engage in spinning, 926; commencement of the system of employing factory children, ib.; employment of steam engines in the manufacture of, ib.; the old spinning wheel and the modern spinning mill contrasted, ib.; Cartwright's invention of the power loom, ib.; slow introduction into general use; number used in 1813, 1833, and 1856, ib.; British import of American, in 1785, 1791, 1801, 1811, 1812, 1813, and 1859, 1097; attempts to grow, in India, 1171
Cotton, sir S. See Combermere, Viscount.
Couthon shares in executing the Lyonnese, 1793, 997; his cruelty, 1005; and death, 1794, ib.
Country justices in the last century described, 943
Court Martial Bill rejected, 1757, 833
Courtenay, sir W. See Thorn.
Courts of Law, established by Henry II., 84
Covenanters, under Baillie, are defeated by Montrose in 1645, 471; obtain the rule in Scotland, after the capture of Hamilton, in 1648, 485; their exultation at the defeat and capture of Montrose, in 1650, 496; insurrection of, in the West of Scotland, in 1666, 548; cruelties practised towards, ib.; resistance of, to the Black Indulgence, ib.; attempt of Lauderdale to reduce, by military force, 566; cruelties exercised towards, ib., murder of archbishop Sharpe, 567; defeat Claverhouse at Drumclog, ib.; are defeated at Bothwell Bridge on June 22, 1679, ib.; moderation of Monmouth towards, ib.; receive the name of Whig, ib.; cruelties inflicted on, by the Duke of York and Claverhouse, 568; a Test Act passed against the Covenant in 1682, 573; fresh cruelties committed upon, ib.; renewed and illegal persecutions of, in 1683, 576; fresh laws obtained against them by James II. in 1685, and the soldiery let loose upon them, 578
Covent Garden Theatre built by Smirke, 1808, 1809, 1143
Covered ways, or roads, of the Britons, in Wiltshire, continued existence of, 6
Cox, David, character of his paintings, 1147
Cowpens, battle of, Jan. 1781, 896
Cowper, William, earl, appointed lord keeper, 1705, 705; his faint hopes of peace with France, 723; reads George I.'s first speech to the English parliament, 761; passes sentence of death, as lord high steward, upon the lords concerned in the rebellion of 1715, 766; his motion for the repeal of the pest-house laws rejected, 775; opposes the passing of the bill of pains and penalties, 1723, 776
Cowper, William; his description of the conversation of his time, 942; of the apathy of the clergy, 944; quotations from his "Task," 963, 1081; late appearance as a writer, 1135; first volume published, 1784, and second in 1785; character of his writings; died 1800, ib.; manners of his age as depicted by, ib.
Crabbe, George, quotations from, 912, 943; a poet of two periods, 1135; his early poems; those called "The Library" and "The Newspaper" noticed, 1135; appearance of his volume containing the "Parish Register," 1807; of "The Borough," in 1810; of "Tales," in 1812; and of "Tales of the Hall," in 1819, 1138; delineations of manners contained in his poems, ib.; died 1832, 1254
Cracow made a free republic, 1846, 1225
Cradock, sir John, commands the British in Portugal, 1072; removed to Gibraltar, ib.
Craggs, postmaster-general, bribed, ; commits suicide, 774
Craggs, James, appointed secretary at war, 1717, 769; receives a bribe from the South Sea Company directors, 774; dies of small-pox during the inquiry into the bribes connected with the South Sea Scheme, 1721, 775
Cranbourne tried and executed for designing to kill Will. III., 1696, 665
Cranmer, Thomas, sent with the ambassador to the crowning of the emperor Charles V., in 1530, 248; writes a book to prove the invalidity of the king's marriage to Catherine, ib.; unfeeling remark of, concerning the burning of Frith, 250; returns to England, and is made archbishop of Canterbury, 253; requests Henry's license to pronounce on the divorce, and obtains it, ib.; holds a court at Dunstable, Catherine refuses to appear, and he pronounces sentence of divorce on May 23, 1533, ib.; description of the coronation of Anne Boleyn by, ib.; endeavors ineffectually to exempt sir Thomas More from taking an oath as to the illegality of the king's first marriage, 256; his letter to the king in favor of Anne Boleyn, 262; dissuades the king from putting the princess Mary to death, 265; servility of, 272; opposes the Act of the Six Articles, but ultimately submits to it, 277; consents to the Act declaring the marriage of Henry to Anne of Cleves invalid, 279; his opinion of Cromwell, ib.; discovers to the king the profligacy of Catherine Howard, 280; accused of heresy, but relieved by the king, 285; causes the Paraphrase of the New Testament by Erasmus to be translated into English, 303; prepares the Book of Common Prayer, 304; signs the death-warrant of lord Thomas Seymour, 306; writes to Warwick and the confederated lords that Somerset is secured, 311; amount of participation of, in the burning of Joan Bocher, 312; book o. Canon Laws issued by, 313; committed to the Tower on the accession of Mary, Nov. 14, 1553, 319; pleads not guilty to the charge of high treason, and withdraws his plea, 320; condemned for heresy at Oxford, 324; he recants, 330; publicly withdraws his recantation, and declares his repentance for having made it, ib.; is burnt on March 21, 1556, ib.
Cranston, lord, present at Rodney's victory over De Grasse, 1782, 901
Craufurd, general; his bravery at the siege of Ciudad Rodrigo, 1812; mortally wounded, 1085
Craven dialect, specimens of the, 919
Crayford, chalk caves at, 5
Cressy, battle of, on Aug. 26, 1346, 137, 138; won by the steady bravery of the yeomen of England, 138

Crillon, duc de, besieges Gibraltar, 1782, 906
Crime, prevalence of, 1692, 654
Criminal laws, extreme severity of, temp. Henry VII., 225, 251–252; statute for the punishment of offences against property, passed in 1545, 292; reforms in the, 1117
Cristall, sir Henry, Froissart's account of his captivity among the Irish, 266
Croft, James, a collier and enthusiastic agriculturist; his career and perseverance; a model of the modern British spirit, 918
Croker, J. W., his intellectual powers; his steady opposition to the Reform bill, 1831, 1191.
Cromartie, lord; trial of; found guilty; pardoned, 817
Cromlechs, supposed purpose of, 6
Crompton, Samuel, inventor of the cotton mule, 925; his character, ib.; secretes his machine from the rioters of 1779; works at it in secret, ib.; he is ultimately compelled to give it to the public for 67*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*; general employment of his machine, ib.
Cromwell, Oliver, first appearance of, in the House of Commons, in 1629, 425; presents a petition from Lilburne, imprisoned by the Star-Chamber, to the Long Parliament, in 1640, 437; seizes the magazine at Cambridge, and stops the transmission of the University plate to the king, 452; letter of, to the Commissioners at Cambridge, 461; character of, 463; hazardous situation of, at the skirmish of Winceby, ib.; distinguished services of, at the battle of Marston Moor, 465; letter of, to his brother, concerning the battle, ib.; brings a charge against the earl of Manchester, 466; thinks the army ought to be remodelled, ib.; great importance of his military services, 467; active measures of, against the royalists, ib.; letter of, announcing the result of Naseby battle, to the Speaker of the House of Commons, ib.; commands the right wing at battle of Naseby, ib.; his conduct in it, 468; letter of, to Fairfax, announcing that he had taken 300 clubmen, 469; invests Bristol in company with Fairfax, ib.; his account of the surrender, ib.; Winchester surrenders to, ib.; batters down Basing House, ib.; his discipline of the Ironsides, 475; wishes to prevent the army being disbanded, in opposition to the Presbyterians, 476; organization of the Adjutators, ib.; leaves London, and joins the army, ib.; waits on Charles at Royston, ib.; proposals of, and of the Independents, to Charles, 478; the king rejects them, ib.; Cromwell and Ireton endeavor to serve the king, 479; they intercept a letter of the king's, 480; he breaks off his intercourse with the king, ib.; conduct of, towards the Levellers, 482; suspicion that Charles made his escape from Hampton Court at the instigation of, ib.; tries to effect a reconciliation between the Presbyterians and Independents, ib.; leaves London, to quell an outbreak in Wales, 483; takes Pembroke, 484; marches against the duke of Hamilton, ib.; and defeats him at Preston, 485; enters Scotland, ib.; the victory throws both king and parliament into alarm, ib.; returns from Scotland, 486; letter to Hammond, 487; arrives in London, 488; extraordinary religious enthusiasm displayed by, 489; conduct of, at the trial of the king, 490; speaks in favor of the petition of lord Capel, 492; puts down a mutiny in Whalley's regiment, ib.; in conjunction with Fairfax suppresses the Levellers in the army, ib.; is presented with a service of plate by the Corporation of London, for putting down the Levellers, ib.; leaves London for Ireland, as lord-lieutenant there, 493; embarks at Milford Haven, ib.; arrives at Dublin, ib.; addresses the Irish, ib.; issues a proclamation, ib.; takes Drogheda, Trim, Dundalk, and Wexford, 494; his account of the slaughters, ib.; meets with a stout resistance at Waterford, ib.; Cork surrenders to him, 495; his policy in Ireland, ib.; returns to London, ib.; leaves Ireton as deputy in Ireland, ib.; arrival and enthusiastic reception of, in London, 497; is created General of all the forces, ib.; marches to Scotland, ib.; meets with a vigorous resistance from Lesley, ib.; his danger at Dunbar, ib.; position of his army at Dunbar, 498; gains the battle of Dunbar, on Sept. 3, 1650, ib.; his letter to parliament, ib.; takes Perth, ib.; letter of, to parliament, announcing the probable invasion of England by the Scotch army, 499; totally defeats it at Worcester, on Sept. 3, 1651, ib.; and compels Charles II. to fly to France, 501; description of his army, ib.; returns to London, 502; his reforming policy, ib.; urges the advancement of two great measures—An Act of Amnesty, and a Law for the Election of future parliaments, ib.; attends a conference at Lenthall's house on the settlement of the nation, ib.; dialogue between Whitelocke and, 505; opposes the proposal for perpetuating the parliament, ib.; conference at his residence at Whitehall, ib.; dissolves the Long Parliament, 506; and the Council of State, ib.; summons a parliament, 507; receives a dispatch from Blake and Monk announcing their victory over the Dutch fleet, ib.; his Little Parliament meets on July 4, 1653, ib.; character of the Little Parliament, ib.; speech of, to the Little Parliament, 508; its constitution is provisional, ib.; it abolishes the Court of Chancery, ib.; the Little Parliament resigns its authority into the hands of, ib.; he is declared protector, Dec. 16, 1653, 509; remarks on, ib.; is made Chancellor of Oxford, 510; patronizes learning, ib.; love for music, ib.; character of his government as protector, 512; incentives to assassinate, 513; sagacity and prudence of, ib.; royalist plot to assassinate, discovered and put down, ib.; two of the conspirators, John Gerard and Peter Vowell, executed, ib.; tact displayed by, ib.; foreign policy of, displayed in promoting the union of the Protestant States of Europe, and in treaties and alliances with Sweden, France, and Portugal, 514; causes Don Pantaleon de Sa to be executed for murder, ib.; explains his policy to the first parliament of the protectorate, ib.; speech of, on opening the session, ib.; parliament questions his authority, 515; upon which he closes the door of the parliament house, ib.; and admits those members only who sign a pledge to obey him, ib.; is thrown from his coach, 516; temper of his parliament, ib.; dissolves it, ib.; puts down a royalist rising, 517; refusal to pay taxes to, ib.; appoints major-generals for collecting the taxes, ib.; conduct of the major-generals, ib.; toleration of, in religious matters, 518; greatness of, in his foreign policy, ib.; practical spirit of, infused into his army, ib.; increases the strength of the navy, ib.; disappointment of, at Venables not capturing Hispaniola, 519; his abhorrence of vice in the army, ib.; interference of, in favor of the Vaudois, or Waldenses, ib.; attempts of, to procure a settlement in England for the Jews, ib.; endeavors to obtain a pledge from the republican leaders not to oppose his government, 520; imprisons Vane and other political opponents, ib.; conference of, with Ludlow, ib.; speech of, at the meeting of his second parliament, ib.; indications of a legislative mind displayed in the speech, 521; Napoleon compared with, ib.; public indignation at, for excluding members from the parliament, ib.; Acts passed for security of his person, ib.; his part in the case of James Nayler, the Quaker, ib.; Sindercomb's plot against, 522; the trial and death of, ib.; his parliament congratulate him on his escape from it, ib.; parliament vote his being made king, ib.; conferences on the subject, 523; declines to accept the title, ib.; pamphlet entitled "Killing no Murder" published, threatening death to, ib.; is inaugurated as protector and invested with the kingly power, June 26, 1657, ib.; readmits the members he excluded from parliament, ib.; his daughter Mary is married to Lord Falconbridge, and Frances to the earl of Warwick, ib.; parliament meets, 524; a second house, ib.; dissensions between him and the parliament, ib.; it is dissolved by, ib.; puts down a royalist rising; several ringleaders are condemned and executed, ib.; successes abroad, ib.; Dunkirk taken, 525; his family afflictions, ib.; death, ib.; and burial, 526; disinterred from Westminster Abbey, and buried at Tyburn, 536; notice of Cromwell's free trade policy toward Scotland, 674
Cromwell, Richard, proclaimed protector, Sept. 4, 1658, 526; character of, ib.; financial difficulties of, ib.; meeting of parliament, ib.; bill passed for the recognition of his title, 527; hostility of the army towards, ib.; his weak government, ib.; compelled to dissolve the parliament, ib.; his government ends, ib.; restoration of Long Parliament, under the name of "The Rump," ib.; leaves Whitehall, ib.; he and his family pass into obscurity, ib.
Cromwell, Thomas, said to have been present at the sack of Rome, 240; adheres to Wolsey on his fall, 245; defends him in parliament, ib.; letter of, to Wolsey, ib.; writes exhortations to Frith and Tyndale, the reformers, 250; becomes viceregent, ib.; issues a commission for the visitation of the monasteries, ib.; unworthy use made of their property by, ib.; official corruption of, 260; effects a reconciliation between the princess Mary and her father, 265; absolute power of, in ecclesiastical affairs, 272; participation of, in the plunder of the religious houses, 275; measures taken by, to pack the parliament of 1539, ib.; disgraceful conduct of, in procuring the attainder and condemnation of the aged countess of Salisbury, 278; promotes the marriage of Henry with Anne of Cleves, ib.; dissatisfaction of the king with the match, ib.; is arrested for treason, 279; demands a trial by law, ib.; is attainted and executed, July 28, 1540, ib.; injunctions of, for the keeping of a parish register-book of births, deaths, and marriages, 287
Crosbie, alias Cleuch, proposes to carry off William III., 664
Crosby, Brass, lord mayor, 1771; decides a lawsuit against an officer of the House of Commons, who had arrested a printer for publishing the debates, 865; ordered to attend before the bar of the House; committed to the Tower, ib.; released, ib.
Crowle, parliamentary proceedings against, 1751, 822.
Crown Point surprised by the Americans, 1775, 874
Crusades, the first preaching of, in 1095, 67; incentives offered for prosecuting, 68
Crusaders, progress of the first, ib.; rout of the body under Peter the Hermit and Walter the Penniless, ib.
Cuesta, general, of the Spanish army, 1076; his temerity, ib.; forsakes the charge of sick and wounded left him by Bonaparte, ib.
Culleys, they reinvigorate the agriculture of Northumberland, 919
Culloden, description of the moor of, 813; battle of, April 16, 1746, 816; barbarous treatment of the wounded after the battle, ib.
Cullum, sir John, describes the agricultural improvements of Suffolk, 911
Cumberland, its population, products, and manufactures, 611
Cumberland, Henry Frederick, duke of, George III.'s brother; fined £10,000 on a charge of criminal conversation brought by lord Grosvenor; accompanies Mrs. Horton to Calais; there marries her; the pair are forbidden the Court; the king's disgust, 868; from these circumstances emanated the Royal Marriage Act, ib.
Cumberland, William Augustus, duke of, second son of George II.; accompanies his father at the battle of Dettingen; commands the English left, 797; commands the allied armies in the campaign of 1745; attacks the French at Fontenoy, May 11, ib.; forms a column; its extraordinary march, and steady retreat, 798; marches after the rebels, 810; pursues their retreating army, 812; invests Carlisle, Dec. 21; it capitulates, Dec. 30; his hard terms to the garrison; summoned to London to command the forces against the threatened French invasion, 813; sent back to Scotland to retrieve the disasters of Falkirk, 814; arrives at Edinburgh, Jan. 30, 1746, ib.; the sight of his army compels the Highlanders to fly from Stirling, ib.; arrives at Aberdeen, 815; advances against the rebels, April 8; the passage of the Spey; reaches Nairn, ib.; a night attack is attempted upon his camp; advances against the prince on Culloden Moor, ib.; and gains a victory over him, April 16, 816; his unpopularity, ib.; his view of the Rebellion, ib.; anecdote of his insolence, 817; commands the British at the defeat of Lauffeld, 1747, 820; George II. desires him to be Regent, 823; urges that Pitt and Temple be turned out of power, 833; driven out of Hanover by Richelieu; and the capitulation of Closter-Seven is agreed to between them; his father's anger, by whom he is insulted, 836; resigns his post of commander-in-chief, ib.; appointed to negotiate with Pitt for his return to power, 851
Cumberland, duke of, Ernest Augustus, his political opinions, 1063; becomes king of Hanover, 1837, 1232; his intolerant and despotic government, ib.
Cunningham, Alexander, description of the Highlanders by, 630
Cunobelin, state of Britain during the period of, 5; power and dominion of, and state of civilization in the reign of, 6, 7
Currency. See Money.
Curwen, M.P. for Carlisle; his account of Burke's intense hatred to French revolutionary principles, 970
Curwen institutes an inquiry into the Poor Laws, 1816, 1119
Custom House, London, built by Wren, 754
Cutts, lord, his bravery before Namur, 1695, 662; captain of the Guards, 665; sent on before to commence the attack on the village of Blenheim, Aug. 13, 1704, 697; which order he performs, ib.; takes part in the final struggle, 698
Cymbeline. See Cunobelin.

Dagger-scene in Burke's speech, 1792, 987, 988
D'Alegre, his escape from the Bastille, 1756, 963
D'Allegre, marquis, defeated by Marlborough, and taken prisoner, 704
Dalrymple, sir Hew.; mortification caused by his being appointed to command the troops in Portugal, 1069; recalled home, ib.
Dalrymple, sir John, one of the commissioners who invested William with the government, 630; master of stair; secretary of state for Scotland; orders of, to Hill and Livingstone, regarding the rebel chiefs, 645; grudge of, against the MacDonalds, of Glencoe, 646; suspected of having a "black design" against them, ib.; letters of, connected with the Glencoe massacre, 647; is implicated, by the commission of 1695, as the original cause of the massacre, 648; William dismisses him from his office, 649
Dalton, John, author of the Atomic theory, 1141
Dammaree, Daniel, his share in the riots of 1710, 722; he is tried for high treason, found guilty, but subsequently pardoned, 715; becomes master of queen Anne's barge, 722
Dampierre, general, commands the French republican army, 1793, 996; killed in an attack on the allied forces, May 8, ib.
Dance, architect of the Mansion House and Newgate, 934
Danegelt, payments of, 47; abolished by Edward the Confessor, 50
Danes, or Northmen, ravages of, 25
Danes invade Mercia, A.D. 868, 29; again in 870, and advance to East Anglia, ib.; obtain possession of Mercia and Northumbria, 31; massacre of, in England, in 1002, 47
Danton, G. J., a leader of the Cordeliers, 973; calls the people to arms, Aug. 9, 1792, 979; appointed minister of justice, 980; encourages the September massacres, 981; protects Dumouriez against the Jacobins, 993; supports the establishment of the revolutionary Republic, ib.; guillotined, 1794, 1002
Dantzic, duke of, the Tyrolese beat him back from their territory, 1074
D'Arco, count, Bavarian general; defeated at Schellenburg, 1704, 690
Dardanelles, Duckworth's expedition to the, 1807, 1064
D'Argentean defeated at Montenotte, 1796, by Bonaparte, 1011
Darien Company. See African and Indian Company.
Darmstadt, prince of, assists sir G. Rooke in his expedition against Cadiz, 1702, 690; and at the capture of Gibraltar, 1704, 700; remains there in command of the garrison, ib.; he is besieged by the Spaniards, and makes a successful resistance, ib.; joins Peterborough, 1705; urges the plan of besieging Barcelona; quarrels with Peterborough, 701; assists Peterborough in surprising Montjuich, but is killed in the attack, 702
Darnley. See Mary of Scotland.
Dartmouth, William Legge, lord; secretary of state, 1710, 724; dissuades, unsuccessfully, Anne from making twelve new peers, 730
Dartmouth, lord; colonial secretary, 1773, 869; privy seal, 1775, 876
Darwin, Erasmus, curious character of his poems, resulting from his combining science with poetry, 1136
Das Minas, a Portuguese general, defeated at Almanzar, 1707, 713
D'Aubach, general, abandons Treves and Sarsbruch, 1705, 704
Daun, marshal, of the Austrian army; advances to relieve Prague, 835; co-operates with Loudoun in surprising Frederick, 837
D'Auverquerque, a friend of William III., 622; his conduct at Steinkirk, 653; joins Marlborough with his army, 1705, 704; makes a feint attack on the weak portion of the French lines, ib.; leads the Dutch cavalry at the battle of Ramilies, 1706, 706; dies 1708, 717

Davies, Rowland, chaplain in the army: a bet of his illustrative of the gambling spirit of the age, 637; quotations from, illustrative of William's campaign in Ireland, 1690, ib., 638, 640
Davoust, L. N., enters Berlin, Dec. 25, 1806, 1061
Dawson, James, executed July, 1746, 817
Davy, sir Humphry, invents the safety lamp, 1815, 1041
Dean Forest destroyed to make charcoal for smelting iron, 605
Deane, Silas, the American agent at Paris, 1776, 878; appointed to make a treaty of alliance with France, 880; his share in promoting incendiarism in England, 880
Decrès, admiral, minister of marine; persuades Napoleon to postpone the invasion of England, 1805, 1050
Deccan, nizam of the, concludes an alliance with Cornwallis, 989; his contingent to the English army, 1029; cedes his Mysore territory for British aid and protection, 1053; his territories devastated by the Pindarees, 1169
Declaratory bill passed, 1766, 853
Declaratory, Indian bill, passed, 1788, 989
Declaration of Independence. See American Declaration of Independence.
Declaration of Pilnitz. See Pilnitz.
Declaration of Rights, twice brought forward by Grattan, 903
Dee, Dr. John, in trouble for casting the nativities of queen Mary and the princess Elizabeth, 331
Defoe's (Daniel) "Journal of the Plague Year," notice of, 543; his account of the effect of shutting up the exchequer in 1671, 555; reason given by, why the dissenters opposed the Declaration of Indulgence, 557; statement of, that the persecution of the dissenter arose from political, not religious, motives, 559; his account of the excitement produced by the popish plot in 1678, 562; joins the insurrection of the duke of Monmouth in 1685, 581; his opinion of the Declaration of Indulgence, 590; remarks on Bristol by, 603; opinion of, on the bills in the northern counties of England, 604; description of Bath by, ib.; London glass-houses used by vagrants for lodging in, supported by the statement of his "Colonel Jack," 607; stocking weaving noticed to be very extensively practised by, ib.; the Lincolnshire fens noticed by, 608; account of Manchester by, 609; salmon referred to by, 611; account of agricultural counties referred to by, ib.; opposes the drama, 671; probably the author of the Legion Memorial, 684; stir caused by his pamphlet on "The Shortest Way with Dissenters," 690; he is tried for writing seditious pamphlets, found guilty, and pilloried at the Royal Exchange, Cheapside, and Temple Bar, 1703, 691; publishes his "Hymn to the Pillory," ib.; and an account of the great storm, 1704, 693; his prejudiced remarks against maypoles, 694; Carleton's Memoirs erroneously ascribed to, 701; his "Review" appeared, 1704; its character and aim, 737; his honesty and independence, 742; his power of personifying his characters, 751; the main principle of his writings, ib.
De Grasse lands a large force at James Town, 896; his engagement with sir S. Hood, 1781, 897; defeated by Rodney, 1782; surrenders himself a prisoner, 901
De la Place, captain, commanded the garrison at Ticonderoga; surrenders the fort, May 10, 1775, 875
Delacroix, French minister for foreign affairs, considers the Rhine the boundary of France, 1012
De la Rue gives Portland warning of the assassination plot, 665
De Launay. See Launay.
Delaval, admiral, his conduct in the battle of La Hogue, 651
Delhi taken by the British, 1054
Demerara retaken from the French, 899
Democrats, an American political party; its contests, leaders, and vicissitudes, 1095, 1099
Dendermonde surrendered to Marlborough, Sept. 5, 1706, 706
Denham, sir John, the poet; surveyor-general, 752
Denia captured by the English, 1705, 701; besieged, 1708, 701
Denman, sir Thomas, counsel for the Derbyshire insurrectionists, 1817; his opinion of Brandreth, 1124; appointed queen's solicitor-general, 1820, 1151; the conferences, in which he took part, for averting public proceedings against the queen, fail in their object, 1152; boluness of his summing-up speech at the queen's trial, 1153; attorney-general in the Grey ministry, 1187; supports the bill for allowing counsel to prisoners, 1230
Denmark, George of. See George of Denmark.
Dennewitz, battle of, Sept. 6, 1813, 1090
Dennis, John, his rage at Pope's satire, 748
Denonville persuades Blansac to surrender to Marlborough, 698
De Pontis, French admiral, inability of, to take Gibraltar, 1704, 700
De Précy, his defence of Lyon, and escape, 1793, 997
Derby, earl of (E. G. S. Stanley), chief secretary for Ireland, 1830, 1187; speaks in favor of reform, 1189; his hostile speeches against O'Connell, 1833, 1203, 1205; his hostility with the agitators becoming so personal, he exchanges his Irish secretaryship for that of the colonies, ib.; resists the appropriation of funds to be sanctioned by the Irish Church Reform Bill, ib.; resolutions proposed by, for abolishing slavery in British colonies, 1201; debates on, and progress of the bill for this purpose; it becomes law, ib.; resigns his secretaryship, 1834, 1212; declines joining Peel's ministry, 1215; takes part in the debate on the sugar duties, 1244;
Derbyshire, silk trade and lead mines of, 607
Derbyshire, insurrection of, 1817, 1124
Derwentwater, J. Ratcliffe, earl of, joins the Pretender's army, 1715, 763; impeached of high treason by Mr. Lechmere; he is tried and found guilty, 766; his wife implores the king to pardon him, ib.; he is executed on Tower Hill, Feb. 24, 1716, ib.
Desaix, present at the battle of the Pyramids, 1798, 1021; killed at Marengo, 1800, 1034
Desèze, counsel for Louis XVI.; conducts his defence, 987
Desmoulins, Camille, calls the Parisian mob to arms, 1789, 962
Despard, colonel E. M., execution of, and accomplices, for treason against the king, Feb. 21, 1803, 1043
Desprez, his account of the destruction of the French army, 1812, 1088
D'Estaing, admiral of the French fleet; his campaign of 1778, 886
Detroit captured by the Americans, 1812, 1097
Dettingen, battle of, June 27, 1743, 797; note on, 800
Deuxponts, count de, present at Cornwallis's surrender, 1781, 897
Devonshire, Georgiana, duchess of, her interest in Fox's election, 954
Devonshire, agriculture in; Dartmoor, 917
De Winter, Dutch admiral; defeated and taken prisoner at the battle off Camperdown, Oct. 11, 1797, 1019
De Witt, John, concludes the Triple Alliance with Temple in 1668, 553; chief administrator of Holland on the French invasion in 1672, 556; he and his brother murdered by the mob, ib.
D'Harrach, count, Austrian ambassador to Spain; anecdote of, 68.
Dhuleep Sing restored to power by the British, 1280
Dickens, Charles, voluminousness and character of his writings, 1255–8
Dickinson, John, opposes the Revenue act, 861
Dickson, sergeant, his capture of Manchester, 1745, 808.
Dieppe bombarded, 1694, 659
Dillon, panic of his troops, 977
Dinners, style of, early part of the 18th century, 745
Diocletian, persecution of Christians in Britain by, 16
Dion Cassius, relation of the discovery of Britain being an island, 11
Disraeli, Benjamin, his acrimonious remarks on sir R. Peel, 1270–1274, 1277
Disruption, the, in the Scotch Church, 1843, 1265
Dissection of murderers, law passed for the, 1752, 823; subsequently repealed, 823
Dissenters, the sacramental test remains in force against, 1689, 624; Toleration act for, passed, ib.; societies for the reformation of manners encouraged by the, after the revolution, 670; feud between the Church and, 1702, 690; Defoe's pamphlet on "The shortest way with the," ib.; they join the whig political party, 705; riots against, 1715, 761; toleration measures for the relief of, proposed, 1718, 771; they design a project for obtaining the repeal of the Corporation and Test acts; Walpole by a manœuvre makes the attempt futile; they obtain partial relief occasionally from the Indemnity act; they obtain the repeal they sought for, 1828, 781; they agitate for the repeal of the Test act, 1790, 968; clamor raised against the, 970; the Birmingham riots chiefly directed against the, ib.; bill for regulating the marriage of, 1836, 1221
Doddington, G. B., his share in the quarrel between the Prince of Wales and George II., 1736, 788; treasurer of the navy; resigned, 723; promises of offices from the Prince of Wales, ib.; intrigues with Bute against Pitt and his ministry, 841; rejoices at Pitt's fall, 844
Doehla, J. C., his account of the surrender of the American army, 1781, 89
Dolben, M. P. for Liskeard, complains of the dangerous nature of Sacheverel's sermons, 1710, 719
Domesday Book of 1085, account of, 62; classes of the people shown by, ib.; industry of the country, tenure of lands, and extent of forests, shown by, ib.; the New Forest, 63; gardens and vineyards shown to exist by, ib.; mills, mines, salt-works, and fisheries noticed by, ib.; condition of the people in cities and burghs shown by, ib., 64; number of manors held by Normans in, ib.; Norman castles enumerated by, ib.; number of churches noticed by, ib.
Domestic architecture of the fifteenth century, 184; consumption of timber in, ib.
Dominica captured by the English, 1761, 843; by the French, 1778, 886; restored to the English, 1782, 907
Donawert. See Schellenberg.
Donington Castle built by Wilkins, 1143
Donoopew captured by sir A. Campbell, 1825, 1171
Doric buildings, 1143
Dorset, Lionel Cranfield, earl of; Lord Chamberlain, 622; implicated in the Preston plot of 1691, 644
Dorsetshire, agricultural improvements in; land enclosed; wretched state of its peasantry, 917; and agricultural laborers, 1230
D'Orvilliers, count; commands the French fleet; engages the English off Ushant, 1778, 886
Dost Mahomed Khan, the usurping ruler of Afghanistan, 1248; estranges himself from the British government, who declare war against him, ib.; and drive him from the kingdom; gains a battle over British troops; surrenders himself prisoner to the British, 1249; released and returned to his sovereignty, 1252
Douay, surrender of, to the allies, 1710, 723
Douglas exposes the perils of sending a Scotch colony to Darien, 674
Dover, Roman lighthouse at, 7
Dover Castle, ancient chapel in, doubtful statement of its having been built by King Lucius, 16; taken by the Normans, 56
Downie, captain, his gallantry at Plattsburg, 1814, 1100
Downing College, Cambridge, built by Wilkins, 1143
Drake, sir Francis, naval successes of, in 1585, 350; successful expedition of, to Cadiz, to foil the purposed invasion by Spain, 369; Plymouth supplied with water by, ib.; early exploits of, 371; sails with the fleet from Plymouth on July 19, to meet the Armada, 373; captures a valuable galleon, ib.; attacks the Spanish fleet with fire-ships in Calais roads, 374; pursues the scattered ships after the fight off Gravelines, 375; his dispatch to Walsingham, ib.; assists in the destruction of the Armada in action and in its flight, ib.; with sir John Norris, heads an expedition to seat don Antonio on the throne of Portugal, 376; takes Corunna, fails at Lisbon, but takes and burns Vigo, ib.; with sir John Hawkins, sails in 1595 to attack the Spaniards in South America, but fails, and dies, 384
Drake, the English minister at Bavaria; intrigues with France, 1047
Drama, state of, in the time of Elizabeth, 381; made an instrument of, for attacking the Puritans, ib.; the early Elizabethan, 394; Marlowe, Peele, Greene, &c., ib.; characteristics of Shakspere, ib.; Prynne's "Histrio-Mastix," a violent attack on Stage Plays, 427; support given to, by the four Inns of Court, 428; character of the English drama, temp. Charles I., ib.; deteriorated in morals from that of Elizabeth, ib.; the playhouses shut up at the commencement of the Civil War in 1642, by the influence of the Puritans, 451; degraded condition of, during the time of Charles II., 549; licentiousness of, end of 17th century; an order issued in 1697 to suppress it, 670; stage estimate of the female character in the beginning of the 18th century, 743; Steele's relish for the drama, ib.; he notices several plays., ib.; popularity of puppet shows and Italian operas, 744; the stage becomes political, 790; the act for licensing plays, by which the Lord Chamberlain's interference with theatrical representations was legalized, ib.; improved moral state of the theatre, 1774, 793; public taste directed by Garrick, ib.; Garrick's acting, ib.
Drapier. See Swift.
Dresden, peace of, Dec. 25, 1785, 800; taken by Frederick, 1756; he spares the art specimens, 831; battles of, Aug. 24, 25, and 27, 1813, 1090
Dress. See Costume.
Drinking in the first half of the 18th century, 745
Drouet aids the French royal family in attempting to escape from France, 1791, 972
Druidicial sacrifices, 6; punishment of offenders, ib.
Druidism, Cæsar's statement that it was originated in Britain, 4; the system of, as described by Cæsar, ib.
Drummond, captain, his supposed murder, 1705, 707
Drummond, Peel's private secretary; shot by mistake instead of sir R. Peel
Drummond, Andrew, a London banker; suspected of favoring the Pretender; examined by government; found innocent; confidence in him restored; becomes the royal banker, 811
Drummond, George, urges a vigorous resistance to the Pretender, 1745, 803
Drummond, James, joins the Pretender's son; is by him created duke of Perth, 1745, 803; has differences with Lord Murray, 807; escapes from Scotland, 1746; death of, 811; skirmishes with the country people on the retreat, 812; unwillingness to forsake his men, ib.
Drummond, lord John, fails in seizing Edinburgh castle, 1715, 762; guards the passage of the Spey; falls back on Cumberland's approach, 1746, 815
Drummond, William, viscount Strathallan, commands the Stuart force at Perth, 808; created viscount, 1711; taken prisoner at Sheriffmuir, 1715, 811; killed at Culloden, April 16, 1746, 812; commands the Highlanders at Sheriffmuir, 813
Drumossie. See Culloden.
Dryden, John, produces his "Absalom and Architophel," preparatory to the indictment of Shaftesbury for high treason, 579; and his poem of "The Medal," after the bill had been thrown out by the grand jury, ib.; publishes his "Hind and Panther," in 1687, 591; bust of, by Scheemakers, Westminster Abbey, 756
Dubois-Crancé, supersedes Kellermann in his command, 998
Du Chaila, persecutor of the Cevennes Protestants, 691
Duckworth, sir J. T.; vice-admiral of the white; knight of the Bath, 1063; failure of his expedition to the Dardanelles, ib.
Ducos, a member of the French Directory, 1031; consul, 1799, ib.
Dudley, lord, introduces the smelting of iron with coal, 605
Dudley and Ward, viscount, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in the Canning ministry, 1167; one of the Wellington ministry, 1828, 1173; resigns, being succeeded in his secretaryship by the earl of Aberdeen, 1176; his speech on the Reform bill, 1831, 1192
Duelling prevalence of, first half of 18th century, 745
Dugommier replaces Carteaux in the command of the army before Toulon, 1793, 999
Dulwich gallery of pictures, 1146
Dumont, Anthony, his part in Grandval's plot against William III., 1692, 652
Dumont; his remarks on the Declaration of the Rights of Man, and the abolition of feudal rights, 964; on Mirabeau, 969; on the French constitution of 1791, 973; his visit to England, 1791–1792, 975; remarks on the September massacres, 1792, 981
Dumouriez, C. F.; minister of foreign affairs, 1792, 977; advocates war against Austria; plans the campaign, ib.; advises the dismissal of Roland,

978; opposes the duke of Brunswick, 982; concludes a secret agreement with him, ib.; the Austrians raise the siege of Lille on his approach; he gains the battle of Jemappes, Nov. 6, ib.; the Austrians retreat before him; enters Antwerp, Nov. 30, 983, 993; marches into Holland; hatred of, by the Jacobins; takes Breda, Klundert, Gertruydenberg; is defeated at Neerwinden, Mar. 18, 1793, ib.; deserts the Convention; makes overtures to join the prince of Coburg in re-establishing the constitutional monarchy; his army forsakes him; lives an exile in England till 1823, 994
Duncan, Adam, admiral; deserted by several of his ships in the blockade of the Texel, 1016; stratagems for deceiving the Dutch, 1019; sights the enemy on Oct. 11. 1797, and gives them a signal defeat in the battle of Camperdown, ib.
Duncan, Rev. H., established a savings bank at Ruthwell, 1810, 1120
Duncannon, viscount, helps to prepare the Reform bill, 1188; lord privy seal; first commissioner of the land revenue, 1224
Duncanson, major, his share in the Glencoe massacres, 647
Duncombe, Thomas, his motion for hearing the petitioners on presenting the People's Charter rejected, 1262
Dundas. See Melville, lord.
Dundas, sir David, commands the allied troops at Toulon, 1793, 999; second in command of the troops in Holland, 1007; takes part in the British expedition to Holland, 1799, 1031; commander-in-chief, Mar. 18, 1809, 1074; discourages the expedition to Walcheren, ib.
Dundee, viscount, wishes to make a compromise with William III., 629; the king refuses to do so, and upon the Convention giving an order to arrest Dundee, he escapes, and raises the clans, 630; meeting general Mackay, at the pass of Killiecrankie, he there defeats him, 631; but falls in the hour of victory, July 27, 1689, and with him the cause of James II., ib.
Dundonald, earl of, lord Cochrane; his account of the state of the navy, 1793, 1004; his opinion of Nelson, 1022; M. P. for Westminster, 1809; his enterprise in the Aix roads, April 11, 1072
Dunkirk taken by the French under Turenne, and the English under Lockhart, in 1658, and delivered to the English, 525; sold by Charles II., to the French in 1662, 541; failure of the English to take, 1793, 997
Dunning holds aloof in the proceedings against Wilkes, 1769, 856; his motion on the influence of the crown, 890; pension granted to, 901
Dunstan, St., early life and rise of, 40; becomes the chief adviser of Edred, 41; enforces celibacy on the clergy, and renders the national church more Romish, ib.; outrage of, at the coronation feast of Edwy, 42; banishment of, miracles attributed to, ib.; chief minister during the reign of Edgar, ib.; state of the church at the time of, 43 et seq.; alterations effected in, by, ib.; reforms effected by, 44; despotic but vigorous government of, 45; arbitrary power of, ib.; disputation with bishop Beornhelm at Calne, and asserted miracle, ib.; crowns and curses Ethelred, 46; dies in 988, 46
Dunwallo, king, formation of roads in Britain by, 5
Dupin signs the protest against the royal proceedings against the French press, 1830, 1182
Dupleix, Joseph; governor of Pondicherry, 826; aids the nizam of the Deccan, 827; he is compelled to give way before Clive, ib.
Dupont, a French general, defeated at Baylen by Castanos, 1069
Durand, col., commands the garrison at Carlisle Castle, 807
Durham Cathedral, foundation of, 76
Durham, low state of agriculture in, 1750–1800; famous for its breed of cattle, 919
Durham, earl of; lord privy seal, 1830, 1187; helps to prepare the Reform bill, 1188; hostile speeches of, against lord Brougham, 1834, 1213; appointed lord high commissioner for appeasing the Canadian grievances, 1233; his government and policy, ib.; lord Brougham's attack on his measures causes him to resign, ib.; dies broken-hearted; his report on the affairs of British North America, ib.
D'Usson, a French general; surrenders Galway, 1691, 614
Dutch, differences of the, with the Long Parliament, 503; war with England commenced, ib.; battles of Van Tromp and Ruyter with Blake, in 1652, ib.; Van Tromp again defeated in 1653, 507; Van Tromp defeated and killed, 513; war of, with Charles II. in 1665, 542; sea-fight off Lowestoffe, 544; De Ruyter's fight of four days against Monk, 545; their coasts ravaged, 546; their fleet enters the Medway, burns the ships there, and blockades London, in June, 1667, 550; defeated in Southwold bay by the duke of York, 556
Dwyer reveals the Cato-street conspiracy to the home office, 1149
Dyer, John, his poem of the "Fleece" referred to, giving an account of a weaver's labors, 602; other quotations from, 924

EARTHQUAKE at Lisbon, 1755, Nov. 28, 829
Earthenware; the Staffordshire potteries the chief seat of the trade, 606; state of the trade at the beginning of the 18th century, 1774, and 1857, 927; chiefly promoted by Wedgwood and Cooksworthy, ib.
East India Company, charters granted for the incorporation of, 408; first English factory at Surat, founded in 1612, ib.; a new company is established, and called "The English Company," 1698, 660; the two are amalgamated four years afterwards, ib.; seizes a vessel belonging to the Darien (African and Indian) Company, 707; retrospect of their affairs in India, 1745, 826; the French company becomes their rival, and attack Madras, 1746, ib.; and nearly undermine the English power; Clive enters the army, 827; organizes an attack upon Arcot, which he takes; he is besieged by rajah Sahib, ib.; who relinquishes the siege, ib.; Clive takes Trichinopoly in conjunction with major Lawrence; hostilities suspended, ib.; Pitt institutes an inquiry into their affairs, 854; their pecuniary affairs in disorder; they petition parliament for a loan of a million and a half; a committee appointed to inquire into their affairs, ib.; the directors quarrel; things go to ruin; matters mended by Clive's judicious measures, ib.; their rotten financial position, 869; the Regulation Act; Warren Hastings, first governor-general; allowed to export teas free of duty to the American colonies, ib.; Clavering, Monsell and Francis appointed members of the council, 1774, 948; Fox proposes that the authority of, be transferred to a board of commissioners, 951; they refuse to bear the expenses of sending troops to India; they are compelled to do so by the passing of Pitt's Declaratory bill, 990; inquiry made into their affairs by the House of Commons, 1813; which results in several important measures, 1168; renewal of their charter for twenty years, 1833; important alterations in the charter provisions; ceases to be a commercial company, 1854, 1208; its trade with China abolished; effects of the abolition, 1246
East India House designed by Holland, 1143
East Indies, Thomas Coryat's account of the country, 408; embassy of sir Thomas Roe to Agra, 1615-19, ib.; his account of the Mogul rulers of Hindostan, ib.; contrasted with the present state, 409
Eastlake, sir C., sketching Napoleon, 1815, 1108
Ebrington, M. P. for Devonshire, moves that the principles of the rejected Reform bill be not given up, 1193; moves that the king be implored to call a reform ministry, 1197
Ecclesiastical power, rapid growth of, in England, from the Conquest to the time of Stephen, 75; numerous religious foundations established, 76; Cistercian abbeys erected, ib.; churches and cathedrals, ib.; such foundations a substitute for personal service in the crusades, and a commutation for crimes, ib.
Eckmuhl, battle of, April 22, 1809, 1073
Economical Reform bill brought forward by Burke, 1780; his speech, 889; other motions proposed, ib.; practical measures of Burke's bill rejected, 890; the bill is again introduced, 1782, 901; passed, ib.
Eddystone lighthouses, their fates and constructors, 604
Eden, secretary for Ireland; moves for the repeal of the act asserting the independence of Ireland, 1782, 904; his account of the anarchy in France, 1789, 964
Edgar, accession of in 760, 43; Dunstan the chief minister during the reign of, ib.; peaceful reign of, 44; licentiousness of, and story of Elfrida, ib.; rowed down the Dee by kings, ib.; arbitrary power of, 45; death of, in 975, 45
Edgar Atheling chosen king by the Londoners, 56; submits to William the Conqueror, and is treated with kindness, 56; flies to Scotland, 58; invades England, with Sweyn, ib., 59; becomes a pensioner of William, 61; again flies to Scotland, 67
Edgehill, battle of, on Oct. 23, 1642, 455
Edgeworth, abbé, attends Louis XVI. at his execution, 248
Edgeworth, Miss, her delineations of the Irish, 1140
Edinburgh, Charles Edward's entry into, 1745, 801
Edinburgh Castle held by the duke of Gordon for James II., 1689, 620; he surrenders it, 631
Edinburgh Review started, 1802; its services to literature, 1140
Edmund, St., king of East Anglia, defeated and slain by the Danes in 870, 30; buried at St. Edmund's Bury, ib.
Edmund the Etheling, accession of, in 940, 40; murdered, ib.
Edmund Ironside, accession of, in 1016, 48; successes of, against Canute, ib.; divides the kingdom with Canute, and dies in 1016, ib.
Edred, accession of, in 940, 41; revolt in Northumbria subdued by, ib.; death of, in 956, ib.
Edric, treachery of, to Ethelred and Edmund Ironside, 47, 48
Education, low state of, among the people in the beginning of the eighteenth century, 739; and also among ladies in higher grades of society, 742; Swift's remarks upon ladies' education, 743; Sunday-schools originated by Raikes, 947; inquiry into the state of, moved for by Henry Brougham, 1816, 1120; the Education Commission, ib.; it merges into the Charity Commission; extent of instruction in 1816, ib.; schoolmaster abroad, 1828, 1174; benefits derived from the endowed grammar schools, ib.; schools and scholars, 1818 and 1833; Sunday-schools and free schools, ib.; diffusion of knowledge by the establishment of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, a cheap and sound literature, the London Mechanics' Institution and others similar to it, the London University and King's College, ib.; increased popular desire for sound literature as shown by the circulation of the "Penny Magazine," 1202; lord Brougham's education resolutions, 1217; Walker's school, in the Devil's acre, the origin of the London ragged-schools; grants in aid of, 1834–1837, 1230; the board of education constituted, 1839; general state of, in 1839, ib.; increase of schools and scholars, 1831–1841, 1231; neglect of, in the Boughton district, 1236; sir J. Graham compelled to withdraw his education clauses in the Bill for regulating labor in factories, 1269; government grant to Maynooth college; establishment of the three Irish secular colleges of Cork, Galway, and Belfast, 1274
Edward succeeds his father Alfred in 901, 38; insurrection of Ethelwold against, ib.; repels the Northmen and the Welsh, and subdues East Anglia, ib.; death of, in 924, ib.
Edward the Martyr, accession of, in 975, 45; assassination of, in 978, 45, 46
Edward the Confessor, son of Ethelred, brought up in Normandy, 48, 49; brought over to England by Hardicanute, ib.; succeeds Hardicanute in 1042, 50; marries earl Godwin's daughter and neglects her, ib.; abolishes the Dane-geit, ib.; introduces Norman adherents and customs, 51; is opposed by earl Godwin in his wish to punish summarily the rioters against earl Eustace of Boulogne, ib.; banishes Harold and Godwin, ib.; imprisons his wife, ib.; triumph of the Norman party, ib.; is forced to restore Godwin and Harold, 52; death of, in 1066, 54
Edward I., born in 1239, 108; swears to the "Provisions of Oxford" in 1258, 111; refuses to be absolved by the pope from observing his oath, ib.; commands his father's forces in the civil war against the barons, 111; is defeated at the battle of Lewes, 112; wins the battle of Evesham, on Aug. 4, 1265, ib.; storm on the day of, 113; crusade undertaken by, in 1269, ib.; attempted to be assassinated at Jaffa, 114; his wife Eleanor of Castile sucks the poison from the wound, ib.; concludes a truce with the sultan, and returns to Europe in 1272, where he learns that his father is dead, ib.; succeeds "by the unanimous assent of the nobles and great men," and is crowned, Aug. 19, 1274, ib.; festivities at the coronation, ib.; attacks Llewellyn prince of Wales, who is forced to submit to do homage, ib.; various useful statutes passed in the first parliament of, 115; persecution and banishment of the Jews, ib.; visits king Philip of France, at Amiens, ib.; first statute of mortmain, ib.; insurrection of the Welsh, 116; Llewellyn is slain, and his brother executed, ib.; final subjection of the Welsh, and birth of prince Edward at Cærnarvon, who is created prince of Wales in 1284, ib.; statute passed by, for the settlement of Wales, ib.; condition and manners of the people in the time of, 117 et seq.; negotiates a marriage for his son with the heiress of the crown of Scotland, but she dies, and the succession is disputed, 122; commences his war against the independence of Scotland, ib.; Statute of Confirmation of the Charters, giving the sole right of raising supplies to the people, on Oct. 10, 1297, 123; is appointed umpire of the claimants to the Scottish crown, 124; demands an acknowledgment of his superiority as liege lord, ib.; it is not given by the states, but assented to by Bruce and Balliol, and the crown is awarded to Balliol, who does homage, ib.; subdues an insurrection in Wales, ib.; invades Scotland, and compels Balliol to resign his crown to him, 125; receives the homage of the bishops and peers of Scotland, ib.; revolt of Wallace against, ib.; defeats the Scots at Falkirk, ib.; the pope demands that the dispute should be left to his decision, and the claim is indignantly rejected by the parliament of Lincoln, 126; constitution of the parliament of Lincoln, ib.; again invades Scotland, and concludes a treaty excluding Wallace, ib.; besieges and takes Stirling, ib.; causes Wallace and Fraser to be executed, 127; Robert Bruce the younger heads another revolt in 1305, ib.; assembles an army to attack Bruce, but dies before he reaches Scotland, on July 7, 1307, 127
Edward II. succeeds his father in 1307, 127; conduct of, in his youth, ib.; is crowned Feb. 24, 1308, 128; recalls Gaveston, whom his father had banished, and marries Isabella of France, ib.; appoints Gaveston governor of Ireland, ib.; discontent occasioned by the favor shown to Gaveston, ib.; Gaveston is exiled, and again recalled, ib.; is taken prisoner and hung in 1312, ib.; successes of Robert Bruce against, ib.; reconciles himself to the barons and marches into Scotland, 129; battle of Bannockburn on June 24, 1314, ib.; famine in England, ib.; rise of the Despencers and wealth of, ib.; insurrection of the barons, by whom the Despensers are banished, ib.; the sentence against the Despensers annulled by a parliament at York, ib.; overcomes the barons, and causes the earl of Lancaster to be executed, 131; invades Scotland, suffers from want of provisions, is obliged to retreat, ib.; concludes a truce with Bruce, ib.; order of Knights Templars suppressed in England in 1308, ib.; the queen goes to France to conclude a treaty with Philip in 1325, ib.; Roger Mortimer joins the queen at Paris, and returns with her and Prince Edward in arms against the king in 1326, 132; Edward is deposed and imprisoned and the Despensers are hung, ib.; is murdered at Berkeley Castle in 1327, ib.; wretched state of England during the reign of, 133
Edward III., son of Edward II., is invested with the foreign possessions in 1325, and does homage to the king of France, 131; joins his mother and Roger Mortimer in an insurrection against his father, 132; is declared guardian of the kingdom, ib.; his father is deposed, and he is crowned, Jan. 29, 1327, ib.; first campaign of, against the Scots, 133; concludes a peace, recognizing the independence of Scotland in 1328, ib.; marries Philippa of Hainault, ib.; seizure and execution of Mortimer, 133; imprisonment of Isabella, ib.; transition state of feudality in the time of, 134; growth of independence among the people, and the effect of the writings of Wycliffe and Chaucer upon, ib.; establishment of the English language, ib.; supports Edward Balliol's claim to the Scottish crown, and wins the battle of Halidon Hill, 135; claims of, to the crown of France, stated, ib.; naval victory of Sluys gained by, ib.; comparison of the peoples of England, France, and Flanders, in the time of, ib.; supports James Artevelde in his revolt against the count of Flanders, 136; relieves Jane de Montfort, besieged in Hennebon by Philip of France, 136; invades France with an army in 1346, ib.; the strength of his army consisted in the superiority of the English yeomen over the feudal nobles, ib.; statute providing that England should not be subject to France in case of his acquiring that kingdom, 136; early successes in the invasion, ib.; march to and passage of the Somme, 137; battle of Cressy, on Aug. 26, 1346, ib.; Cressy, the victory of the yeomen, 138; battle of Neville's Cross, and capture of David Bruce by Queen Philippa, ib.; siege of Calais, ib.; surrender of and pardon of the six burgesses at the intercession of the queen, 139; Edward founds an English colony at Calais, ib.; institution of the Order of the Garter in 1349, ib.; decoration and enlargement by, of his palaces of Westminster and Windsor, 140; great pestilence of the Black Plague, in 1349, ib.; mortality and misery occasioned by, ib.; Statute of Laborers passed to mitigate the effects of, ib.; injustice and inefficiency of the statute, 141; he repels an invasion of the Scots, and ravages the Lothians, ib.; the battle of Poitiers won by the Black Prince on Sept. 19, 1356, and John, king of France, taken prisoner, ib.; chivalrous reception of John in London, 142; miseries occasioned in France by the invasion, and rise of the Jacquerie, ib.; renewed invasion of France in 1359, ib.; peace of Bretigny concluded, 143; contrast of the state of the people of England and France, ib.; stipulations in favor of freedom by the Commons of England, ib.; statutes passed for the distinction of ranks, ib.; accession of Charles V. in France, and resistance offered by, 144; war with France renewed, ib.; resumes the title of King of France, 145; the French recover the conquests of Edward, ib.; his queen Philippa dies in 1369, and his son Edward dies in 1376, ib.; Richard is presented to Parliament as his successor, ib.; rising influence of the Duke of Lancaster, and dotage of the king, ib.; dies on June 21, 1377, 145

Edward the Black Prince accompanies his father in the invasion of France in 1346, 136; conduct of, at the battle of Cressy, 138; ravages Gascony and Auvergne in 1355 and 1356, 141; cruelties of ancient war as compared with modern, ib.; wins the battle of Poitiers on Sept. 19, 1356; and takes prisoner John, king of France, 142; chivalrous treatment of his captive, ib.; appointed prince of Aquitaine, 144; supports the cause of Peter the Cruel in Spain, ib.; wins the battle of Najara in 1367, ib.; captures and releases Bertrand du Guesclin, ib.; summoned by Charles V. to answer complaints of misgovernment, refuses, and war recommences, 145; takes Limoges, concludes a truce, and returns to England, ib.; dies in 1376, ib.

Edward IV. (earl of March) escapes with Warwick to Calais, after being declared traitors by the parliament at Coventry, 191; is present at the battle of Northampton, 192; succeeds his father as duke of York, on his defeat and death at Wakefield, Dec. 31, 1460, ib.; enters London and is proclaimed as king on March 4, 1461, ib.; marches with Warwick to the North and wins the battle of Towton, 193; crowned June 29, 1461, 194; causes sir Baldwin Fulford to be executed, ib.; other Lancastrians attainted in parliament, 194; renewed attempts to restore Henry in 1462 and 1464, ib.; suppressed by the battle of Hexham, 195; Somerset beheaded, ib.; concludes a truce with Scotland, ib.; extravagance of, and debasement of the coin by, ib.; injury to the industry of the country, ib.; arts of, to obtain popularity, ib.; marriage of, to Elizabeth Woodville, ib.; marries his sister to the heir of the duke of Burgundy, ib.; insurrection in Yorkshire against an impost, ib.; Clarence and Warwick take him prisoner, ib.; he escapes, defeats them at Stamford, and they fly to France, ib.; queen Margaret, with Warwick and Clarence, invade England, he is deserted, and Henry is restored, 196; he flies to Holland, 197; obtains some help from the Duke of Burgundy, ib.; returns to England, and lands at Ravenspur, ib.; is reconciled to Clarence, 198; wins the battle of Barnet, ib.; defeats queen Margaret at Tewkesbury, on May 4, 1471, 199; insurrection of Falconbridge, suppressed by Richard, duke of Gloucester, ib.; patronage of literature and printing by, 200; invades France, is cajoled by Lewis XI., and concludes the treaty of Picquiny, 201; opposes the marriage of Clarence with the heiress of Burgundy, ib.; accuses Clarence of treason, who is condemned, and dies in the Tower, ib.; war with Scotland in 1480, and the town of Berwick taken from the Scotch, 202; death of, on April 9, 1483, ib.

Edward V., accession of, April 9, 1483, 202; provision for the education of, ib.; dissensions in the council of, ib.; earl Rivers and others of his council arrested, ib.; his mother and brother take sanctuary in Westminster, 203; Gloucester appointed protector, ib.; time of coronation appointed, ib.; the duke of York removed to the Tower, 205; declared illegitimate by parliament, ib.; death of, with his brother, 206; evidence as to the murder of, considered, 207

Edward VI., born Oct. 12, 1537, 272; succeeds his father, Jan. 28, 1547, 301; the duke of Somerset chosen protector, ib.; influence of the young king's character, and journal of, ib.; progress of the Reformation under, 303; repeal of Henry VIII.'s various statutes of treason, ib.; dissatisfaction of, with the guardianship of Somerset, 306; insurrection in Cornwall and Devonshire against the innovations on the old religion, 307; siege of Exeter by the insurgents, ib.; defeat of the insurgents at Cliff Heath, and numerous executions, 308; John Ket's Norfolk rebellion against inclosures, ib.; the rebels encamp on Mousehold heath, ib.; their regular organization, ib.; defeat a royal army in Norwich, ib.; the earl of Warwick defeats the rebels, on Aug. 27, 1549, 309; Ket and his brother hung, ib.; notice in Edward's Journal of the confederacy of nobles against Somerset, 310; who removes him to Windsor Castle, 311; Somerset is arrested and sent to the Tower, ib.; the protectorship revoked, ib.; new laws against the breaking of inclosures, 312; general pardon granted, except to Anabaptists, ib.; persecution of that sect, and burning of Joan Bocher, ib.; aversion of Edward to signing the warrant for her execution, ib.; Articles of Belief issued by, 313; popish bishops deprived of their sees, ib.; remonstrates with the princess Mary against her use of the mass, ib.; Somerset restored to a place in the council, ib.; Somerset again arrested, convicted of felony, and executed in Jan. 1551, 314; peace with France and restoration of Boulogne, 315; Northumberland the actual governor, ib.; becomes ill, ib.; makes a will altering the succession in favor of lady Jane Grey, ib.; dies on July 6, 1553, ib.; character of, ib.; educational institutions of, ib.; table of the female heirs to the crown named in the will of Henry VIII. and the devise of Edward VI., ib.

Edwin, king of Northumbria, receives and is converted to Christianity by Paulinus, 23

Edwy, accession of, in 956, 41; outrage of Dunstan during the coronation feast of, 42; marriage of, with Elgiva, ib.; revolt of Odo, and appointment of Edgar as joint king, ib.; is separated from Elgiva, ib.; death of, in 960, ib.

Egalité. See Orleans, duc d'.

Egbert, early years of, at the court of Charlemagne, 24; chosen king of Wessex in 800, 25; defeats Beornwulf, of Mercia, in 823, at Ellendune, and consolidates England; dies, 837, ib.

Egerton, colonel, unsuccessful results of his Mahratta expedition, 949

Egerton, lord F., urges the importance of reducing the paper duty, 1836, 1221

Egremont, lord, secretary of state, 1761–3, 844, 865; again secretary of state, 1763, 846; dies of apoplexy, 847

Egyptians or gipsies, statute of Elizabeth against, 386

Ehrenbreitstein capitulates to the French, Jan. 1799, 1030

El Arish seized by Jezzar, 1799, 1029; recovered by the Allies, 1038

Elchingen, battle of, 1805, 1050

Eldon, John Scott, lord, his maiden speech on Fox's India bill, 1783, 952; attorney-general; draws up the Traitorous Correspondence bill, 992; his prosecution speech against Hardy, 1003; chancellor, 1801–1806, 1036, 1325; his opinion of the Volunteers, 1045; against an administration on a broad basis, 1046; his political opinions, 1083; opposes any repeal of the laws, 1117; chancellor, 1807–1827, 1062, ib.; his opinion of the criminal code, 1117; advocates the abolition of the appeal of murder, 1131; considers the Manchester reform men as guilty of treason, 1133; promotes the passing of the six acts, 1819, ib.; recognizes Caroline as queen of England, 1151; opposes any measures unfavorable to the corn laws, 1164; his test of official fitness; anecdote of, at the duke of York's funeral, 1827, ib.; resigns his chancellorship on the accession of the Canning ministry, 1827, 1165; considers himself ill-used on being omitted from the Wellington ministry, 1173; objects to the bill for the repeal of the Corporation and Test acts, 1175; opposes the relief of Roman Catholics, 1177; endeavors to persuade the king to refuse his assent to the measure, 1178; his fears for the destruction of the aristocracy by the Reform bill, 1189; his speech against reform, 1831, 1192; against the repeal of the corn laws, 1833, 1202; laments his inability to obtain the rejection of the Municipal Reform bill, 1219

Elections and election scenes, 705, 954, 1129, 1176

Elgin marbles purchased by government, 1816, 1145

Elgiva, queen of Edwy, persecution of, by Dunstan and Odo, 41

Elie, his share in the attack on the Bastile, 1789, 963

Eliot, sir John, committed to the Tower for his speech in the House of Commons on the impeachment of the duke of Buckingham, 421; refuses to make any submission, and is released, ib.; assists in the debate on the Petition of Rights in 1628, 423; prepares protestations against popery and arbitrary taxation, 425; the Speaker held in the chair while they are voted, ib.; is sent to the Tower, after the parliament had been dissolved in 1629, ib.; refuses to acknowledge the jurisdiction of the King's Bench in matters committed in the House of Commons, 427; is recommitted to the Tower in March, 1629, and dies on November 27, 1632, ib.; his employments while imprisoned, ib.; the judgment against him reversed after the Restoration, ib.

Elizabeth, wife of Edward IV., takes sanctuary in Westminster with her second son the duke of York, 203; the duke of York taken from under her care to join his brother in the Tower, 204; submits to Richard and leaves the sanctuary, 210; alleged harsh treatment of, by Henry VII. and confinement in the nunnery of Bermondsey, 213; dies in 1492, 219

Elizabeth, queen, born Sept. 7, 1533, 254; interview of, with Edward after Henry's death, 301; is courted by Lord Thomas Seymour, who is executed for treason, 305; joins Mary in her progress to London, 318; is present at the coronation of Mary, 319; is sent for from Ashbridge to court by Mary, 323; accused of a conspiracy with Courtenay, earl of Devonshire, and committed to the Tower, ib.; letter of, to Mary, ib.; is removed to Woodstock, 324; suspected of a knowledge of the Dudley conspiracy, in 1556, 332; letter of, to Mary, ib.; declines a marriage with the duke of Savoy, 333; the Spanish ambassador's account of her character, 334; succeeds to the crown on Nov. 17, 1558, 335; refuses to attend mass on Christmas Day, ib.; the parliament press her to marry, and she replies, ib.; coronation and popularity of, 336; Mary's statutes in favor of popery repealed, 337; moderation of her proceedings, ib.; peace concluded with France, ib.; becomes the acknowledged head of the reformed religion, 338; lends assistance secretly to the Reformers of Scotland, 339; sends an army to the assistance of the Lords of the Congregation in Scotland, ib.; concludes a peace with Scotland, in which she provides for the safety of the Reformers, ib.; sends an ambassador to condole with Mary on the death of Francis II., 340; policy of, towards Mary, ib.; refuses her a safe-conduct for her return from France to Scotland, 341; increased public spirit of the people under, 342; restores the coin to its standard purity, ib.; processions of, 343; sends aid to the French Protestants, in 1563, ib.; act against papists passed, requiring the oath of supremacy to be taken, ib.; Edmund and Arthur Pole convicted of conspiracy, and imprisoned for life, ib.; Act against "fond and fantastical prophecies," ib.; continued refusal of, to declare Mary of Scotland her successor, 344; recommends Lord Robert Dudley to Queen Mary as a husband, ib.; refuses to consent to her marriage with Darnley, ib.; secretly aids Murray and the reforming nobles in their revolt against Mary, 345; becomes godmother to the infant James of Scotland, 347; interferes to procure an impartial trial of Bothwell, 348; remonstrates with the Scottish nobles against the imprisonment of Mary, 349; and more strongly against her extorted abdication, ib.; embarrassment of the government of, on Mary's taking refuge in England, 351; question as to the justice of detaining Mary as a prisoner, ib.; refuses to see Mary during the conference appointed to hear the charges against her, 352; anxiety of, for the safe custody of Mary, ib.; commits the duke of Norfolk to the Tower for contracting to marry the Queen of Scots, 353; insurrection in the North in favor of the Roman Catholic religion, ib.; touching story of lady Catherine Grey, ib.; incorrectness of the statement that she died in the Tower, ib.; intrigues of Philip of Spain, and the Roman Catholics against, 354; the earls of Westmoreland and Northumberland head a Roman Catholic insurrection in the north, 355; suppressed by the earl of Sussex, ib.; papal bull of excommunication against her, ib.; new statute against papists, ib.; she is urged to proceed criminally against Mary, ib.; trial of the duke of Norfolk on the discovery of a fresh intrigue, 356; reluctance of Elizabeth to order his execution, 357; massacre of St. Bartholomew's, ib.; conduct of Elizabeth on receiving the news, ib.; insecurity felt by, in consequence of the continued intrigues in favor of Mary, 358; plots of the Jesuits in England against, ib.; Campion and others executed, ib.; increased severities against the papists, ib.; affords assistance to the Protestants in the Netherlands, 359; declines the sovereignty of them offered to her, ib.; represses the ambitious views of Leicester, ib.; naval successes of Drake, in 1585, 360; Walsingham's announcement of new conspiracies, ib.; conviction and execution of Parry, ib.; Babington's conspiracy, ib.; trial of the conspirators, 361; alleged participation of Mary in the plot, ib.; Mary is transferred to Fotheringay, ib.; letter of Elizabeth to James VI., ib.; association for her protection, 362; statute for the protection of the queen's person, ib.; issues a commission for the trial of Mary under this statute, ib.; judgment is pronounced against Mary, 364; parliament urges the execution of the sentence, and the queen's reply, ib.; continued hesitation of, ib.; signs the warrant for Mary's execution, ib.; interview of, with Davison, ib.; endeavors to exonerate herself from the charge of having caused Mary's death, 365; slight grounds for the justification, 366; examination of the charge, in Davison's statement, that she desired that Mary might be privately assassinated, ib.; threatened invasion of England by Spain, 369; suspicions of, that James of Scotland intended to aid Spain, 370; fresh preparations made by Philip, ib.; an army assembled at Tilbury, ib.; measures taken for the defence of the coast, 371; speech of, to the army at Tilbury, ib.; loyalty of the Roman Catholics, on the threatened invasion by Spain, 372; libels published abroad against the queen, ib.; the Armada is sent forth, ib.; its force, 373; the English fleet at Plymouth, and its force, ib.; superiority of the mariners, ib.; notice of the commanders, ib.; the fleet leaves Plymouth on July 19, 1588, to encounter the Armada, ib.; the successful fight up Channel, ib.; tactics of the English fleet, 374; several actions off the Isle of Wight, on July 25, ib.; the Armada attacked by English fire-ships in Calais-roads, ib.; the last great fight, on July 29, 375; flight of the scattered Armada to the north, ib.; destructive losses of the Armada in action and in its flight, ib.; triumphal procession of the queen to St. Paul's, 376; expedition sent to Portugal to assist Don Antonio, ib.; Vigo taken and burnt, ib.; energy of the people shown by their volunteering against Philip, by their discoveries, and in their literature, ib.; religious sects in the second half of her reign, 377; progress of the Nonconformists, ib.; efforts of archbishop Whitgift to repress puritanism, 378; statutes against non-conforming Protestants and popish recusants, in 1593, ib.; sends an expedition to aid Henry IV. and the Protestants of France, 382; indications of a contest with parliament for prerogative against privilege, ib.; contests between the Crown and Commons, 383; Morice sent to prison for a speech in the House of Commons, ib.; extenuations of Elizabeth's conduct, ib.; attempt of Philip to procure her to be poisoned, ib.; expeditions against the West Indies and against Cadiz, 384; statute passed for the relief of the poor, in 1597, 385; statute against vagabondage, ib.; statute for regulating wages, 386; statute against Egyptians, or gipsies, ib.; statutes against the increase of buildings in London, 387; death of Burleigh, 388; and of Philip, ib.; continued war with Spain, ib.; state of Ireland, ib.; Elizabeth quarrels with Essex, and appoints him lord lieutenant of Ireland, to suppress the rebellion of Tyrone, 389; he fails, and returns to England, ib.; interview of, with Essex, ib.; her exposition of her method of retaining the affection of the people, 390; commits Essex to "free custody," ib.; Essex attempts an insurrection, ib.; it fails, and he surrenders, 391; is tried with the earl of Southampton, ib.; and is executed, on Feb. 25, 1601, ib.; the Commons remonstrate against monopolies, 392; and she promises to abate them, ib.; she dies, March 24, 1603, 393; note on Essex's ring, ib.

Elizabeth, daughter of James I., married to the elector palatine in 1613, 412; her husband chosen king of Bohemia, on the Protestant interest, 415; the palatinate invaded by the Catholic powers, ib.; tardy and useless assistance afforded by James, ib.; the elector defeated at Prague, and expelled from the palatinate, 416

Elizabeth, princess, accompanies Louis in his flight from Paris, 1791, 972; guillotined, 1794, 1001

Elizabeth, czarina of Russia, joins the coalition against Prussia, 831; reigned, 1741–1762, 1310

Elkington, Joseph, discovers the system of under drainage, 918

Ellenborough, lord; lord chief justice, 1056; determines to preside in court, and to convict W. Hone, 1126; his harshness and persecution of the prisoner, who obtains a verdict of not guilty, ib.; presides over another trial with the same result, ib.; conduct after the trial; contemplates resigning his office, 1127; president of the Board of Control, 1215; governor-general of India, 1251; his proclamations to the people of India, 1252; makes war on the Mahrattas; recalled by the East India Company, 1268

Ellesmere, lord, denies that Wellington was surprised at Waterloo, 1104

Elliott, captain, superintendent at Canton; his proceedings; blockades Canton; his arrival at the Factory described, 1246; his futile attempts at negotiation, 1247; settles the difficulties, ib.

Elliot, general, governor of Gibraltar; his defence of the fort, 1782, 905

Elliott, Mrs., quotation from, on the execution of Louis XVI., 987; anecdote by, of the French feeling towards Fox and Pitt, 993

Elphinstone, major-general, appointed to command the British army in Cabul, 1250; his conference with Akbar Khan, 1251; died April 23, 1842, ib.

Emaun-Ghur, Napier's march to, and destruction of, 1267

Emigration, extent of, 1815-1852, 1234

Emmanuel College chapel, Cambridge, built by Wren, 754

Emmett, Robert, heads an insurrection in Dublin, July 23, 1803, 1044; trial and execution of, ib.

Empson, sir Richard and Edmund Dudley, ministers of Henry VII. in his extortions, 221; convicted, and executed for extortion, on the accession of Henry VIII., 227

Enghien, duc d', arrest and murder of, 21 Mar., 1804, 1047

Engraving, state of, temp. 1760-83, 933; Strange and Woollett, ib.; mezzotint engraving and engravers, 934; Boydell, his large business in engravings, ib.; extension of the public taste for, 1148; Sharp, and other line engravers, ib.; wood engraving revived by Bewick; his publications; lithography and its earliest cultivators, ib.

Enniskillen, the Irish Protestants take refuge in, 1689, 787; threatened siege of, 788

Episcopalian clergy, of Scotland, not well favored towards the Test Act, 788; hatred of the Scotch to the, ib.

Episcopalians, their strength in Scotland, 804

Erasmus's account of his pilgrimage to Walsingham and Canterbury, 223; remarks of, on the ill condition of the houses, and the inattention to diet in England, 224; his compliment to the spirit of the people, ib.

Ercole, Renaldo, duke of Modena, 1011; buys Bonaparte off his territories, ib.

Ernest Augustus of Hanover. See Cumberland.

Erskine. See Mar, earl of.

Erskine, Thomas, lord, defends lord George Gordon, 1781, 892; his maiden speech, 1783; advocates Fox's India bill, 952; defends Paine, 1792, 986; opposes the Traitorous Correspondence bill, 992; counsel for Thomas Hardy, 1001; his reply to the attorney-general's charge, 1003; defends Tooke and Thelwall, ib.; passage from his speech for Hardy, ib.; lord chancellor, 1806, 1056

Espremenil arrested and imprisoned for opposing the establishment of "La Cour Plenière," 960

Essayists; the "Tatler," commenced by Richard Steele, 1709, 737; its aim; it becomes the substitute of the old newspapers, ib.; influence and objects of the, 738; their endeavors in diffusing knowledge, 739; they direct the attention of the people to our old English ballads, and our standard poets, ib; and create a general taste for reading, 741; their description of the prude and the coquette, 744; of puppet shows and the masquerade, ib.; their reprobation of drinking in excess, 745; of giving luxurious dinners, and of duelling, 745; the "Rambler," commenced by Johnson, 1750; the "Idler," 1758; the "Adventurer," issued 1752; the "World," 1753; and the "Connoisseur," 1754; Moore and Cambridge Colman and Thornton, 937

Essequibo retaken by the French, 899

Essex, London supply of food from, 912; extinction of saffron cultivation in ib.

Essex, Robert Devereux, earl of, accompanies Drake in the expedition to attack Spain, 376; early career of, 382; commands the expedition sent to aid Henry IV., ib.; defeats the attempt of Philip to poison Elizabeth, 384; is appointed to the command of an expedition to attack Spain, ib.; takes and burns Cadiz, in 1596, ib.; commands another expedition with Raleigh, with whom he disagrees, ib.; quarrels with the queen, and is then appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland, in 1599, 389; fails to suppress the rebellion of Tyrone, and returns to England, ib.; interview of, with the queen, ib.; is committed to "free custody," ib.; schemes of, in favor of James, ib.; attempts to raise an insurrection, 390; it fails, and he surrenders, 391; trial of, with his accomplice the earl of Southampton, ib.; conduct of Bacon, ib.; the execution of Essex, on Feb. 25, 1601, ib.; note on the story of the ring, 393

Essex, Robert Devereux, earl of, divorced from his wife, 410; proclaimed a traitor by Charles I. as captain-general of the parliamentary army, 449; marches from London against the king on Sept. 9, 1642, 454; at Northampton, 455; moves his army to Worcester, and is defeated by Rupert, ib.; engages the royal forces at Edgehill, and marches to London, 456; indecision of, 457; Reading surrenders to, 459; relieves Gloucester, 461; surprises Cirencester, ib.; engages the royal forces at Newbury, ib.; blockades Oxford, 465; disagreements between Waller and, ib.; besieges Exeter, ib.; sad condition of, in Cornwall, ib.; he leaves his troops, and his army is dispersed, 466; meeting at the house of, ib.; death of, Sept. 16, 1647, 474; medal struck in honor of, ib.

Essling. See Aspern.

Ethelbald, ravages in England by the Danes during the reign of, 25; aids his father in a battle against the Danes in 850, 26; had obtained the kingdom of Wessex from his father during his lifetime, 27; death of, ib.

Ethelbert, king of Kent, power and dominions of, 21; receives the Christian missionary, Augustin, 22; is converted, ib.; account of the code of laws published by, 23; death of, A.D. 616, ib.

Ethelbert, succeeds Ethelwulf, as king of Kent, 27; and his brother, Ethelbald, as king of Wessex, in 860, ib.; dies, 866, 29

Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred, energetic character, military successes, and death of, 38

Ethelred, succeeds Ethelbert, 966, 29; death of, 31

Ethelred the Unready, accession of in 978, 46; crowned and cursed by Dunstan, ib., attacked by the Danes, under Sweyn, in 980; and following years, ib.; pays tribute to them first in 991, ib.; continued in succeeding attacks, 47; massacre of the Danes by order of, in 1002, ib.; is again attacked by Sweyn, and England is ravaged, ib.; Canterbury burnt by the Danes, ib.; attacked again by Sweyn, king of Denmark, who proclaims himself king of England, 48; retires to Normandy, ib.; recalled to England, ib.; death of, in 1016, ib.

Ethelwulf, ravages in England by the Danes during the reign of, 25; journey of, to Rome, 26; death of, in 858, ib.

Eugene, prince, commands the Austrian army, 1701, 686; becomes a confidant of Marlborough's, 695; sent to cover the Rhine in the campaign of 1704, ib.; announces the movements of the Gallo-Bavarian army to Marlborough, 697; having united his force with Marlborough's, they resolve to give the enemy battle, ib.; marches against them, Aug. 13, and takes up his position on the right, in front of the elector, with difficulty, ib.; his attacks upon whom meet with but slight success, 698; his troops are mistaken for those of the enemy, ib.; joins the duke of Savoy's forces, defeats the French, and drives them out of Italy, 1706, 703; plans with Marlborough an attack upon France; crosses the Alps and the Var, and sets down before Toulon, July 25, 1707, 714; joins Marlborough, 715; directs the siege of Lille, 1708, 717; encamps with Marlborough and 100,000 men before Lille, June 21, 1709; Tournay surrenders, 718; aids in investing Douay, 1710, 723; visits London, 733; conducts the campaign of 1712, in co-operation with the duke of Ormond; opens the siege of Quesnoy; it surrenders, July 4, ib.; he is deserted by the duke of Ormond, and defeated by Villars at Denain, July 24, 734; defeats the Turks at Peterwaradin, 1717, 770; conducts the war against marshal Berwick, 1734, 784; died 1736, ib.

Evans, sir De Lacy; commands the British Legion in Spain, 1122

Evelyn, John, his uncertainty as to James II.'s whereabouts, 626; his grumble at Duncombe, 639; his house at Sayes Court is hired by William for Peter the Great, 1698, 672; notes on Wren, and the rebuilding of St. Paul's, 753; introduces Gibbons into notice, 755

Evertsen, Dutch admiral, engaged in the defeat off Beachy Head, 1690, 639

Evesham, battle of, Aug. 4, 1265, 112

Ewart introduces the Counsel for Prisoners' bill twice, 1221

Excise scheme, by Walpole; he falls in passing the bill embodying this scheme, 1733, 783

Excommunication, small effect of, on the people, temp. John, 101

Exmouth, lord, concludes a treaty with Algiers; an outrage having been committed on the British, he is sent out with an expedition, 1111; his offered terms not being answered, ib.; he fights the battle of Algiers, Aug. 27, 1816, 1112; and on the following morning the Dey accepts the terms originally offered, ib.

Eylau, battle of, Feb. 9, 1807, 1062

Fairfax, sir Thomas, presents the people's petition to Charles I. at York, 449; disputes the supremacy of the north with lord Newcastle, 459; commands one of the parliamentarian armies, 465; besieges Lathom house, ib.; nominated general, 466; urges that Cromwell should be chief commander of the horse, 467; takes an active part in the battle of Naseby, ib., etc.; letter from Cromwell to, 469; Bristol invested by him and Cromwell, ib.; advances upon Oxford, 472; which surrenders to him, 474; secures the Bodleian library from spoliation, ib.; influence of, in the army, not so great as that of Cromwell's, 475; allows the king to have an interview with his children, 478; advances upon London, 479; it submits, ib.; marches through London in triumph, ib.; he and Cromwell put down the Levellers in the army, 482; fights the insurgents at Maidstone, and quells the insurrection, 484; invests London, which surrenders to him, ib.; orders sir Charles Lucas and sir George Lisle to be shot, ib.; his lady's conduct at the trial of Charles I., 489; suppresses the Levellers in the army, 492; unwilling to invade the Scots, 497; resigns his office of general, ib.

Falczi, peace of, July 2, 1711, 733

Falkirk, battle of, Jan. 17, 1746, 813

Falkland, Lucius Cary, lord, charges of, against the lord chancellor Finch, 434; becomes secretary of state, in 1641, 445; his tolerance and moderation the cause of his quitting the parliamentary party, 446; prince Rupert refuses to take directions through, 455; death of, at battle of Newbury, Sept. 20, 1643, 462; character of, and conduct at battle of Newbury, ib.

Falkland Islands, vicissitudes of the, 866

Family Compact, treaty known as the, Aug. 15, 1761, 843, 909

Famine in England, and terrible effects of, in 1258, 110

Fancourt, colonel, slain, 1806, in attempting to save his men from mutinied sepoys, 1056.

Farnham, a great provincial corn market formerly, 611

Fastolf, sir John, wins the battle of Herrings, 172; degraded from the Order of the Garter for cowardice at the battle of Patay, 174

Fearney, William, his share in capturing the San Josef, 1797, 1015

Federation fête at Paris, July 14, 1790, 968

Females, political zeal of, first half of 18th century, 742; employments and dress of, 742; estimate of their character, 743

Fens, drainage of the Lincolnshire, 608, 914

Fenwick, sir John, implicated by Goodman in the Invasion plot, 1696, 667; there being deficient legal evidence to convict him, he is attainted and executed, Jan. 28, 1697, 668

Ferand, a deputy in the French Convention; murdered, 1795, 1009

Ferdinand of Castile marries his daughter Catherine to prince Arthur, the eldest son of Henry VII., 220; uses the English army for the furtherance of his own plans, 228; concludes a truce with France, 229; dies in 1516, and is succeeded by his grandson, Charles V., 231

Ferdinand I. of the two Sicilies. See Ferdinand IV. of Naples.

Ferdinand III., grand-duke of Tuscany; recognizes the French republic, 1011

Ferdinand IV. of Naples, 1759–1806, 1310; flies to Palermo, 1799, 1030; 1806, 1060; reascends the throne, 1815; in 1816 he assumed the title of Ferdinand I. of the Two Sicilies, succeeded by Francis in 1825, ib.

Ferdinand VII. of Spain, solicits Napoleon's protection, 1808, 1068; Charles IV. abdicates the crown in favor of, March 19, ib.; falls into Napoleon's power, ib.; proclaimed king of Spain, 1808; war declared against France, ib.; recognized by Napoleon as king of Spain, 1814, 1092; released by the French, 1823, 1157; died 1833, 1187, 1222

Ferdinand, Don, duke of Parma, 1011; buys Napoleon off his territories, ib.

Ferguson, his march on Solignac hindered, 1069

Ferozeshah, battle of, Dec. 21 and 22, 1845, 1280

Fersen, count de, aids in contriving Louis's flight from Paris, 1791, 972

Feudal system introduced into England by William the Conqueror, 64; exactions imposed through it by William, 65; substitution of rent and wages for feudal services, 180; death struggle of, temp. Henry VI., 187

Feudality, transition state of, temp. Edward III., 134; description of as given by Froissart, ib.; military spirit fostered by, ib.

Feudal rights abolished in France, 1789, 964

Feuillans, a French political party, twice obtains the administration of affairs, 1792, 977, 978

Fielding, Henry, produces his "Pasquin," 1737, 790; his "Inquiry into the Causes of the late Increase of Robbers," 1750; places of entertainment; drunkenness, ib.; gaming among the vulgar; his account of the state of London, 824; his "Adventures of Joseph Andrews," published, 1742; its success; Johnson's opinion of, 937; "Jonathan Wild," published, 1743; "Tom Jones," 1749; "Amelia," 1751; died 1754, ib.; description of contemporary manners by, 938, 942, 945, 947

Fieschi. See Louis Philippe.

Fire of London. See London.

Firmin, his scheme for employing the poor; his religious tenets; his death puts a stop to the printing of Socinian books, 670

Fisher, John, bishop of Rochester, is accused of participation in the treason of the Holy Maid of Kent, 256; is sent to the Tower for refusing to swear to the illegality of the marriage of Henry VIII. with Catherine, ib.; is tried, convicted, and executed, 258

Fisher, captain, communicates to Portland a design against William's life, 665

Fitzgerald, lord Edward, brother of the duke of Leinster, 1074; a member of the Irish Directory; on the arrest of the other members he conceals himself; his house surrounded by the military; he resists, kills the magistrate, and is himself shot, ib.; died June 5, 1798, ib.

Fitzgerald, captain Robert, saves Dublin from being plundered and burnt, 1690, 639

Fitzgerald, Vesey, president of the Board of Trade, 1176; influence among the Clare Roman Catholics, ib.

Fitzharris, lord, description of Pitt's feelings on lord Melville being censured by parliament, 1805, 1048
Fitzherbert, Mrs., marries the Prince of Wales (George IV.), Dec. 21, 1787, 957
Fitz-Osbert, or William with the Long Beard, complains to Richard I., in 1196, of civic corruptions and oppressions, raises an insurrection, is stabbed and hanged, 95
Fitzwilliam, earl, lord lieutenant of Ireland; recalled the same year, 1007, 1023; dismissed his lord lieutenancy of the West Riding, 1133
Flaxman, John, an eminent sculptor, 934; high character of his designs, 1145
Fleet prison, state of the, 1729, 1730, 781
Flesselles, mayor of Paris, shot July, 1789, 964
Fletcher of Saltoun, his opinion on the relative positions of England and Scotland, 674
Fletcher, lieutenant-colonel, helps Wellington in constructing the lines of Torres Vedras, 1077
Fleurus, battle of, 1690, 641; May 29, 1794, 1006
Fleury, cardinal, prime minister of Louis XV., 778; his offers to the English, 792
Flitcroft, architect of Woburn House, 755
Flodden Field, battle of, on Sept 9, 1513, 230
Florida ceded to Spain, 1782, 907; to Great Britain, 1763, 909; to the United States, 1820, 1225
Flushing, failure of the British to take, 1809, 1075
Foley, captain, commander of the Goliath at the battle of the Nile, 1798, 1021; present at the battle of Copenhagen, 1801, 1037
Folly, the coffee-house; its visitors, 619
Fontainebleau, peace of, Sept. 2, 1679, 732; treaty of, 1067; concordat at, Jan. 25, 1813, 1094
Fontenoy, battle of, May 11, 1745, 798
Fonthill erected by Wyatt, 1142
Food, supply of London with, 19th century, 1226
Forbes, Duncan, lord advocate, 1736, 788; conducts the inquiry into the Porteous riots, ib.; proposed the enlisting of Scotch regiments, 799; MacDonald informs him of Charles Edward's descent upon Scotland, 801; considers it rash and desperate, 802
Forser commands the English in the Pretender's army, 763; assumes the command of the whole army on English ground, 763; his preparations for the enemy, 764; tries to obtain favorable terms of surrender, 764; escapes from Newgate, 766
Fort Augustus destroyed by the Highlanders, 815
Fort Boyer captured by the British, Feb. 1815, 1101
Fort Edward taken by Burgoyne, 1777, 882.
Fort St. George capitulates to the British, 1746, 826
Foster, speaker of Irish House of Commons; his passing the Union bill described, 1028
Foster, John, his "Essays," 1141.
Fouché, his share in the execution of the Lyonnese, 1793, 998; assists Bonaparte's intrigues, 1030
Foulon, intendant of marine, 962; murdered by the mob, 963; La Fayette attempts to save him, ib.
Foundling Hospital established by captain Coram; it promotes, instead of repressing, the great social evil, 946
Fourbin, admiral, commands the fleet conveying the pretender James and his force to Scotland; he fails in making a landing and returns to Dunkirk, 1708, 716
Fox, Charles James, his first speech in parliament, 1769, 856; indignation of, at government's conduct towards Burgoyne, 883; leader of his party; character, 899; strong language used by, in moving for an amendment of the king's address; motion lost, ib.; secretary of state, 1782, 900; his resolution to carry Burke's Economical Reform bill, 901; moves the repeal of the statute asserting Ireland's dependence, 904; has differences with Shelburne in the negotiations with Franklin for a treaty of peace, 905; resigns his secretaryship, ib.; mistake of, ib.; commencement of the party conflict between Pitt and, 908; secretary of state, 1782, 1325; excesses in gambling, and remarkable elasticity of mind, 942; coalesces with lord North, appointed secretary of state, 951; re-elected for Westminster; unpopularity, ib.; his India bill; proposes to govern India by a board, 952; bill carried in the Commons, ib.; rejected by the Lords, ib.; the king orders him to give up his office, ib.; contests the seat for Westminster; enthusiasm of the duchess of Devonshire in his cause; fails but takes his seat as a Scotch representative, 954; considers France England's natural foe, 956; denies that the prince of Wales had married Mrs. Fitzherbert, 957; renounces the prince's acquaintance on hearing that such really was the case, ib.; supports the prince's claim to the regency, ib.; in raptures on hearing of the fall of the Bastile, 966; opposes the army estimates, 967; disputes with Burke, ib.; proposes the abolition of the Corporation and Test acts, 968; differs with Burke in his opinion on the new constitution of France, 970; which results in a breach of friendship, ib.; emotion evinced by, ib.; favors the abolition of the slave trade, 976; his Libel bill; difficulty of passing it through the Lords, ib.; attempts made by lord Loughborough to bring about a coalition between Pitt and, ib.; his opinion of the September massacres, 1792, 981; joy of, at the Prussian retreat, 982; anxiety for Louis's fate; proposes that the national sense against his execution be made known to France, 985; Portland and other whigs separate from Fox, and join Pitt's party, ib.; opposes Pitt's Indian Declaratory bill, 1788, 989; opposes the policy of warring with France, 991; and the Traitorous Correspondence bill, 992; popularity of, in France, 993; proposes that peace be re-established with France, 995; defends the duke of York and blames Pitt for the Dunkirk failure, 1793, 997; speech of, on the stability of the Jacobin government, 1000; his indignation at the project of assimilating the English and Scottish laws on sedition and leasing-making, 1002; his indignation at Pitt's coercive measures; dreads the approach of absolutism, 1010; secedes from the whig party, 1019; again appears in his place in parliament, Jan., 1800, 1033; desires peace, 1041; his admiration of Pitt's speech, 1044; the king refuses to admit him to his counsels, 1804, 1046; secretary of state for foreign affairs, 1806, 1056; the king becomes reconciled to, 1057; declining health of, ib.; died Sept. 13, 1806, ib., 1059; his last speech in parliament, 1058; fails in obtaining peace, 1059; buried with public honors, Oct. 10, ib.; rivalry with Pitt, ib.
Fox, Henry, lord Holland, his opinion of the rebellion of 1745, 805; married the duke of Richmond's daughter clandestinely; opposes the marriage act of 1753, 824; Newcastle offers him the secretaryship of state with the lead of the Commons; refuses them, 826; obtains a seat in the cabinet, deserting Pitt, 1754, ib.; favors the bringing over foreign troops for the defence of this country, 830; secretary of state; resigns this office, Oct., 1756, 831; created lord Holland, 1763; retires from public affairs, retaining his office of paymaster, 846
Fox, commodore, takes 40 French ships, 1747, 813
France, rival factions of the Burgundians and Armagnacs, during the reign of Charles VI., 163; distress occasioned by, 168; a great cause of the success of Henry V., ib.; the Armagnacs massacred and expelled from Paris by the mob in 1418, ib.; duke of Burgundy murdered at Montereau, 169; accession of Charles VII. to the throne in 1422, 171; Charles VII. is conducted to Rheims by Joan of Arc, and crowned there in 1430, 175; invaded by Edward IV. in 1475, 201; treaty of peace with England agreed to at Picquiny, ib.
Francis I. succeeds to the throne of France in January, 1515, 231; commences war against Charles V. and takes Milan, ib.; meets Henry VIII. in the Field of the Cloth of Gold, 233, 234; is taken prisoner at the battle of Pavia in 1525, 238; is released by Charles V. on agreeing to very severe terms, 239; project of, for invading England and marching to London, 283; death of, in 1547, 302
Francis I. of Austria. See Francis II. of Germany.
Francis II. of Germany succeeds Leopold as king of Hungary, 1792, 967; rules Lombardy, 1011; welcomes the Russians into Moravia, 1030; joins the coalition against France, ib.; joins his army at Austerlitz; interview with Napoleon; his cessions by the peace of Presburg, 1052; emperor of Germany, 1792–1806; Francis I. of Austria, 1806–1835, 1187
Francis, John, his attempt on the queen's life, 1842, 1263
Francis, sir Philip, said to be the author of Junius' letters, 857; reports the speeches of Mansfield and Chatham, 1770, 860; appointed a member of the Calcutta council; opposes Hastings; brings charges of corruption against him, 948; immoralities of; assumes the governor-general's power on hearing of Hastings' resignation, 949; duels with Hastings; wounded; resigns office; returns to England, ib.; his speech on our alliance with France, 956
Franklin, Benjamin, printer of the "Craftsman;" convicted of libel for writing an article therein, 1731, 783; opposes the passing of the Stamp Act, 1765, 849; recommends the Americans to submit for a while, ib.; examined by the House of Commons on the American Stamp Act; the condition of the North American colonies, 852; the temper of the colonists towards Great Britain before 1763; the American spirit and resolution never to pay the stamp duty, ib.; appears before the lords of the council, as agent for Massachusetts; insulted by them; dismissed his post of deputy postmaster-general, 870; returns to America; deprecates attempting to restore the interests between England and America, 875; but still shrinks from war, ib.; his conference with lord Howe; despatched to Paris to procure a treaty of alliance with the French court; lands in France, Dec. 8, 1776; presents a memorial to count de Vergennes, 880; his reception in the Parisian court circles; his influence upon the national thought, ib.; besieged by applications to recommend officers for the American service, 882; minister plenipotentiary of the United States, May 1779; entrusts Paul Jones with the command of an expedition against the British coasts, 887; his predictions of the future of America, 895; negotiates with Shelburne and Fox for a treaty of peace, 904; one of the commissioners for settling the articles of peace between England and America; signs the preliminaries, Nov. 30, 1783, 907; recommends amity between England and America, 908
Frank-pledge, nature of, 36
Fraser, John. See MacIver.
Frazer, general, repulsed at Alexandria, 1807, 1064
Frederick, Prince of Wales; his income dependent upon the will of his father, George II., 780; his arrival in England, 1728; fails in obtaining princess Wilhelmina of Prussia in marriage, 781; his popularity; marries the princess of Saxe-Gotha, April 27, 1736, 788; opposes his father; applies to parliament for an increase of income, ib.; fails in obtaining it, ib.; will not allow his wife to be confined at Hampton Court; hurries her to St. James's, 789; where she gives birth to a girl; the king's anger at his conduct; he is banished from St. James's; removes to Norfolk House, 1737, ib.; his popularity increases, ib.; his mother refuses to see him on her dying-bed, ib.; his son George Augustus (afterward George III.) born, May 25, 1738, 790; his apparent reconciliation with his father, 796; his death, March 20, 1751, 823; receives but few honors at his burial; his son George created Prince of Wales; a revenue is assigned to his widow, ib.; who dies Feb., 1772, 870
Frederick I. of Prussia; elector of Brandenburg; fights against the French at Fleurus, 641; present at the congress at the Hague, 642; invested with the Garter, ib.; his character, ib.; concludes a treaty with Marlborough, 1704, 699; reigns 1701–1713, 1309
Frederick II., king of Prussia, succeeds Frederick William I., 1740, 795, 1310; lays claim to Silesia, ib.; it not being recognized, he invades the country; secures the greater part of it; defeats general Neipperg at Molwitz, April 10, 1741; his conduct in the battle, 796; again presses the cession of Silesia; his demand refused; and the Austrians receive a second defeat from him, May 17, 1742; enters into a treaty with Great Britain and Hungary, ib.; overruns Bohemia, 798; treaty between George II. and, concluded at Westminster, Jan. 16, 1756, 831; his power as a king; suddenly commences war, ib.; takes Dresden, Sept. 10; blockades Pirna; spares the picture gallery at Dresden; obtains possession of the state papers; defeats the Austrians at Losowitz, Oct. 1; Pirna surrenders; retires into winter quarters, ib.; receives 200,000*l.* from the British government, 1757, 832; commences his second campaign, April; his character; marches into Bohemia; defeats the Austrians, in the battle of Prague, May 6; bombards Prague; defeated by the Austrian marshal Daun at the battle of Kolin, June 17, 835; defeats prince de Soubise at Rosbach, Nov. 5, and prince Charles de Lorraine at Leuthen, Dec. 5, 836; a subsidy of 670,000*l.* voted to, by the British government, 837; defeats the Russians at Zorndorf, Aug. 25, 1758, ib.; popularity of, among the English, ib.; surprised by the Austrians; his presence of mind saves the troops, 838; defeated by the Russians at Kunersdorf; wins the victories of Legnitz and Torgau, 840; his unsuccessful campaign; writes to Pitt, who promises the king's support, 843; Bute refuses him his subsidy, 844; succeeded by Frederick William II., 1786, 1310;
Frederick IV. of Denmark, 1699–1730, 1309; his conquests, and contest with Charles XII., 768
Frederick VI. of Denmark, crown prince; refuses the demands of the English envoy, 1065; declares war against Great Britain, 1066; ascends the throne, 1808, 1310; present at the Vienna congress, 1109
Frederick William I. of Prussia, 1713–1740, 1309; wars against Charles XII., 1715, 768; died May 31, 1740, 794
Frederick William II. of Prussia, 1786–1797, 1310; succeeds Frederick the Great, 956; interviews with the emperor of Germany; they issue the declaration of Pilnitz, 974; surrender of Mayence to, 1793, 996; obtains a subsidy from England, 1006; his Polish raid, 1794, 1007
Frederick William III. of Prussia succeeds Frederick William II., 1797, 1310; takes the part of Orange against France, 956; his wavering conduct; joins France, 1805, 1052; bribed into hostilities with Britain, 1059; uneasiness of his ties with France, ib.; commands the Prussian armies, 1806, 1060; defeated at Jena, 1061; rejects Napoleon's overtures for peace, 1063; concludes an alliance with Russia, 1090; his meeting with Alexander at Leipzig, 1813, ib; present at the Vienna congress, 1815, 1109
Fremantle, captain, his account of and conduct at the battle of Copenhagen, 1801, 1037
Frere, J. H., writer in the "Anti-Jacobin," 1017; British ambassador in Spain; advises Moore to advance on Madrid, 1071
Freron aids in massacring the Toulonese, 1793, 1000
Friedland, battle of, June 14, 1807, 1064
Friend, sir John, trial of, 665
Frobisher, sir Martin, expeditions of, to the Polar seas, 371; takes part in the attack on the Armada, 373; takes Brest from the Spaniards in 1594, and is killed, 384
Froissart, sir John, picture of chivalry by, 134
Froude, Mr., view of, as to state interference in social affairs, 150
Fuenterabia captured by the French, 1719, 772
Fuentes, count de, ordered to leave London, 1762, 844
Fuentes de Onoro, battle of, May 5, 1811, 1082
Furniture and utensils, notice of those in use in the 15th century, 184
Fuseli, his paintings, 1146

Gage, general, supersedes Hutchinson as governor of Massachusetts; appointed the colonial commander-in-chief, 1774, 872; coldly received at Boston; fortifies Boston isthmus, ib.; orders a detachment to destroy the military stores at Concord, 873; offers pardon to all on certain conditions, excepting Hancock and S. Adams, 875; called home, 876
Gainsborough, Thomas, exhibits at the Royal Academy, 1769, 932; portrait and landscape painter, ib.; his merits and excellences, ib.
Galgacus, resistance of, to the invasion of Agricola, 10; doubtful speech, and defeat of, 10
Galissoniere, admiral La; engages Byng, 1756, 830
Galt, John, died 1839; his novels, 1254
Galway, lord; he is defeated by the French and Spaniards on the plains of Almanza, 713; placed at the bar of the House of Lords to give an account of his proceedings in Spain, 725
Galway surrenders to Ginkell, 644
Gambier, admiral lord, commands the expedition against Copenhagen, 1807, 1065; commands the expedition against the French in Aix roads, 1809; fails to assist heartily his subordinate officer, lord Cochrane; tried by court-martial and acquitted, 1072; British commissioner for concluding the peace of Ghent, 1101
Game laws, 1120
Game in Anne's reign, 746; in those of George I. and II., 941
Ganganelli. See Clement XIV.
Gaols, inquiry into the state of the, 1729, 1730, 780; the fraud and extortion of the wardens of the Fleet; shocking case of cruelty towards captain Macpheadris by Bambridge, 782; the horrors of the Marshalsea prison, ib.; public attention drawn to the state of the, by Howard, 946; state of prisons in England and Scotland, 1221
Garat, his visit to England, 1791, 1792, 975

Gardiner, colonel, killed at Preston Pans, 1745, 804; Dr. Doddridge's account of his death, ib.
Gardiner, Stephen, bishop of Winchester, supports the king's supremacy, but opposes the Reformation, 284; becomes a great heretic hunter, ib.; prepares articles for queen Catherine Parr's impeachment, but the king rejects them, 286; objects to the printing of a book of homilies, and of a translation of Erasmus's paraphrase of the New Testament, 303; continued resistance of, to the Reformation, 305; deprived of his bishopric and committed to the Tower in 1550, in the reign of Edward VI., 313; consents to use the Common Prayer, 314; released on the accession of Mary, 318; is made lord chancellor, 319; sermon of, before Mary, exhorting her to severity, 322; exertions of, to suppress heresy, 326; colloquy of, with Rogers, 327; increased severity of, against the married clergy, 328; death of, 331
Garnet, Henry, the Jesuit, tried for his complicity in the Gunpowder Plot, 405; his doctrine of equivocation, ib.
Garrick improves the tone of the stage, 743; his Shaksperian acting, 940
Garter, the Order of the, instituted by Edward III., in 1349, 139
Gas, Pall Mall lighted by, 1807; its introduction has considerable influence in preventing crime; opposition shown to it by the partisans of the persons employed in the whale fisheries, 118
Gascoigne, general, moves for a diminution in the number of parliamentary members, 1190
Gastanga, marquis of, governor of the Netherlands; represents Charles of Spain at the Hague Congress, 1691, 642
Gates, general in the United States army, 882; encamps on Behmus' heights: compels Burgoyne to yield with the honors of war, 1777, 883
Gaul, Druidism in, 4; Cæsar's account of the Druidical judges of, 6
Gauls, the, assisted by the Britons, 3
Gaveston, Piers. See Edward II.
Gawilghur taken by the British, Dec. 15, 1803, 1055
Gay, author of the Beggar's Opera, 744
Gaza surrendered to the French, March 25, 1799, 1029
Gazi Hassan resists the Russians, capitan pasha, 868
General warrants, debates on the legality of; officers dismissed for voting their illegality, 848, 850
Genoa, annexation of, to France, 1805, 1049
Gentleman, country, character and description of, the temp. William and Anne, 721, 741; temp. Geo. III., 1135
Gentleman's magazine started by Cave, 1731, 935
Geoffrey of Monmouth, fables of, 3
George of Denmark marries queen Anne, 1689, 634; votes for the Occasional Conformity bill, 691; lord high admiral, 714; died October, 1708, 71
George I., elector of Hanover, 1698, 682; refuses to co-operate with Marlborough, 705, becomes heir-apparent on the death of his mother, the princess Sophia; born May 28, 1660, 736; proclaimed king on the death of queen Anne, 1714; lands at Greenwich, Sept. 18, 760; personal appearance and character, ib.; Sophia, princess of Zell, and the Königsmark tragedy, ib.; his account of an early impression as king of England, ib.; coronation of, October 20; opens his first parliament, March 17, 1715, ib.; speech on adjourning parliament, 761; speech on opening parliament, 1716, 766; refuses to see lady Nithisdale's petition; appealed to for mercy towards the rebel lords; his power to pardon affirmed, ib.; leaves for Germany; his awkward position as king of England, 768; his hostility towards Russia; jealousy of his son, 769; dismisses Townshend his secretaryship; offers him the lord lieutenancy of Ireland, ib.; announcements on opening parliament, 1717, of the triple alliance, and Gyllenberg's arrest, ib.; quarrels with the prince of Wales, 771; speech on opening parliament, 1718, 771; recommends the settling of the peerage question, 772; recommends the consideration of the national debts, 773; dissuaded from going to Hanover, 1722, 776; James' proposal to, 776; announces the treaty of Hanover, 1725, 778; speech at closing the session, 1727, sets out for Hanover, June 3; dies on his journey, June 10, 779
George II., his father's jealousy of him, 1716, 769; appointed guardian of the realm during George I.'s absence in Hanover, ib.; quarrels with his father, 1717, 770; banished from the royal residence; sets up an opposition court at Leicester House; the earl of Berkeley makes a proposal to George I. to seize him and carry him to America, 771; governor of a Welsh copper company, 773; succeeds his father to the throne of England, June, 1727, 779; R. Walpole obtains a confirmation of his power through queen Caroline's influence, and by bribing the king, 779; the civil list revenue settled on him as income, ib.; his son, Frederick, prince of Wales, dependent upon him for his income, ib.; fought at Oudenarde and Dettingen; influence of the queen over, 780; conduct of, towards the prince of Wales, ib.; remarks on opening parliament, 1732; strikes Pulteney's name off the privy council list, 782; determined to stand by Walpole, 784; speech on opening parliament, 1734, ib.; his warlike desires, ib.; visits Hanover; returns to England, Oct. 22, 1735, 786; his unpopularity; pasquinade on, 788; returns to England, Dec. 1736; quarrels with his son, 789; banishes him from St. James' palace, ib.; illness of the queen; and death, Nov. 20, 1737, ib.; his grief, ib.; the birth of George III. excites in him a stronger jealousy towards his son, 790; announces the convention with Spain on opening parliament, 1739, 791; calls upon parliament for support against Spain, 792; speech to parliament, 1740, 794; goes to Hanover, 1741; concludes a treaty of neutrality without his minister's knowledge, 795; exults at the results of his mediation between Hungary and Prussia, 796; reconciled to his son, whom he admits to court, 797; national jealousy roused by his taking Hanoverian troops into English pay, ib.; prorogues parliament; lends his army to Maria Theresa; departs for Germany, ib.; joins his army, June 19, 1743; commands the rear guard; his gallantry; gains the battle of Dettingen, June 27; and expels the French from Germany; his enthusiastic reception in England, ib.; restrained from leaving England, 1744, 798; returns from Hanover, Aug. 31, 1745, 806; Andrew Drummond becomes his private banker, 811; refuses to nominate Pitt secretary at war; 819; speech on opening parliament, 1747, 820; death of the prince of Wales, March 20, 1751, 823; his grandson assumes the title: desires the duke of Cumberland to be sole regent, ib.; asks for increased forces, 826; goes to Hanover; ministerial difficulties about subsidies, 829; his address; supported by Hamilton and Fox; opposed by Pitt, ib.; introduces Hessian troops for England's defence, 830; speech of, 1756; forms a treaty with Frederick of Prussia, 831; different tone of speech, 1756; his real opinions, 832; asks parliament for a subsidy to Prussia, ib.; attempts made to dupe, 833; his strong dislike to Pitt and Temple; fails to form a ministry, 833; finally compelled to accept the Pitt administration, ib.; his anger at the duke of Cumberland, 836; refuses to ratify the convention of Closter-Seven, 837; recommends a Prussian subsidy, ib.; death of, Oct. 25, 1760, 840
George III., born May 24, O. S. 1738, 790; attains his majority; entreats not to be separated from his mother, 831; lord Bute is made his groom of the stole, ib.; succeeds George II. as king, 1760; his conduct on hearing of his father's death, 840; character and education, 841; Bute's influence over, ib.; opens parliament, Nov. 15, ib.; his speech; the Commons vote him £800,000; his enthusiastic reception by the people; policy of his reign, ib.; recommends an act for securing the independence of judges, 842; marriage projects; his choice falls upon princess Charlotte of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, 842; whom he marries, Sept. 8, 1761; her character and appearance, ib.; coronation, Sept. 22, 842; gives Pitt a pension, 844; promises a vigorous prosecution of the war, 844; resolves on war with Spain, ib.; speech of, 1762, 845; Bute attempts to uphold the principle of prerogative, 846; speech on the peace, 1763, and its advantages, ib.; desires to govern and form a ministry of his own, 847; his sensitiveness on the general warrants question, 849; orders Conway and others voting against the ministry to be dismissed their offices, ib.; illness of, 851; his indignation at the conduct of his ministers in the Regency bill matter induces him to offer Pitt the premiership; Pitt's terms, ib.; Temple persuades Pitt to break off the negotiations; his disgust at the conduct of Grenville and Bedford, ib.; orders the suppression of the American disturbances, 852; his right to make laws for the colonies declared, 853; expresses himself as being now for and now against the repeal of the Stamp act, ib.; seeks Pitt's advice as to a new ministry, 854; urges Pitt's expulsion from parliament, 856; Junius' address to; speech on proroguing parliament, 1769; his graziers' speech on opening parliament, 1770, 859; offers North the lord commissionership of the treasury, 861; speech, 1768, on North American proceedings, 862; address and remonstrance of the City of London to, 864; his harsh reply, ib.; a second remonstrance presented to, by Beckford, with a speech; no intimation having previously been given he is at a loss what to do, ib.; his indignation at the lord mayor's charging a House of Commons' officer with assault for arresting Miller, a printer, 865; speech on opening the session, 1770, 866; imprisonment of his sister the queen of Denmark; obtains her release, 868; requests parliament to amend the laws respecting royal marriages, ib.; message to parliament on the Boston outrages, 870; his letter to North favoring military measures against America, ib.; speech, 1774, 872; his answer to a remonstrance presented by Wilkes, 873; his estimate of the value of addresses; speech, 1775, on the American war, 876; the petition of congress to, rejected, ib.; his opinion of Chatham's speech advising a cessation of hostilities with America, 881; speech, 1777, 882; announces a treaty between France and America, and withdrawal of the British minister from Paris, 884; his surprise at Chatham's being buried with public honors, 885; rejoices at the rejection of Burke's Economical Reform bill, 890; takes measures for repressing the riots of 1780, 891; holds a council to explain the riot act; his opinion of the right construction, ib.; gives his claims on St. Eustatius to the army and navy, 895; inconsistency of his speech, 1781, 898; his hatred of Fox, 899; his reply to the address praying for a discontinuance of the war, ib.; his dislike of having the opposition for his ministers, 899; compelled to change his ministers, 900; recommends economical reform, 901; expresses his concern at the discontent in Ireland, 904; appoints Shelburne to the lordship of the Treasury, 905; speech, 1782, announcing the independence of America, 907; his alleged incivility towards Jefferson and Adams, 908; Jefferson's testimony to this effect, ib., and that of Adams to the contrary, ib.; fond of agricultural pursuits, 917; chosen patron of the Royal Academy, 931; patronizes West; his delight in West's pictures, 933; his remarks on India, 1782, 951; his dislike to Fox's India bill, 952; dismisses the coalition ministry, ib.; his firmness in retaining the Pitt ministry, 953; speech, 1786, 955; announces the commercial treaty with France, ib.; speech, 1787, 956; refuses to help the prince of Wales to pay his debts, 957; attacked by insanity; the prince of Wales appointed regent, ib.; recovers; public rejoicing; his gratitude to Pitt for his firm attachment, 958; speech, 1788, ib.; speech, 1790, 967; his coldness towards Talleyrand, 974; pacific speech, 1792, 975; dismisses the lord chancellor, Loughborough, 976; royal proclamation against seditious writings, ib.; speech, 1792, 977; speech, Dec., 1792, 983; reconciled to lord Loughborough, 985; his popularity; calibre of his mind, 986; asks for increased forces, 1793, 988; parliament's address to, ib.; announces France's declaration of war against Britain, 991; speech, 1793, 996; anecdote of, and Loughborough's constructive treason, 1003; objects to his son's removal from his military command, 1006; speech, 1794, 1007; cuts Wilberforce, 1008; orders lord Malmesbury to demand the princess Caroline for the prince of Wales, ib.; speech, 1795, ib.; assailed by the mob; his courage, 1019; holds a council to provide a remedy for the money panic, 1797, 1013; speech, 1797, 1014; speech, 1798; congratulates the nation on the victory of the Nile, 1021; speech, Nov., 1798; remarks on the volunteers and the Irish union, 1022; speech, 1799, 1026; pernicious effects of his resistance to the proposed union with Ireland, ib.; expresses his satisfaction at the measure, 1027; remarks on the completion of the union, 1028; speech, July, 1799, 1030; speech, 1801, 1035; opposes any concessions to Catholics, ib.; again attacked by insanity, 1036; attributes its cause to Pitt's conduct, ib.; speech, 1802, alludes to France's encroachments, 1041; Despard's conspiracy for killing; message to parliament for calling out the militia, 1043; reviews the volunteers, Oct., 1803, 1045; another attack of insanity, Feb. 12 to April, 1804, 1046; refuses Pitt's requests for an administration on a broad basis, but offers him the premiership under certain prescribed limitations, which Pitt accepts, May, 1804; opposes Catholic emancipation, ib.; curious incident in reading his speech on proroguing parliament, 1804; indications of a new grand alliance, 1047; Napoleon's letter to, 1048; desires Grenville to form a ministry, 1056; requires a pledge of the Grenville ministry, which causes them to resign, 1061; opposes the Roman Catholic enlistment bill, ib.; sympathy of the people with, on account of his infirmities; nearly blind, 1062; speech, 1807, 1064; speech, 1808, 1066; his high opinion of Wellington, 1077; celebration of "The Jubilee," the fiftieth year of his reign, ib.; speech, 1810; alludes to the Peninsular war, 1078; the distressing condition of his daughter brings on his last attack of insanity, Oct., 1810, 1080; death of, Jan. 19, 1820, 1134
George IV., born Aug. 12, 1762, 851; introduced to the House of Peers, 1783; Carlton House assigned him as a residence, 951; his income, 956; embarrassed by debts; marries Mrs. Fitzherbert, 957; his claims to the regency disputed, ib.; Pitt's proposition for restricting his power as regent, ib.; his first speech in parliament, 976; the princess Caroline of Brunswick demanded in marriage for him, 1008; her character, arrival in England, and meeting with the prince; they are married, April 8, 1795, ib.; George III. causes an inquiry to be made as to the princess's conduct, 1057; reappointed regent, Feb. 5, 1811, 1080; restriction on, about to expire; his letter as to the choice of a ministry, 1082; his character, ib.; the formation of the Liverpool ministry, 1083; declaration of, on the American war, 1098; speech, 1814, 1100; message to parliament, 1815, 1104; his unpopularity, 1114; speech, 1817, on the state of the country; outraged; parliament addresses him on the subject, 1123; speech, 1817, 1125; serious illness of, 1128; his dissension with his daughter, ib.; causes of his gloom; opens parliament by commission, ib.; dissolves parliament, 1818, 1130; speech, 1818, ib.; speech, 1819, on the state of the country, 1131; his satisfaction with the conduct of those who put down the Manchester reform meeting; his reply to the London address, 1133; quiet transition from one reign to another, 1134; patronizes Nash, 1144; presents the Phigaleian marbles to the nation, 1145; speech, 1820, alludes to the Cato street conspiracy, 1149; the queen Caroline debate, 1150; the queen intimates her intention to come to England, ib.; his desire for divorce, and to have the queen tried for high treason; his differences with his cabinet, ib.; the ministerial propositions agreed to, ib.; prepares for his coronation, 1151; opens parliament in person, and leaves the settling of his revenues to its disposal, ib.; the queen's journey towards and arrival in England, ib.; message of, to parliament, and the green bag containing papers concerning the queen's conduct, which is laid before parliament; Canning (for government) and Brougham vindicate their respective conduct in the affair of queen Caroline, ib.; conferences for averting a public proceeding; these negotiations fail, 1152; Canning sends in his resignation, but the king insists on his retaining office; secret committee appointed, and the consequence of their report is that a bill of Pains and Penalties is brought against the queen; her trial commenced Aug. 7, 1820, ib.; swarm of addresses presented to the queen, ib.; Brougham's defence; Denman's bold and unmeasured language, 1153; motions for the second and third reading carried, and abandonment of the bill of Penalties, ib.; the national rejoicing thereat, ib.; discussions in the next session on the queen's affairs; she accepts a 50,000*l.* annuity, and all general interest in her ceases, 1154; the king's coronation, July 19, 1821, ib.; the queen vainly attempts to be present at the ceremonial; she dies Aug. 7; the king sails for Dublin, Aug. 1; the passage of the queen's remains through the city to Brunswick causes a riot; Canning having resigned, the king refuses to allow of his re-admission into the cabinet, ib.; speech, 1822, on Irish outrage and agricultural distress, 1155; embarks at Greenwich for Scotland, Aug. 10, 1822; lands at Leith, Aug. 18; his cordial reception, 1156; speech, 1824, 1158; his manifesto, ib.; fails to obtain Canning's dismissal; foreign influence upon the king; speech, 1825; recognizes the South American republics, ib. ; speeches of, illustrative of the suddenness of the money panic of 1825, 1162 ; his difficulty in choosing a new ministry, 1165 ; his unreservedness in talking of state affairs, 1166 ; his compassion for Canning's ill-health, ib.; his share in the negotiations preceding Canning's premiership, 1167 ; desires Wellington to form a ministry, 1173 ; speech, 1828, ib. ; refuses to acquiesce in the emancipation of Roman Catholics ; gives a reluctant consent to a passage to that effect in his speech ; speech, 1829, 1177 ; dismisses the Wellington ministry, but foreseeing the difficulties of forming another, he recalls it, ib. ; his interviews with Eldon, 1178 ; speech, 1830, 1179 ; illness of ; his death, June 26, 1830 ; his position in life and character, ib.

Germaine, lord George Sackville ; present at Minden ; unable to understand prince Ferdinand's messages ; tried by court-martial ; declared unfit for any military post, 835 ; secretary of state, 1775–1782, 876 ; approves of Cornwallis's severity in America, 896 ; refuses to sign any treaty giving independence to America ; retires from office ; created a peer, 899
Germanus, the arrival of, in Britain, about 449, and his suppression of the Pelagian heresy, 19
Gertruydenberg taken by Dumouriez, 1793, 993
Ghent surrenders to Marlborough, 1706, 706 ; to the French, 1708, 715 ; retaken by the Allies, 716 ; pacification of, Nov. 8, 1576, 731 ; peace of, Dec. 24, 1814, 1094 ; it concludes the war with America, 1101
Ghorka war, 1814, 1815, 1169
Ghuznee, siege and capture of, by the British, 1839, 1249 ; recapture, ib.
Gibbon, inconsistencies of the account given by Gildas of the Britons after the departure of the Romans, pointed out by, 19 ; a member of parliament, 1774, 871 ; describes a scene in the House of Commons, ib. ; his experience of club life in London, 941
Gibbons, G., statue of Charles II. at Windsor Castle by, 569
Gibbs, architect of St. Martin's in the Fields, 755
Gibbs, counsel for Hardy, 1794, 1003
Gibraltar taken by Rooke and Darmstadt, Aug. 3, 1704, 700 ; besieged by the Spaniards ineffectually, 1727, 770 ; and again, 1779–82, 892, 905, 906 ; siege ended by the peace, 907
Gibson, proceedings against, for obstructing a scrutiny into an election, 1751, 822
Gifford, William, supports the "Anti-Jacobin," 1018 ; destroys the Della Cruscan school by his "Baviad" and "Mæviad," 1136 ; edits the "Quarterly Review," 1140
Gilbert, John, aids in constructing the Bridgewater Canal, 923
Gildas the historian, inconsistencies in the account of the Britons, given by, 19
Gin act, 1736, 786
Ginkell, earl of Athlone ; captures Athlone, June 30, 1691, 644 ; defeats the Irish, under St. Ruth, at the battle of Aghrim, July 12, 644 ; takes Limerick, and quells all opposition to William's cause, ib. ; accompanies William in his campaign of 1695, 661
Girondins, a French political party, 973 ; obtains the administration of affairs, 977 ; dismissed from power, 978 ; they desire a republic, 979 ; their power and policy, ib. ; they vote the abolition of royalty, 982 ; and the death of the king, 987 ; insurrection against them, 995 ; its political existence extinguished, ib. ; their triumph in the provinces, 997
Girtin, Thomas, his water-color paintings, 1147
Gladsmuir. See Preston Pans
Gladstone, W. E., remarks of, on the opium war, 1246; colonial secretary, 1276
Glass, duty on ; glass-houses in Defoe's time, 607 ; reduction of the duty on, 1831, 1188 ; and repeal, 1845 ; important results consequent thereon, 1273
Glencoe ; dislike of lord Breadalbane towards the MacDonalds of, 646 ; tardy submission of the chief MacIan to William's government, ib.; letters of Dalrymple concerning the extirpation of the tribe of, 647 ; captain Campbell dispatched to, with a troop of soldiers, ib.; description of the glen ; treacherous behavior of Campbell, 648 ; perpetration of the massacre, Feb. 13, 1692, ib.; inquiries are made into the massacre, 649 ; but no one is punished but Dalrympie, who is merely dismissed from his secretaryship, and Breadalbane, who is imprisoned for a short time, and then pardoned, 649
Glendower, Owen, heads a revolt of the Welsh against Henry IV., 160 ; is declared prince of Wales, ib.; repulses the army of sir Edmund Mortimer, ib.; and that of the king, ib.; concludes a treaty with, and receives assistance from France, 162 ; successful resistance of, ib.; is exempted from the general pardon of Henry IV. to the Welsh in 1411, 163 ; uncertain time of the death of, ib.
Gloucester, Humphrey, duke of, appointed joint protector of Henry VI. with the duke of Bedford, 171 ; marries Jacqueline of Hainault and quarrels with the duke of Burgundy, ib.; the pope declares the marriage void, ib.; marries Eleanor Cobham, ib.; feuds between Gloucester and Henry Beaufort, bishop of Winchester, ib.; continued struggle with Beaufort for predominance in the council, 176 ; his wife accused of sorcery, ib.; trial of the duchess with Bolingbroke and Southwell for sorcery and conspiracy, in 1440, ib.; they are found guilty, the duchess imprisoned for life and Bolingbroke executed, 177 ; is arrested for high treason, and found dead in his bed on Feb. 28, 1447, ib.
Gloucester, duke of, son of princess Anne, died at Windsor July 30, 1700 ; system upon which his education was pursued, 682
Gloucester, William, duke of ; George III.'s brother ; born 1743 ; married lady Waldegrave privately, 1766, 868
Glynn, sergeant, counsel for Wilkes, 1763, 847; elected M.P. for Middlesex, 1769, 858
Goddard, general, takes Ahmedabad and Bassein, 949
Goderich, F. J. Robinson, viscount ; treasurer of the navy and president of the board of trade, 1149 ; chancellor of the exchequer ; his sanguine views of the state of the country, 1825, 1162 ; secretary of state for war and the colonies, 1167 ; placed at the head of the government, 1827, 1172 ; unable to reconcile Mr. Herries and Mr. Huskisson, he resigns, Jan. 9, 1828, 1172 ; colonial secretary, 1187 ; lord privy seal and earl of Ripon, 1833, 1205 ; resigns, 1834, 1212
Godiva of Coventry, story of, 54
Godolphin, lord, betrays the Brest expedition to James, 659; implicated by Fenwick with holding treasonous correspondence with James II., 667 ; made first commissioner of the treasury, 1701, 684 ; obtains a high place among queen Anne's councillors, 1702, 689 ; he call the Whigs into public service, giving them the places formerly possessed by the Tories, 700 ; joins Marlborough in insisting on Harley's dismissal from office, 1708, 715 ; has to struggle for office in opposition to Harley, 719 ; Harley obtaining the upperhand, Godolphin is dismissed from office, 1710, 724
Godoy, prince of Algarves ; a favorite at the Spanish court, 1067 ; his schemes against the royal family, 1068; seized by the French, ib.
Godwin, earl, induces Alfred, son of Ethelred, to land in England to oppose king Harold, and betrays him, 49 ; importance of, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, 50 ; his daughter Edith is married to Edward, ib.; patriotism of, ib.; origin and rise of, ib.; refuses to punish arbitrarily the men of Dover for the riot against earl Eustace, 51 ; is banished with his sons, Sweyn and Harold, ib.; is recalled, and the Anglo-Saxon party triumphs, 52 ; dies, ib.; his death a public calamity, ib.
Godwin, his improbable proposal to Canning, 1202
Goethe served in the German army in the campaign of 1792, 982
Gohier, a member of the French Directory, 1030; imprisoned in the Luxembourg, 1031
Goldsmith, Oliver, his history of England published, 1771, 824; asserts that the Marriage Act had impeded marriages, 825
Goodman, concerned in the Assassination plot, 664 ; implicates Fenwick with plotting against William, ib.; tampered with, 667
Goodwin helps to suppress the Derbyshire insurrection, 1817, 1124
Gordon, duke of, holds Edinburgh castle in favor of James II., 629 ; refuses to fire on the town at the instigation of some partisans of James II., 630 ; the castle is surrendered by him, 631
Gordon, lord George, president of the Protestant Association; his fanaticism against the Papists; assembles 60,000 of his adherents at St. George's-fields ; marches to parliament, and presents his petition to repeal the act passed in favor of Roman Catholics, 1780, 890 ; from this resulted the "Gordon" riots, 891 ; committed to the Tower ; tried and acquitted, 892
Goree surrendered to the British, 1758, 837
Gortz, baron, plans an insurrection in England, 769
Gospel Propagation Society established 1701, 620
Gothic architecture and architects, 1784–1820, 1142
Gough, sir Hugh, general ; commands the British land forces in China, 1247 ; attacks Canton, ib.; defeats the Mahrattas at the battle of Maharajpoor, 1843, 1268; advances to relieve Ferozepoor, 1280 ; with sir H. Hardinge gains the battle of Ferozeshah, ib. ; wins the battle of Sobraon, ib
Goulburn, Henry, a British commissioner for concluding the peace of Ghent, 1101 ; chancellor of the exchequer, 1187; secretary of state, 1215; his motion on the London university, 1216 ; his free-trade financial propositions, 1244
Gower, characteristics of his poetry, 150
Gower, earl, British minister at Paris, 966 ; recalled Aug., 1792, 980
Græm, colonel, employed to report on the marriageable princesses for George III., 842
Grafton, duke of, killed in attacking Cork, Oct. 9, 1690, 641
Grafton, A. H. Fitzroy, duke of, visits Wilkes in the Tower, 690 ; secretary of state, 1765, 851 ; resigns his office on account of Rockingham's weak administration, 1766, 854 ; appointed first lord of the treasury in Chatham's ministry, 1766, ib.; becomes the real minister during Chatham's illness, 855 ; agonized by "Junius'" attacks, 858 ; divorced from his wife ; marries the duchess of Bedford's niece, 859 ; resigns Jan. 28, 1770, 861 ; accuses Hillsborough of suppressing some of the council minutes, 862 ; first lord of the treasury, Aug. 2, 1766 to Sept. 12, 1767 ; Dec. 1, 1767 to Feb. 1770, 865 ; resigns his office of privy seal, 1775, 876
Graham, general, wins the battle of Barrosa, 1811, 1081 ; captures San Sebastian, 1091
Graham, sir James, first lord of the admiralty, 1830, 1187 ; helps to prepare the parliamentary reform bill, 1188 ; resigns his office, 1834, 1212 ; declines joining Peel's ministry in 1834, 1215 ; his motion against the queen's advisers, 1246 ; introduces his bill for regulating labor in factories ; compelled to withdraw his education clauses, 1269 ; debate on the bill, ib. ; ultimately passed, ib.
Grammont, duke de, his conduct at Dettingen, 1743, 797 ; falls at Fontenoy, 1745, 798
Granada ceded to England, 1782, 907
Granby, marquis of, second in command at Minden, 1759. 838 ; commands the British in the campaign of 1761, 843 ; commander-in-chief ; resigns, 1770, 861
Grand Alliance formed by William, 686
Grandval plans a design for assassinating William, 652; tried by court-martial ; executed, 653
Grant, Charles, secretary for Ireland, 1148 ; joins the Wellington ministry, 1173 ; resigns, 1828, 1176; president of the board of control, 1187
Grant, R., moves for a regency, 1830, 1180 ; judge advocate general, 1187
Grantham, lord, secretary of state, 1782, 905
Granville, earl. See Carteret.
Grattan, Henry, champion of Irish liberty ; his character, 903 ; claims free trade and legislative independence as his country's right ; supports the Roman Catholic relief bill, ib.; fails twice in carrying his declaration of rights, ib.; congratulates Ireland in having acquired her freedom ; repeal of statute of George I. asserting the dependence of Ireland, 904 ; national acknowledgment to, ib.; speech on parliamentary reform, 1023 ; brings in a bill for repealing Catholic disqualification, ib.; states that he will not attend the House of Commons, 1024 ; returned member for Wicklow, Jan., 1800 ; his orations against the Union, 1026 ; duels with Mr. Corry, ib.; his last speech in favor of Catholic emancipation, 1131 ; death of, May 14, 1820, ib.
Graves, admiral, his encounter with de Grasse, 1781, 897
Gray, his account of the trial of the rebel lords, 1746, 818 ; his description of Westmoreland, 919
Green, captain, prosecuted and executed for the supposed murder of captain Drummond, 1705, 707
Green, attacked by rioters, 1768 ; tried for murder ; acquitted, 856
Greene, president of an American judicial court ; refuses to release or exchange André, 893
Greene, general, commands the American army in Washington's absence, 892 ; defeated at Guilford, 1781, compels the British to fall back, 896 ; defeated at Camden, ib.
Greenwich Hospital, William determines to erect, 660
Gregg, a clerk of Harley's ; he is detected in a correspondence with the French secretary of state ; he is tried, convicted, and executed, 715
Gregory, pope, and the Anglo-Saxon slaves in Rome, Bede's story of, 21
Grenada captured by the British, 1763, 845
Grenville, George, opposes Pitt's proposal to war with Spain, 843 ; leader of the House of Commons, and treasurer of the navy, 844 ; opposes Pitt's German policy, ib.; secretary of state, 846 ; first lord of the treasury ; chancellor of the exchequer, 1763 ; his ministry, ib.; moves that duties be laid on articles of American commerce ; a stamp duty on paper, and others, 849 ; his stamp act is passed, 1765, 850 ; and rouses the American spirit, ib.; refuses to put the princess dowager's name in the Regency bill ; the king contemplates dismissing him, 851 ; but is obliged to retain him, ib.; defends his stamp act against Pitt's oratory, 852 ; mobbed, 853 ; opposes Wilkes' expulsion from parliament ; his emotion, 857 ; his last speech in parliament ; died Nov., 1770, 863 ; first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, 1763–5 ; secretary of state, 1762, 877
Grenville, lady Hester. See Chatham, 826, 843
Grenville, sir Richard, heroic conduct of, in a naval fight with the Spaniards, 382
Grenville, Thomas, sent to negotiate with Franklin, 1782 ; returns from Paris, 905 ; negotiates at Vienna, 1794, 1006 ; first lord of the admiralty, 1807, 1063 ; plans an expedition to the Dardanelles, ib.; its failure, 1063
Grenville, lord W. W., secretary of state ; his correspondence with Chauvelin, 976, 987 ; remonstrates against the aggressive measures adopted by France, 983 ; brings forward a Treasonable Attempts bill, 1010 ; it is passed, ib.; his hostile reply to Bonaparte's letter to the king, Jan., 1800, 1036 ; opinion of statesmen on it, ib.; his speech against Bonaparte, 1033 ; succeeded as foreign secretary by lord Hawkesbury, 1801, 1036 ; administration of Fox and, 1806, 1056 ; first lord of the treasury, ib.; weakness of his ministry after Fox's death, 1061 ; they deliver up the seals of office, March 25, 1807, ib.; retires to Dropmore, 1155
Grey, Charles, earl, his efforts in favor of reform in the representation of the people, 1792, 696 ; moves an address to the king to postpone the Irish Union, 1028 ; first lord of the admiralty, 1806, 1056 ; advocates resistance against Napoleon, 1061 ; his remarks on the negotiations with France, 1059 ; Dissenters' enlistment bill ; the king opposes it, 1062 ; applied to to form a government, 1812, 1083 ; foreign secretary, 1806, 1325 ; his speech against lord Sidmouth's unconstitutional conduct in the case of trials for libel, 1125 ; his attacks upon Canning ; he charges him with having pledged himself not to press the Catholic question, 1166 ; approves of the ready recognition of the New Orleans French government by parliament, 1183 ; declares the necessity of reform in parliament, 1186 ; formation of his ministry, 1187 ; principles of his government, ib.; members of his ministry, ib. ; with lord Brougham he urges the king to dissolve parliament on the defeat of his ministry on the reform question, 1190 ; his speech explanatory of the proposed reform bill, 1831, 1191 ; his reply to the principal arguments against the bill, 1192 ; resists the entreaties of his friends to obtain the passage of the reform bill by the creation of peers, 1196 ; replies to lord Lyndhurst's speech, ib.; upon the king refusing to create peers his ministry resigns, 1197 ; Wellington failing to form an administration, he is recalled ; obtains the king's consent to the creation of peers ; power not exercised, 1198 ; passing of the reform bills, ib.; introduces the coercion bill for Ireland, which is passed, 1833, 1204 ; defends the commission for inquiring into the state of the Irish church against unjust imputations, 1212 ; overpowered by his feelings in telling the Lords of his resignation, 1834, ib.; cause of his resignation, 1213 ; great banquet to, at Edinburgh, ib.
Grey, lady Jane, married to lord Guilford Dudley, proclaimed queen by Northumberland, June 10, 1553, 317 ; conversation of, in prison, respecting Northumberland's apostasy, 319 ; with her husband, lord Guilford Dudley, pleads guilty to the charge of high treason, 320; execution of both, and her remarkable fortitude, 322; memorial of, in the Beauchamp tower, ib.

Griffiths, admiral, his accounts of the "La Vengeur's" story, 1005
Grimaldi, marquis of; Spanish ambassador in France; signs the "Family compact," 843
Grosley, his remarks on England and Londoners, 914
Gross-Beeren, battle of, Aug. 23, 1813, 1090
Grote advocates the ballot principle, 1209; supports the poor law amendment bill, 1211; and the Irish church appropriation motion, 1212
Grouchy appointed to watch Blücher at Waterloo, 1105
Grumbkow, general, sent on a mission to Charles of Sweden, to whom he gives an account of Marlborough, 712, 1105
Guadaloupe capitulated to the English, 1759, 837
Guest, general, governor of Edinburgh castle, 1745; the young Pretender prevents food from going in; the governor fires upon the town; the prince revokes his order, 804
Guickwar, a Mahratta chieftain, takes no part against the British, 1053
Guilds of trade, oppressions exercised by, 95
Guiscard, marquis de, his early career; employed as a French spy in England; has a meeting with the queen; he is arrested March 8, 1711, his correspondence with France having been detected; he is taken before the council, where he stabs Harley with a pen-knife; he is killed by the councillors, 727
Guizot, M., opinion of, as to the application of the Britons for Roman aid against the Picts and Scots, 19; his remarks on Canning's foreign policy, 1160; joins in protesting against the royal decrees of 1830, 1183; description of the meeting of Lafayette and the duke of Orleans; made minister of the interior, 1182; at the head of the cabinet, 1832, 1836, 1222; his official revelations respecting Louis Napoleon's enterprise, ib.; his picture of English society, 1231; appointed to keep a watch over prince Napoleon's movements, 1241; his return to England; satisfied of the good-will of the natives to France, 1242; with Soult succeeds Thiers in the ministry, 1243; describes the difficulties of Peel's position, 1245; his description of a visit to Westminster Abbey with Macaulay, 1255; his Spanish marriage plans, 1284; his conduct vindicated, ib.; resigns his post as minister, 1285
Gunpowder plot. See James I.
Guntzburg, battle at, 1805, 1050
Gustavus III. of Sweden, succeeds Adolphus Frederic, 1771, 1310; agrees to subsidize an army to Spain, 974; shot by Aukerstroem, March 6, 1792, 977
Guy, an M. P. and secretary to the treasury; sent to the Tower for being bribed, 661
Gwalior captured by the British, 949; again occupied by them, 1264
Gwyn, revives the idea of an academy of painting, 930; his bridges, 935
Gyllenberg, count, the Swedish envoy in London; arrested for intriguing to raise a rebellion in England, 769

Habeas Corpus act passed in 1679, 565; suspended, 1689, 625; 1695, 664; 1722, 776; 1794, 1002; 1800, 1033; 1817, 1123; a second time in 1817, 1125; the suspension repealed, 1818, 1129
Hadrian visits Britain, A.D. 120, and builds Hadrian's wall, 11; character of, by Gibbon, ib.
Hague, congress at the, 1691, 642; treaty of the, May 21, 1659, 732; triple alliance of the, Jan. 4, 1717, 733
Haileybury college, built by Wilkins, 1143
Halidon Hill, battle of, July 19, 1333, 135
Halifax, Charles Montague, earl of, forms part of William's new ministry in 1693; his eloquence, 658; chancellor of the exchequer, 663; instrumental in establishing the standard of money, 1696, 667; first lord of the treasury, 1697, 668; impeached for advising a partition treaty, 684; loses his place in the privy council on Anne's accession, 1702, 688; votes an inquiry into the alleged danger of the Church, 705; patron of letters, 741
Halifax, George Savile, earl of, parliament endeavors to find some charge against him, 634
Halifax, earl of, secretary of state, 1763-1765, 846, 865; proceedings against, for arresting Wilkes and Wood, 849
Hall, Robert, character of his preaching, 1139
Hallam, Henry, character of his historical writings, 1256
Halle, treaty of, 1610. 731; taken by the Bavarians, 1809.
Hamburg, peace of, May 22, 1762, 909
Hamilton, duke of. See Long Parliament, and Cromwell, Oliver.
Hamilton, lieutenant-colonel, his share in the Glencoe massacre, 647
Hamilton, duke of, president of the Scottish convention of estates, 629; alleged with others to have secreted soldiers in cellars and other places, ib.; causes the convention doors to be locked, ib.; authorized by William, in 1693, to investigate the massacre of Glencoe, but the duke dying, the inquiry was not proceeded with till 1695, 648
Hamilton, duke of; he disperses the Cameronians assembled to oppose the union, 712; killed in a duel with lord Mohun, 1712, 745
Hamilton, Gerard, his speech in favor of the subsidies, 1755; from which he is known as single speech Hamilton, 829
Hamilton, John, governor of Carlisle; surrenders to the Duke of Cumberland, 1745, 813
Hamilton, lady, aids Nelson at Naples; recommended to the national gratitude, 1021
Hamilton, Richard, his baseness and treachery, 626; his faithlessness causes the son of sir W. Temple, who had pledged to his being faithful, to drown himself in the Thames, ib.; placed at the head of troops for bringing the Ulster Protestants to subjection, 627; succeeds Maumont as commander of James II.'s forces, ib.; is superseded by Rosen, ib.; leads the Irish cavalry at the battle of the Boyne, 638; is taken prisoner, ib.
Hampden, John, refuses, in 1636, to pay the illegal assessment of Ship Money, 430; contests the right in the Exchequer Court, ib.; difference of the judges, but ultimate decision against him, 431; increased importance of, after the trial. ib.; sent as commissioner to attend the king on his visit to Scotland in 1641, 442; attempted to be seized by the king on Jan. 3, 1642, 447; is recalled when about to attack the royal army, 457; takes an active part in the siege of Reading, and urges Essex to attack Oxford, 459; and to concentrate his forces, ib.; is wounded at Chalgrove Field, ib.; dies June, 1643, ib.; character of, described by Clarendon, 460
Hampden clubs for parliamentary reform, 1121
Hanau, battle of, 1813, 1090
Hancock, John, proscribed by Gage, 875
Handel, statue of, by Roubiliac, 756
Hanover, George, elector of. See George I.
Hanover, treaty of, Sept. 3, 1725, 733, 778
Hansard and Stockdale, case of, 1240
Hanway, Jonas, his philanthropy; the first to use an umbrella in London, 946
Harcourt, sir S., conducts Sacheverel's defence, 1710, 721; lord chancellor, 725; his motions at Oxford's trial, 770
Harcourt, colonel, commands the Madras army, 1054
Hardicanute, accession of, in 1039, 49; tyranny, dissolutenes, and death of, in 1042, ib.
Hardinge, sir Henry, secretary at war, 1828, 1176; secretary for Ireland, 1215; governor-general of India, 1268, 1280; his courtesy towards sir H. Gough, ib.; shares with him the gaining of the Ferozeshah victory, ib.
Hardware trade, temp. William and Anne, 606
Hardwick, architect of Marylebone church, 1144
Hardwicke, Philip York, earl of, chancellor 1737-1756, 824, 865; introduces the Marriage bill, 1753, 824; retires from his office, 1756, 832; negotiates with Newcastle and Pitt, 833; prepares George III.'s first speech in parliament, 841; speech on the independence of the judges, 1761, 842
Hardy, sir C., commands a fleet; tactics, 887
Hardy, captain, present at the battle of Copenhagen, 1037; and at Nelson's death at Trafalgar, 1805, 1051
Hardy, Thomas, trial of, for high treason, Oct., 1794, 1003; Erskine's defence, ib.; acquittal of, ib.
Hare, one of the conspirators against William's life, 1696, 664
Hargreaves, James, completes his spinning-jenny, 1767, 925; how he discovered it, ib.; mobbed and ill-used, ib.
Harlay, president of the French parliament, fails in obtaining peace from the Dutch, 660; represents France at the Ryswick congress, 668
Harley. See Oxford, earl of.
Harlow, his painting, 1146
Harold succeeds Canute as king of Mercia and Northumbria, in 1035, 49; seduces Alfred, son of Ethelred, to land in England, and puts him to death, ib.; death of, in 1039, ib.
Harold, son of earl Godwin, banished with his father, 51; they return, and are favorably received by the inhabitants of London and Southwark, 52; restored to their dignities and possessions by the Witan, ib.; conduct and character of, during the reign of Edward, 53; sets out for Normandy, but is wrecked, made a prisoner by the earl of Ponthieu, but released by the interference of William of Normandy, ib.; assists William in his war against the duke of Brittany, ib.; swears to support William in his claims to the throne of England, ib.; returns to England, and suppresses an insurrection in Northumbria, 54; marries, 54; the crown of England bestowed on him by the Witan in Sept. 1066, ib.; defeats his brother Tostig and the Norwegians, 55; is himself defeated and slain at Hastings in Oct., 1066, ib.; buried at Waltham Abbey, ib.
Harrington, earl of, English ambassador at Spain, 770
Harris. See Malmesbury, earl of.
Harris conspired against William's life, 1696, 664
Harris, general, commands an Indian army; enters the Mysore territory, 1029
Harrison improves the spinning wheel, 924
Harrison arrested at a Reform meeting, 1819, 1132
Harrowby, earl of, foreign secretary of state, 1804, 1325; president of the council, 1148; Cato-street conspiracy revealed to, by Hidon and Dwyer, 1149; succeeded as president by the duke of Portland, 1167; his partial advocacy of the Reform bill of 1832, 1196
Harwich, a great port of the eastern coast; vicissitudes of its condition in the 18th century, 612
Hastings, battle of, Oct. 13, 1066, 55; obstinate resistance of the Saxons at, ib.
Hastings, marquis of. See Moira, lord.
Hastings, Warren, first governor-general of India, 869, 948; previous career and conduct as governor of Bengal; nefarious bargains with the nabob of Oude, ib.; opposition towards, by the Indian council, ib., accused upon a charge of corruption by Nuncomar and others, ib.; disputes with Francis; Clavering illegally assumes the governor-generalship on the false announcement of his having resigned, 949; reappointed at the expiration of his five years' term, ib.; makes war against the Mahrattas, ib.; duels with Francis, and quarrels with Impey, ib.; pressed for money, 950; lays Cheyte Sing, the rajah of Benares, under heavy contributions; arrests him for neglect of payment, ib.; a native insurrection compels him to release the rajah and quit the city; his heavy exactions from the nabobs and begums of Oude, ib.; his defense of his conduct in this case, ib.; concludes peace with Tippoo Saib; his administration ceases, 1785, 951; acquitted of all the charges brought against him, 1794, 1008; examined before a committee of the House of Commons on Indian affairs, 1813, 1169
Haughton, John, prior of the Charter House, with his brethren, refuses to take the oath of supremacy to Henry VIII., 257; he is tried and executed, ib.
Havannah, conquest of the, 1762, 845
Haversham, lord, moves for inviting the princess Sophia to England, 705; his remarks on the Scotch, 708; denounces the naval miscarriages of 1707, 714
Havre bombarded by the British, 1694, 818
Hawke, admiral, sir E., defeats the French fleet off Belle Isle, Oct. 14, 1747, 819; captures some French merchantmen, 1755, 829; supersedes Byng in the command of the fleet sent against the French, 1756, 830; sent out on an expedition against Rochefort; quarrels with Mordaunt, and nothing is done, 836; driven, by stormy weather, from before Brest, 839; attacks the French fleet in Quiberon Bay, Sept. 20, 1759, and gains a victory; intrepid conduct in the battle, ib.
Hawkesbury, lord. See Liverpool, earl of.
Hawkesmoor, his architectural works, 755
Hawley, general, left in command of the English troops in Scotland by the duke of Cumberland, 1745, 813; marches through Linlithgow to Falkirk; his contempt for the "undisciplined rabble," ib.; he engages with them at Falkirk, Jan. 17, 1746; and is disgracefully defeated, ib.; his retreat; causes several officers and soldiers to be tried by court-martial; two soldiers are shot, 814
Hay, James, earl of Carlisle, lavish extravagance of king James towards, 406; Clarendon's character of, ib.
Hayden, count de, a Russian rear-admiral; present at the battle of Navarino, 1827, 1173
Haydon, his paintings, 1146
Hazlitt, William, character of his essays, 1141
Head, sir Francis, governor of Canada; orders the "Caroline" to be burnt; repels the insurgents attacking Toronto, 1233
Healey, Joseph, a reformer; tried and imprisoned, 1820, 1150
Hearth money, 601
Hemskerk, Dutch painter; patronized by William III., 757
Hengist and Horsa, landing of, in England, A.D. 449, 20
Henley. See Northington.
Henrietta Maria, advice of, to Charles, concerning Rupert, 455; letter of, to Charles, ib.; lands at Burlington with an army, 458; letter of, to Charles, ib.; warning of, to her husband, ib.; joins him, 460; her character, ib.; enters Stratford-upon-Avon, and sleeps in Shakspere's house, ib.; meets Charles on his first battle-field, ib.; conduct of, 463; goes to Exeter, 465; gives birth to a princess there, while being besieged by Essex, ib.; flies to France, ib.; condition of, at the Louvre, 501
Henriot, death of, 1794, 1005
Henry of Huntingdon, his account of the invasion of the Northmen or Danes, 25
Henry, surnamed Beau-Clerc, knighted in 1086, 65; is bequeathed 5000 pounds of silver by his father, ib.; assists his brother, duke Robert, at the siege of Rouen, and kills Conan, 66; becomes possessed of Mount St. Michael, and maintains a siege against his two brothers, 67; hastens to England and seizes on the crown treasures on the death of his brother William in 1100, 69; is crowned, ib.; publishes a charter of liberties, ib.; finds the necessity of English support against the Norman barons, 70; reforms effected by, ib.; marriage of, with Matilda, the niece of Edgar Atheling, ib.; induces his brother Robert to relinquish his claim to the crown, to establish which he had invaded England, ib.; subdues many of the disaffected barons, 70; quarrels with his brother for protecting Robert de Belèsme, 71; fosters the disaffection of the barons in Normandy against Robert, ib.; invades Normandy in 1105, ib.; wins the battle of Tenchebrai, and takes Robert prisoner, ib.; the son of Robert is patronized by Louis of France, a war takes place, and the battle of Noyon is fought in 1119, ib.; devastation of Normandy, 72; death of Matilda in 1118, ib.; marriage of his son William the Atheling, ib.; inhumanity of, towards the children of his natural daughter Juliana, wife of Eustace de Breteuil, ib.; wreck of the Blanche-Nef, and the death of his son William, ib.; second marriage of Henry in 1121 with Adelaide, ib.; declares his daughter Matilda, the widow of the emperor of Germany, his heir, in 1126, ib.; dies on Nov. 30, 1135, 73
Henry II., born in 1133, ib., 79; early career and marriage of, ib.; is acknowledged successor to Stephen, 80; crowned on Dec. 19, 1154, ib.; beneficial vigor of, in the establishment of order, ib.; makes Thomas à Becket chancellor and his chief adviser in 1157, 81; character of, ib.; sends Becket as ambassador to France, to contract a marriage between his eldest son and a daughter of the French king, ib.; declines to surrender Maine and Anjou to his brother Geoffrey, and gives him a pension instead, 82; compels Malcolm of Scotland to surrender Cumberland and Northumberland, ib.; invades Wales, and is unsuccessful, ib.; continental wars of, 83; creates Becket archbishop of Canterbury, ib.; quarrels with him as to his claim for the resumption of church property, 84; state of secular law and establishment of law courts, ib.; evils of the clerical exemption from the secular law, 85; Constitutions of Clarendon passed to enforce the secular law, ib.; the pope refuses to confirm them, 86; Becket supports the pope's decision, is arraigned as a traitor, is found guilty, ib.; and flies from England, ib.; Henry convenes a synod at Oxford in

1166, which orders the persecution of heretics, ib.; meets Becket at Touraine in 1170, and a hollow peace is effected, 87; Becket returns to England and is murdered, ib.; contrast of the characters of Henry and Becket, 88; first landing of the Anglo-Normans in Ireland in 1169, ib.; commands Strongbow to return to England, who obeys, ib.; goes himself to Ireland, and receives homage as feudal superior, 89; swears his innocence of Becket's murder before the pope's legate, and is absolved, ib.; facts of the story of Rosamund Clifford, ib.; rebellion of his sons, ib.; imprisons his wife Eleanor, ib.; insurrection in England repressed, ib.; William king of Scotland invades England, ib.; and is taken prisoner, 90; is liberated on doing homage to Henry, ib.; Henry does penance at the tomb of Becket, ib.; is reconciled to his eldest son, ib.; important reforms in the administration of justice effected by, ib.; mission from Jerusalem in 1185 to urge him to undertake its relief, ib.; resolves to take the cross in 1188, ib.; his sons Richard and John join the king of France in a war against him, ib.; dies on July 6, 1189, 91

Henry III. succeeds his father John on Oct. 18, 1216, when only ten years old, and is crowned at Gloucester, Oct. 28, 106; the battle of Lincoln gained against the French army of prince Louis, ib.; the regent Pembroke dies in 1219, and is succeeded by Hubert de Burgh, ib.; redress of grievances obtained by the right preserved by the people to grant supplies, 107; the Charters confirmed for a third time in 1225 in order to obtain supplies, ib.; declares himself of age in 1227, and asserts his right to govern of his "own free will," ib.; denial of this doctrine by one of his judges, ib.; quarrels with De Burgh, but together with the pope continues his exactions on the people, ib.; satirical and political songs, ib.; marries Eleanor, daughter of the count of Provence, in 1236, 108; extortions of, ib.; tyrannical exercise of the privilege of purveyance, ib.; sale of justice by, ib.; oppressions on the Londoners by, ib.; disaffection occasioned, ib.; repeated violation of the Charters by, 109; swears again to observe them, ib.; ill success of his foreign enterprises, ib.; condition of the nation under, 110; value of money, and fluctuating prices of provisions in the reign of, ib.; taxation of the industry of the people by, and resistance made to by the clergy, ib.; famine in 1258, ib.; parliament meets at Westminster, and demands the appointment of a commission, 111; the "Provisions of Oxford," ib.; obtains a dispensation from the pope to violate them, ib.; a civil war takes place, headed by Simon de Montford, ib.; prince Edward commands for his father against the barons, ib.; taken prisoner at the battle of Lewes, 112; the queen collects troops abroad, but does not attempt to land in England, ib.; burgesses summoned to parliament in 1264, by Simon de Montford, ib.; released by the issue of the battle of Evesham, in which De Montford is slain, ib.; Award of Kenilworth, and efforts of the parliament to restore tranquillity, 113; continued resistance of Simon de Montford the younger, ib.; dies, Nov. 16, 1272, 114

Henry IV. [see Hereford, duke of] ascends the throne, Sept. 30, 1399, 157; confederacy of nobles against, 159; revolt of the Welsh under Owen Glendower against, 160; is repulsed by Glendower, ib.; accused of the murder of Richard II., ib.; persecutes the followers of Wycliffe, 161; statute "de heretico comburendo" passed for the suppression of the Lollards, ib.; burning William Salter, ib.; the Commons pray for repeal of the statute, and he rejects the prayer, ib.; signs a warrant for burning John Badby, ib.; France and Scotland refuse to acknowledge him as king, ib.; war with Scotland, and battle of Homildon Hill on Sept. 14, 1402, 162; revolt of the Percies against, and its probable causes, ib.; battle of Hateley Field at Shrewsbury, ib.; politic clemency of Henry, ib.; hostilities with France, ib.; revolt of Archbishop Scrope and others, ib.; suppression of the revolt, and execution of Scrope and Nottingham, 163; continued struggle of the Welsh under Owen Glendower, ib.; invades France, ib.; dies, Mar. 20, 1413, ib.

Henry V., knighted by Richard II. in 1399, when eleven years old, 156; commands in Wales against the insurgents in 1402, 160; joins his father to oppose the revolt of the Percies, 162; is wounded at the battle of Shrewsbury, ib.; obtains a victory over the Welsh in 1405, ib.; early character of, 163; made captain of Calais, ib.; proclaimed king, Mar. 21, 1413, ib.; clemency of, ib.; alleged conspiracy of the Lollards, headed by sir John Oldcastle in 1414, against, 164; suppressed, and all the conspirators pardoned except Oldcastle and eleven others, ib.; claims the crown of France and the restoration of the old English possessions, ib.; injustice of the demands, ib.; preparations for the invasion of France, ib.; conspiracy of the earl of Cambridge, lord Scrope, and others against, 165; lands near Harfleur, Aug. 14, 1415, ib.; nature of the forces, ib.; siege of Harfleur, ib.; sickness of the English army, ib.; march from Harfleur, ib.; passage of the Somme, 166; description of Agincourt and its locality, ib.; battle of Agincourt on Oct. 25, 1415, 167; rejoicings in London on arrival of the news, ib.; triumphant entry of, into London, ib.; the factions in France a cause of his success, 168; second expedition against France in 1417, ib.; takes Caen, ib.; besieges Rouen, ib.; it surrenders after severe famine, ib.; ineffectual conferences at Meulan, ib.; the duke of Burgundy murdered at an interview with the Dauphin at Montereau, 169; concludes a treaty with Philip, the young duke of Burgundy, ib.; and the treaty of Troyes with Charles VI. on May 21, 1420, by which he was to marry Katherine and be recognized as heir to the crown on the death of Charles, ib.; Henry and his queen return to England, ib.; ill effects of his conquests on the condition of England, ib.; the duke of Clarence killed, 170; releases James I. of Scotland, who accompanies him in his expedition to France in 1421, ib.; besieges and takes Meaux, ib.; dies, Aug. 31, 1422, ib.; estimate of the character of, ib.

Henry VI., born Dec. 6, 1421, 170; succeeds his father, Sept. 1, 1422, and the dukes of Bedford and Gloucester are appointed Protectors by the parliament, 171; Charles VI. of France dies, and Henry is proclaimed king, ib.; victory of Verneuil gained by the duke of Bedford, ib.; tutelage of, under the earl of Warwick, 172; apparent severity of Warwick's discipline, ib.; siege of Orleans commenced, ib.; Orleans is relieved by Joan of Arc, 173; is crowned king of France, at Paris, on Dec. 17, 1430, 175; death of the duke of Bedford, 176; continued disgraces and losses in France, ib.; marries Margaret of Anjou, and surrenders or loses all the possessions in France, ib.; the duke of Suffolk takes the side of cardinal Beaufort against the duke of Gloucester, 177; Gloucester and Beaufort die, ib.; rise of the house of York, 188; power of the duke of Suffolk, 188; impeachment and banishment of Suffolk, ib.; his murder, 188; insurrection of Jack Cade in 1450, ib.; other revolts in England, 189; unpopularity of Somerset, on account of his losses in France, ib.; Henry becomes imbecile, ib.; intrigues of the queen and Somerset to secure their power, 190; the duke of York elected Protector by the peers, ib.; the king recovers his faculties, ib.; selfishness of the barons, ib.; Somerset is released from arrest, and York superseded, ib.; York marches towards London, ib.; first battle of St. Albans, on May 22, 1455, and death of Somerset, ib.; is conducted to London by York, ib.; a parliament summoned, and York made Protector a second time, ib.; the parliament not revolutionary, but influenced by a desire to remove oppressive taxation, 191; the Protectorate superseded in 1456, ib.; attempts to reconcile the Lancastrian and York factions, ib.; commencement of the Civil War, in 1459, ib.; battle of Blore Heath, ib.; is taken prisoner at the battle of Northampton, in 1460, ib.; a parliament assembled at Westminster, and York claims the crown, 192; the peers effect a compromise that York should succeed on Henry's death, ib.; the queen resists the compromise, and assembles an army, ib.; battle of Wakefield, and death of York, Dec. 31, 1460, ib.; Margaret advances to London, ib.; defeats Warwick in the second battle of St. Albans, and recaptures the king, 193; Henry is deposed by parliament, and Edward IV. proclaimed, March 4, 1461, ib.; battle of Towton, ib.; attainted in parliament for the death of Richard, duke of York, 194; renewed attempt of queen Margarer, in 1462, repulsed, ib.; story of her throwing herself and son on the protection of an outlaw, ib.; renewed attempt against Edward, and loss of the battle of Hexham, ib.; the king is recaptured, and committed to the Tower, and Margaret retires to the Continent, 196; Margaret is reconciled to Warwick, 197; invades England with Warwick and Clarence, Edward is deserted, and Henry restored, ib.; Warwick and Clarence appointed Protectors, ib.; is taken prisoner at the battle of Barnet, and recommitted to the Tower, 198; queen Margaret lands at Weymouth, assembles forces, and is defeated at the battle of Tewkesbury, ib.; she is taken prisoner, 199; death of Henry, in May, 1471, and doubts as to the duke of Gloucester having been his murderer, ib.

Henry VII. (earl of Richmond) taken by his uncle, the earl of Pembroke, to Brittany, after the battle of Tewkesbury, 200; the duke of Buckingham and bishop Morton put themselves in communication with, previous to their revolt against Richard III., 208; assembles soldiers for a landing in England, ib.; is prevented by a storm, ib.; leaves Brittany to avoid being delivered up to Richard, 210; receives some forces from the king of France, and lands at Milford Haven, Aug. 7, 1485, 210; battle of Bosworth, Aug. 22, 211; crowned on the field of Bosworth, ib.; parliamentary title to the crown given him, 212; marries Elizabeth of York, ib.; suitableness of the character of, for his times, ib.; aversion of, to the House of York, ib.; imprisons the earl of Warwick, son of George, duke of Clarence, ib.; insurrection against, headed by Lambert Simnel, who pretended to be earl of Warwick, ib.; suppression of the insurrection at the battle of Stoke, on June 4, 1487, 213; alleged harsh treatment of the dowager queen Elizabeth, ib.; exhibits the real earl of Warwick to the people, ib.; timid foreign policy of, 214; allows France to annex Brittany, ib.; insurrection in the northern counties on account of oppressive taxation, ib.; the earl of Northumberland killed, but the insurrection suppressed by the earl of Surrey, ib.; invades France, in 1492, and invests Boulogne, ib.; concludes a hurried peace on receiving a large sum of money from Charles VIII., ib.; probable motives for the peace, ib.; demands the surrender of Perkin Warbeck from the duke of Burgundy, but compliance is evaded, 216; execution of sir William Stanley, and others, for corresponding with Warbeck, ib.; concludes a treaty with the duke of Burgundy, by which Warbeck is compelled to go to Scotland, 217; statute of treason passed, providing that subjects are bound to serve the king de facto, ib.; employment of spies by, ib.; letters of Bothwell to, describing the position of Warbeck in Scotland in 1496, ib.; is attacked by Warbeck and James IV., but they are compelled to retreat, 218; insurrection in Cornwall against renewed taxation, ib.; suppressed, ib.; concludes a truce with James IV., by which Warbeck is forced to leave Scotland, ib.; Warbeck lands in Cornwall, attacks Exeter, and is repulsed, ib.; is deserted, and flies to sanctuary at Beaulieu Abbey, ib.; his treatment of Warbeck after his surrender, 219; Warbeck attempts to escape, is retaken, and confined in the Tower, 219; exhibited to the public, and reads his confession, ib.; the earl of Warwick accused of treason, and of joining in conspiracy with Warbeck, ib.; they are both executed in Nov., 1499, ib.; commits Edward de la Pole, earl of Suffolk, to the Tower, 220; marries his eldest son, Arthur, to the princess Catherine of Arragon, in 1501, ib.; account of the royal court, ib.; his fondness for jewels, ib.; erection of his palace at Richmond, and chapel at Westminster, ib.; encouragement by, of Cabot and his sons, ib.; passion of, for wealth, ib.; concludes a treaty with Scotland, and gives Margaret, his daughter, in marriage to James IV., in 1502, 221; his son Arthur dies, ib.; marries Arthur's widow to his next son, Henry, after obtaining the pope's dispensation, ib.; his queen Elizabeth dies, ib.; seeks for an advantageous marriage for himself, ib.; dies on April 21, 1509, ib.; extortions of Henry through the agency of Empson and Dudley, ib.; depression of the aristocracy by, ib.; originates the Star-chamber court, ib.; few parliaments held during his reign, 222; progress of maritime discovery in his reign, 224

Henry VIII. succeeds his father, April 22, 1509, 226; Empson and Dudley convicted and executed for extortion, ib.; marriage of, to Catherine of Arragon, ib.; remarkable modification of the coronation oath by, ib.; skill of, in music, 227; interferes in favor of pope Julius II. in a war against France, ib.; revives the claim to the crown of France, ib.; claims a feudal superiority over Scotland, ib.; retains his sister's legacy, in order to compel her husband, James IV. of Scotland, to abandon the French alliance, 228; an army sent to Spain to invade Guienne, ib.; Wolsey, the almoner, acts as war-minister, ib.; rise of Wolsey, ib.; the army returns from Spain without effecting its object, ib.; naval warfare and mutual ravages on the coasts of France and England, ib.; despotic measures of, for the security of the coast, 229; expedition of, to France, in 1513, ib.; ostentatious display of magnificence, ib.; the emperor Maximilian takes military service under him, ib.; wins the Battle of the Spurs, ib.; Terouenne and Tournay surrender, ib.; war with Scotland, ib.; battle of Flodden Field, on Sept. 9, 1513, and death of James IV. of Scotland, 230; ravages on both sides of the Scottish border, ib.; attack by the French on Brighton, ib.; peace with France, and marriage of the princess Mary to Louis XII., ib.; death of Louis, and accession of Francis, 231; Henry asserts the rights of the crown against the claims of the clergy, 232; desires to be chosen emperor, and sends Pace on a mission to Germany, ib.; Henry and Francis meet in the Field of the Cloth of Gold, 233; meets Charles V. at Gravelines, 234; conviction and execution of John Stafford, duke of Buckingham, ib.; increasing despotism and cruelty of, ib.; writes a book against Luther, "On the Seven Sacraments," 235; Leo X. bestows on him, in 1521, the title of "Defender of the Faith," ib.; concludes a league with Charles V. against Francis I., ib.; arbitrary measures of, to raise money, 236; riot of the Londoners on "Evil May Day" against the Flemish traders, ib.; parliament summoned, in 1523, and earnest debate on the granting of a subsidy, ib.; opposes the endeavor of his sister Margaret to obtain a divorce, ib.; Scotland is invaded to enforce the removal of the duke of Albany from the regency, 237; the earl of Surrey destroys Jedburgh, and ravages the borders, ib.; the duke of Suffolk sent with an army to France, in 1523, which devastates the country, but has no other success, 238; resistance of the people to taxes levied without the authority of parliament, ib.; insurrection in Suffolk occasioned by, ib.; the levy revoked, and the insurgents pardoned, 239; his opinion as to the war between the emperor and the pope, in 1527, 240; first agitation of the question of divorce from queen Catherine, 241; sends supplies to the pope while in confinement, ib.; growing attachment of, to Anne Boleyn, 242; war declared against the emperor, ib.; the pope sends a commission for Wolsey and cardinal Campegius to inquire into the validity of his marriage, 243; interview of the legates with Catherine, ib.; unpopularity of the divorce with the people, 244; opening of the legatine commission on June 18, 1529, ib.; Catherine refuses to acknowledge its jurisdiction, ib.; is declared contumacious, ib.; Wolsey is deprived of the Great Seal, on Oct. 17, 1529, 245; creates sir Thomas More chancellor, ib.; the parliament passes statutes against ecclesiastical abuses, 246; opposition of the clergy to the reading of the scriptures, 246; the king is released from his debts by act of parliament, 247; Christmas amusements of, and large sums lost by, at gambling, ib.; sends the earl of Wiltshire and Cranmer to obtain the pope's consent to the dissolution of his marriage, 248; opinions of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge in favor of the divorce, ib.; hypocrisy of the plea of conscience for desiring a divorce, ib.; grants a general pardon to Wolsey, who retires to his see, 249; causes him to be arrested for high treason, ib.; unfeeling conduct of, on hearing of Wolsey's death, 250; commencement of the Reformation in England, ib.; prosecutes the clergy for having submitted to Wolsey as legate, ib.; fears being cited to Rome on the divorce cause, ib.; threatens the pope with the loss of his power in England, but persecutes reformers, 251; requires Frith and Tyndale to renounce their errors and to return from the Netherlands to England, ib.; the payment of annates to the see of Rome abolished by, in 1533, ib.; increased cruelty and tyranny of, after the death of Wolsey, ib.; severe laws passed against poisoners, gypsies, vagabonds, and for punishing wanderers by death on a third offense, ib.; goes with Anne Boleyn to France, in 1532, to meet Francis, 252; marries Anne Boleyn, 253; Cranmer pronounces sentence of divorce, on May 23, 1533, 253; description of the coronation of Anne Boleyn, by Cranmer, ib.; Catherine steadily refuses to renounce the title of queen, 244; princess Elizabeth born, Sept. 7, 1533, 254; statute forbidding appeals to Rome passed, ib.; statute for the punishment of heresy, 255; Frith burnt, ib.; statute vesting the succession in the issue of Queen Anne, ib.; the Holy Maid of Kent and her visions, ib.; she is tried and executed for treason, ib.; Fisher, bishop of Rochester, and sir Thomas More, included in the charge, ib.; they are sent to the Tower for refusing to swear to the illegality of the king's first marriage, 256; Act of Supremacy passed, ib.; Act of Succession passed, with new definitions of treason, ib.; execution of the monks of the Charterhouse for refusing to take the oath of supremacy, 257; Hollanders burnt for heresy, 258; the act allowing the free importation of books repealed, ib.; Fisher and More tried for treason, convicted, and executed, ib.; Cromwell appointed vicegerent, 259; visitation of the monasteries, in 1535, ib.; statute for the dissolution of the smaller monasteries, 260; statutes passed for the regulation of trade and prices, ib; death of Catherine on Jan. 7, 1536, ib.; Anne Boleyn suspected of heresy, 261; May-day at Greenwich, 1536, ib.; Anne Boleyn sent to the Tower, ib.; her letter to the king, 262, 265; Cranmer's letter to the king, 262; true bills found against Anne Boleyn and others, 263; her trial and execution on May 19, 1536, ib.; her dying speech, ib.; marriage of Henry to Jane Seymour, on May 20, ib.; doubts as to the guilt of Anne, 264; new law of succession passed, 265; state of Ireland, 266; rebellion of the Fitzgeralds in Ireland in 1534, 267; it is suppressed, and the Fitzgeralds executed, in violation of a promise given, 268; assumes the title of king of Ireland, 269; proclamation of, against holidays, 270; insurrection in Lincolnshire in 1536, occasioned by the proclamation and the suppression of monastic establishments, ib.; rude answer of, to the Lincolnshire petitioners, ib.; the insurrection suppressed, 271; insurrection in Yorkshire, headed by Robert Aske, ib.; crafty instructions of, to the duke of Norfolk, as to treating with the insurgents, ib.; dissatisfaction of, with Norfolk, for granting a free pardon on their dispersion, ib.; renewal of the insurrection in Yorkshire in 1537, ib.; the insurgents repulsed from Carlisle and Hull, martial law proclaimed, and many hung, ib.; execution of many of the leaders in London, 272; orders martial law to be proclaimed, which is to apply to monks and canons that be faulty, ib.; executions at Windsor for sympathy with the insurgents of the North, ib.; birth of Edward VI., and death of queen Jane Seymour, ib.; negotiations abroad for a new wife, ib.; sanctions the printing of Coverdale's Bible, 273; disputes in Westminster Hall with John Lambert on the eucharist, ib.; Lambert is burnt, ib.; Act of 1539, for the dissolution of abbeys, ib.; assigns pensions to the abbots, monks, and others who surrender, 274; wasteful disposal of the possessions of the religious houses, 275; destruction of the buildings, ib.; subserviency of the parliament summoned in 1539, ib.; Acts passed for the dissolution of abbeys, and to enable Henry to found and endow bishoprics, 276; projected appropriations of the monastic revenues, and their subsequent misapplication, ib.; suppresses the hospital of the Knights of St. John, ib.; passing of the intolerant and atrocious statute of the Six Articles, in 1539, ib.; persecutions and executions under this statute, 277; preposterous claim of, to unlimited obedience, embodied in this statute, ib.; causes the De la Pole family to be arrested, on Reginald Pole having written against his divorce, 278; the aged countess of Salisbury, Pole's mother, executed in 1541, ib.; marries Anne of Cleves, ib.; dislikes her, 279; the marriage declared invalid, ib.; causes Cromwell to be arrested, ib.; and attainted of high treason, ib.; Cromwell is executed, July 28, 1540, and on the same day Henry marries Catherine Howard, 280; heretics burnt for affirming the legality of his marriage with Catherine of Arragon, and for denying his supremacy, ib.; the profligacy of Catherine Howard revealed to him by Cranmer, ib.; promises her life on confession, but breaks the promise, ib.; she is attainted and executed, Feb. 12, 1541, ib.; another new treason declared by the Act of attainder, 281; marries Catherine Parr, in July, 1543, ib.; endeavors to effect a marriage between his son Edward and Mary of Scotland, ib.; sends the earl of Hertford to Scotland, who ravages it, burns Leith, and other places, 282, 283; is opposed by cardinal Beaton in his claims to supremacy, and in his attempt on the independence of Scotland, ib.; sanctions a proposal to assassinate Beaton, ib.; invades France with great pomp, having obtained a subsidy and a second extinction of his debts from parliament, in 1544, ib.; besieges and takes Boulogne, ib.; wants funds for providing land defences against a projected invasion by France, 284; peace concluded with France and Scotland, ib.; continued persecution for heresies under Act of the Six Articles, 284, 285; relieves Cranmer from an accusation of heresy, ib.; Anne Askew and others burnt, ib.; queen Catherine Parr suspected of heresy, ib.; the duke of Norfolk and earl of Surrey arrested on charges of high treason, 286; Surrey beheaded, and Norfolk remitted for execution, but escapes owing to the king's death, ib.; death of Henry on Jan. 28, 1547, ib.

Henry IV., of France, succeeds to the throne in August, 1589, 382; English expedition sent in aid of, ib.; abjures the Protestant religion, 384; concludes a separate treaty with Spain, 388; sends Sully to congratulate James I. on his accession, 397; is assassinated in 1610; scheme of, for an European confederacy, ib.

Henry, Patrick, his early career, 850; his eloquence in opposing the Stamp act, 1765, ib.

Heptarchy, little interest afforded by the events of the, 23; incessant wars during the, ib.

Hereford, Henry duke of (afterwards Henry IV.), quarrel of, with the Duke of Norfolk, 156; is banished, ib.; his patrimony seized by Richard II., ib.; lands at Ravenspur, July 4, 1399, 157; interview of, with Richard II., ib.; entry of, with the captive Richard, into London, ib.; claims the crown, ib.; his hereditary pretensions, 159; superior right of Edmund Mortimer, the progenitor of the House of York, ib. See Henry IV.

Hereward heads an insurrection in 1072, in the Isle of Ely, 60; successes of, ib; is compelled to submit to William I., ib.; fate of, ib.

Hermann, general, defeated by the French and Dutch, 1799, 1031

Hero-worship, ancient tumuli, probable memorials of, 6

Herries, J. C., chancellor of the exchequer, 1173; quarrels with Huskisson, ib.; secretary at war, 1215

Herschell, sir William, discovered Uranus, 1781, 1141; his great telescope erected at Slough, Aug. 28, 1798, ib.

Hertford, Edward Seymour, earl of, commands the forces in the invasion of Scotland, and burns Leith, 282; ravages the southern counties, ib.; conceals for a time the will of Henry VIII., 301; raised to the office of Protector, by the executors of the will, and created Duke of Somerset, ib.; endeavors to enforce the treaty for the marriage of Edward VI. with the queen of Scotland, 302; invades Scotland, and proposes terms for an union, ib.; wins the battle of Pinkie and returns to London, 303; causes Henry VIII.'s statutes of treason and other arbitrary laws to be repealed, ib.; difficulties of the government of, arising from the circumstances of the times and his own character, 305; causes his brother, lord Thomas Seymour, to be attainted for treason, and signs the warrant for his execution, ib.; probable guilt of Seymour, and justification of Somerset, 306; evidence of Sharrington against Seymour, ib.; ineffectual endeavors of Somerset to redress grievances, ib.; proclamations against unreasonable prices and against inclosures, 307; insurrection in Cornwall and Devonshire against innovations in religion, ib.; suppressed at the battle of Cliff, near Exeter, ib.; insurrection of Ket, the tanner in Norfolk, against inclosures, 308; suppressed by the earl of Warwick at Mousehold-heath, 309; marriage of Mary of Scotland to the dauphin of France, and war declared with both those countries, ib.; successes of the Scotch, ib.; becomes obnoxious to the nobility from his protection of the rights of the poor, ib.; confederacy of the nobles, headed by Warwick, against, 310; issues a proclamation inviting the king's subjects to repair to Hampton Court, where Edward was, for the king's protection, ib.; fails to get the support of the army or to move the people to rise in his favor, ib.; removes Edward to Windsor, 311; lord Russell and the army join Warwick, ib.; is arrested, ib.; conveyed to the Tower, ib.; articles exhibited against, 312; the Protectorship is revoked, he is imprisoned till Feb. 6, 1550, and fined, ib.; attempts of, to re-establish his power, 314; is arrested and tried for high treason, ib.; acquitted of treason and found guilty of felony, ib.; is beheaded January, 22, 1551, ib.; character of, and his influence on the progress of the Reformation, 314

Hertford, lord, English ambassador at Paris, 849

Hervey, lord, vice-chamberlain, 1730, 781; duels with Pulteney; character of, 782; conversation of, with Walpole, on Caroline's death, 789

Hervey, colonel, advises Wellington to cease pursuing the enemy at Waterloo, 1107

Hesse, elector of, subsidied by England, 829

Hewlet, lady, her bequest; discussion as to the claimants thereof, 1271

Hexham, battle of, May 15, 1464, 195

Hicks, Mrs., hanged for witchcraft, 1716, 747

Hickson, an agent of the young Pretender; apprehended, 804

Hickson, his description of the evils of the poor-law system, 1210

Hidon, Thomas, reveals the Cato street conspiracy, 1149

High and Low Church, introduction of the distinction of, 626

Highlanders, description of the, by Cunningham, 630; government proceedings against the, 645 et seq.; their share in the rebellion of 1715, 761; description of the; the Black Watch, or 42d Regiment, 799; aid the rebellion of 1745, 802–805; costume of, early part of 18th century, ib.; their further operations in the rebellion of 1745, 1746, 807–809; drafted into the British army by Chatham, 832

Highs, Thomas, invents a machine similar to the "jenny," 924

Highwaymen, 18th century, 938

Hill, colonel, commands the garrison at Fort William, 1690, 645; his share in the Glencoe massacre, 646; declared not guilty by the Scotch parliament, 649

Hill, captain, murders Mountford, the player, 655

Hill, general, his struggle with Soult, Dec. 1813, 1091

Hill, Frederic, first inspector of Scotch prisons; their state according to his reports, 1221

Hill, sir G. F., vice-treasurer of Ireland, 1148

Hill, M. D., M.P. for Hull; description of Aguew's Sabbath Observance bill, 1204; history of public opinion on the question of counsel for prisoners by, 1220

Hill, Rowland, revolutionizes the routine of the Post Office, 1227; his proposed penny postage plan; opposition to it; it is tried and found completely successful, 1239

Hill, T. W., his remarks on Worcestershire potato cultivation, 957; engaged in the Birmingham riots, 1791, 978

Hillsborough, lord, secretary for the colonies, 1768–1772, 658; orders Bernard to rescind the resolution adopted by the Massachusetts Assembly, to oppose the Revenue act, 861; accused of garbling the council minutes; appoints lord Boutetort governor of Virginia, in room of sir J. Amherst, 862; secretary of state, 1779-1782, 1325

Hislop, sir Thomas, commands the army of the Deccan, 1169

Hispaniola. See San Domingo.

Historian, province of the, 2; duties of, ib.

History, specimens of the false statements of, 1108; differently treated by our leading historians, Macaulay, Hallam, and Carlisle, 1255–1256

Hoadley, Dr. Benjamin; his treatises burnt by the mob, 721; bishop of Salisbury; urges Walpole to give the Dissenters promise of future relief, 781

Hobhouse, his objection to the income tax, 1022

Hobhouse, sir J. C., secretary of state, 1205; president of the board of control, 1224; his speech, moving a vote of thanks to the Indian army, 1248

Hoche, sergeant, commands a detachment of French guards in the riots, 1789, 965; his exploits at Quiberon, 1009; appointed to command the expedition to Ireland, 1796, 1012

Hofer, Andrew, leader of the Tyrolese insurrectionists, 1809, 1073; his exploits, 1074; capture and death, Feb. 20, 1810, ib.

Hofland, a river scenery painter, 1147

Hogarth, William, the regenerator of modern English painting, 757, 930; his character as a painter, 757; his pictures a delineation of cotemporary manners, ib.; dramatic character of his paintings and prints, ib.; the life of the streets as shown in his works, 758; profligacy among the high and low ranks of society, ib.; manners of the time as delineated in his pictures of the scene at the cock-pit and at the gaming-house, ib.; that of the rake's levee, ib.; marriage-a-la-mode, 759; in his election prints, ib.; in his pictures of "The Sleeping Congregation," ib.; and "Credulity, Superstition, and Fanaticism, a medley," ib.; attacked by Wilkes in the "North Briton," 848; his caricature portrait of Wilkes; attacked by Churchill, ib.; whose portrait he publishes, ib.

Hohenlinden, battle of, Dec. 3, 1880, 1035

Hohenlohe, prince of, commands the Prussians at Jena, 1061

Holbein, Hans, productions of, under Henry VIII., 300

Holbourne, admiral, shrinks from attacking the French, 836

Holcroft, Thomas, remarks on Hardy's trial, 1002

Holderness, earl of, secretary of state, 1751–1761, 833, 839, 865; removed from this office, 1761, 842

Holkar, a Mahratta chief, 1053; war declared against, 1804; subdued by the British, 1055

Holkar the younger aids the Pindarees in their war with the British, 1169; defeated Dec. 21, 1817, at the battle of Meehudpore; peace concluded with the British, Jan. 6, 1818, 1170

Holland, Henry, his architectural designs, 1143

Holland, lord. See Fox, Henry.

Holland, lord, remarks on lord North's conduct, 1781, 898; his account of North's announcement of his resignation, 1782, 900; remarks on the income tax, 1022; a member of the Grenville ministry, 1061; defends himself for defending lord Grey, 1827, 1166; chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, 1187–1224

Holland annexed to France, 1810, 1081

Holmes, major, concerned in the assassination plot, 1696, 664

Holstein Beck, prince of, takes an active part in the battle of Blenheim, 1704, 698

Holwell, his account of the tragedy of the Black Hole, 834

Holy Alliance. See Alliance.

Home, John, his estimate of the Highland forces, 1745, 803; his description of the battle of Falkirk, 813

Homildon-Hill, battle of, Sept. 14, 1402, 162

Hompesch, general, pursues the Gallo-Bavarian army after their defeat at Blenheim, 698

Hone, William, prosecuted for libel, 1125; his first, 1126; second, ib.; and third trials, ib.; in all he is found not guilty

Hood, captain, present at the battle of the Nile, 1798, 1021

Hood, sir Samuel, unable to hinder De Grasse's operations, 1781, 895; joined by Rodney, 1782, 900; compels the "Ville de Paris" to strike, 901; captures four French vessels, ib.; sails against Toulon; negotiates with the inhabitants, 998; the fleet and port are surrendered on his agreeing to support them in the restoration of peace and monarchy, ib.; compelled to evacuate the place by the French, 999

Hood, Thomas, his poetry, 1259

Hook, Theodore, his novels, 1254

Hooke, colonel, a Jacobite agent; offers French assistance to the Cameronians, and other Scots disaffected toward the government, 714

Hooper, bishop of Gloucester, martyrdom of, 327

Hope, sir John, retreats through Spain, 1808, 1070; succeeds to the command of the army on Moore's death; embarks his troops, 1071; captures Balitz and the South Beveland, 1809, 1075; battles against Soult, 1813, 1091

Horner, Francis, remarks of, on the reduction of the circulating medium, 1816, 1116; died Feb. 6, 1817, 1127

Horton, Mrs., her connection and marriage with the duke of Cumberland, 868

Hosier, admiral, blockades Porto Bello, 778

Hospitals, London medical, dates of the opening of the, 946

Houchard, general in the French army; defeats the Austrians near Hondscoote, Sept. 8, 1793, 997; the convention puts him to death for not stopping the English in their retreat from Dunkirk, ib.

Howard, Mrs. See Suffolk, lady.

Howard, John, high'sheriff of Bedfordshire; his philanthropical effort to remedy the state of prisoners; publication of his book "on prisons," 1777, 946
Howe, Richard, earl; captain; captures two French vessels, 1755, 829; takes Aix, 1757, 836; reinforces the troops in America; appointed one of the British commissioners, 875; employs conciliatory measures toward the Americans, 879; his negotiations with Franklin and others, 880; sails to Newport; hindered from engaging the enemy by a storm, 886; admiral; gives chase to the Brest fleet, 1004; gains a victory over it, June 1, 1794, 1016; his personal visit to the fleet quells the mutiny at Spithead, 1016
Howe, major-general sir William, engaged in the battle of Breed's, or Bunker's hill, 1775, 876; leads an attack against the Americans, ib.; left in command of the British American army, ib.; leaves Halifax; lands in Staten Island, 1776, 878; his letter to George Washington, Esq., refused, 879; gains the battle of Brooklyn, ib.; his further operations against Washington, 1776, ib.; evacuates Jersey; his strategic movements, 1777, 882
Howe, lord, slain at the head of his regiment in America, 1758, 837
Hudson's Bay Company, chartered 1670, 614
Huggins, John, reprimanded for selling the wardenship of the Fleet, 782
Hull, port of, and trades, 610; whale fishery carried on by the vessels of, ib.; obtains parliamentary representation, 1832, 1200
Hull, general, capitulates to Brock, 1812, 1097
Hullin aids in attacking the Bastile, 1789, 963
Humbert, general, commands the French force sent to Ireland, 1025; which surrenders to general Lake, Sept. 8, 1799, 1025
Hume, erroneous statement of, as to the condition of Britain in the third century, 12
Hume, M.P. for Montrose; his complaints on behalf of queen Caroline, 1150; moves the issuing of a proclamation for her coronation, 1154; his efforts to promote the recognition of true principles of financial economy, 1175; votes for Littleton as speaker, 1202; reviews the work of the session of 1830, 1219
"Hundred Days," account of the crisis called the, 1102, 1104, 1197
Hunne, Richard, persecution of, for heresy and being possessed of Wycliffe's books, 277; violent death of, ib.; the bishop of London's chancellor accused of his murder, ib.
Hunt, Henry, attends a meeting of the Hampden club in London, 1121; and also the Spa-field meeting, 1122; fails in being returned M.P. for Westminster, 1129; presides over a reform meeting in Smithfield, 1131; takes the chair at the great reform meeting at Manchester, 1819, 1132; he is arrested and tried, 1133; found guilty and punished, 1150
Hunt, Leigh, his "Story of Rimini" published, 1816, 1138; charm and pleasantness of his essays, 1141
Hunt, Robert, his evidence of the assassination plot, 1696, 664
Huskisson, William, present at the taking of the Bastile; defends his conduct in the French revolution. 966; praises Louis's firmness in the insurrection of the 20th of June, 1792, 978; first commissioner of Woods and Forests and Land revenues, 1148; president of the board of trade, January, 1823; obtains a seat in the Cabinet, 1825; develops a system of commercial policy on a broad and liberal basis; his reciprocity of duties bill passed, July 4, 1823, 1160; clamor against his proposal to abolish the prohibitory duties on silk; vindicates his motives for advocating free trade, ib.; he is eloquently defended by Canning, ib.; colonial secretary in the Goderich ministry, 1827, 1172; his differences with Mr. Herries causes lord Goderich to resign, 1173; joins the Wellington administration, ib.; opposes the repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts, 1175; compelled, for consistency's sake, to vote against the government, he retires from the ministry, 1828, 1176; his speech on the power of steam; returned M.P. for Liverpool, 1185; present at the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester railway, 1186; killed by an accident, Sept. 15, 1830, ib.
Huss, John, adopts the tenets of Wycliffe, 163; is summoned to Constance and there burnt in 1415, ib.
Hussey, Dr., remarks of, on the state of Ireland, 1796, 1023
Hutchinson, colonel, studies the state of public affairs, 434; conference of, with lord Newark, 449; defends Nottingham Castle with bravery, 460; returned as member of parliament, 471; presents a petition in favor of sir John Owen, 492; goes to London and submits, like others, to Cromwell's government, 506; effects of the Civil War described by Mrs. Hutchinson, 510; she cites the colonel as a good example of an accomplished gentleman of the Independent party, ib.; kind of life led by, after his retirement from public affairs, 511; reveals Lambert's plot to Oliver Cromwell, 625
Hutchinson, governor of Massachusetts, 862; removes all the troops from Boston, 863; superseded in his post by general Gage, 872
Hutchinson, general, engages the French at Castlebar, 1025; succeeds to the command of the army in Egypt; invests Cairo, 1038
Hutchinson, lord, appointed to offer queen Caroline an annuity under certain conditions, 1151
Hutton, William, established a circulating library at Birmingham, 1751, 935; remarks on a handbill celebrating the fall of the Bastile, 1791, 961: his warehouse plundered by the Birmingham mob, 971
Huy taken by Marlborough, 1703, 692; by Villeroy, 1705, 704
Hyde, sir Edward. See Clarendon, earl of.
Hyder-Ali defeats the English in Madras and obtains possession of the country, 869; his inroad upon the Carnatic, 950; defeated by Coote, ib.; death of, 1782, 951

Ibrahim Bey evacuates Cairo, 1798, 1021
Ibrahim Pasha, proceedings of, at Navarino and the Morea, 1827, 1173
Imhoff, Mrs., married Warren Hastings, 949
Impey, sir Elijah, chief justice of the Supreme Court at Calcutta; causes Nuncomar to be tried for forgery, 948; who is found guilty and executed, 949; quarrels with Hastings, ib.; collects evidence against the begums of Oude, 950
Impressment, system of, established by law, 1704, 694; evils of impressment exaggerated, 1096
Inclosure bills passed, 1760–1779, 911; 1789–1797, 1014
Income, Gregory King's scheme of the, of the various grades of society in 1688, 612, 621; of clergy compared with that of other classes, temp. queen Anne, 620
Income tax, first proposed by Pitt, 1798; objections to it, 1022; proposed continuance of, 1816; opposition to it; the proposal rejected, 1113; renewal of, proposed by sir R. Peel, and resolved upon by parliament, notwithstanding great opposition, 1202; reimposition of, proposed by sir R. Peel, 1273
Indemnity Acts for Dissenters passed, 1727–1828, 781
Indemnity Act passed, 1766, to exonerate those who had advised an embargo on corn, 854
Indemnity bill introduced, 1689, 625
Indemnity bill, 1818, 1129
Independents. See Nonconformists.
India bill, Fox's, brought forward, Nov. 18, 1783; the plan of government proposed, 952; opposition to it; carried in the House of Commons, Dec. 9, ib.; rejected in the Lords, ib.; Pitt introduces his, Jan. 14, 1784; thrown out, and Fox's re-introduced, ib.; Pitt's India bills passed; plan of government laid down by them, 954
Indian affairs, history of, 1744–1754, 827; 1756–1757, 834; 1760–1773, 869; 1773–1784, 947; India bills of Fox and Pitt, 951, 953, 954; history, from 1785 to 1793, 968; 1798, 1799, 1029; 1799–1806, 1053; 1807–1826, 1168; 1836–1842, 1248–1252; 1842–1844, 1266–1268; 1845, 1846, 1280
Indian Trade Reform bill suffered to drop, 1692, 650
Indians employed by the Americans, 1759, 838; by the British, 1777, 883; Chatham denounces the practice as a national stain, 883; Burgoyne defends his conduct in employing them, 886; destruction of Wyoming by, 1778, 887; again employed by the British, 1812, 1097; their steadiness and order praised by Brock, ib.
Industrious classes, state of the, temp. Richard I., 97; sports, games, and amusements of, 97
Industry; variety of employments among the western counties of England, 605; the hardware trade of Birmingham, 606; earthenware trade, ib.; glass manufacture, ib.; stocking trade, 607; progress and vicissitudes of the lace trade, ib.; Lombe's and vicissitudes of silk mill completed in 1717, ib.; progress of the silk trade, ib.; rapid development of the cotton trade between 1700 and 1850, 608; linen trade at Warrington, and discouragement given to it, 609; most prosperous when guided by natural laws, 610; of the Yorkshiremen in queen Anne's time, ib.; of Leeds, ib.; cutlery trade of Sheffield, 610; imports, exports, and trade of Hull, ib.; the coal trade, 610; the salmon trade, 611; of Scotland, very limited before the Union, in 1707, ib.; of the inhabitants in the Norwich district, 612; curious evidence of this, ib.; great difficulty of passing from one occupation to another about the time of queen Anne, 616; jealousy of the great formerly shown towards the rise of the lower classes, 617; progress of the national, in agriculture, 911; and the arts, 922, 923-929; general depression of, 1812, 1063; and again in 1816, from the exhaustion of war, 1114; and the heavy poor rates levied, 1119
Inglis, sir R. H., returned M.P. for Oxford, 1829, 1177; his speech against the Reform bill, 1831, 1188; opposes the granting a charter to the University of London, 1216
Ingulphus, abbot of Croyland, account of the invasion of the Danes in 870 by, 29; his behavior to his predecessor, 59; account by, of the resistance of Hereward, 60
Innocent XII., his pacific turn, 642; his decision as to the Spanish succession, 683; pope, 1691–1700, 1309
Inns as described by the poets and novelists of the 18th century, 938
Innspruck surrendered to the Bavarians, 1809, 1074
Insurance offices, date of the establishment of the earlier, 614
Interregnum, period of, in 1688-9, 598
Inverness taken by the young Pretender, 1746, 815
Inwoods, the architects of St. Pancras church, 1144
Iona, religion and learning fostered at, by Columba, in the 8th century, 24
Ipswich loses its colliery and cloth trade; takes the lead in the manufacture of agricultural implements, 612; mutiny at, 1689, 625
Ireton, Henry, commands the left wing at Naseby, 467; intercepts a letter of the king's in 1647, 480; saves the life of sir John Owen, seconded by col. Hutchinson, 492; left in Ireland by Cromwell as his deputy, 496; dies there in Nov., 1651, 507; his body disinterred from Westminster Abbey after the Restoration, and buried at Tyburn, 536
Irish Church Reform bill. See Church.
Iron; England before and after the iron era, contrasted, 604; Forest of Dean formerly the seat of the manufacture of, 605; evidences of the Romans having smelted, ib.; coal first used for smelting; state of the iron trade in 1740 and 1851 compared, ib.; hardware trade at Birmingham, 606; extensive manufacture of steel at Sheffield, 611; improvements in the manufacture of; Carron iron works founded by Dr. Roebuck, 1759, 927; coal used for smelting, ib.; invention of the art of converting cast-iron into malleable-iron; modern and ancient iron structures compared, ib.

Isabel of Spain, her claim to the throne disputed by Don Carlos, 1122
Isabella, queen of Edward II. See Edward II. and Edward III.
Ismail, siege of, 1790; stormed by the Russians; massacre of the besieged, 969

Jackson, capt. Andrew, organizes the opposition to sir E. Pakenham's advance upon New Orleans, Dec. 1814, and Jan. 1815, 1101; president of the United States, 1829–1837, 1187
Jacobins, a French political party; Robespierre its head, 973; they attempt to impeach La Fayette, 978; suspend their hostility towards Dumouriez. 993; their measures for governing France, 994; energy, their characteristic, 975; their vigor in meeting the Toulon revolt, 998; their energy and atrocities, 1000; they recognize the existence of the Supreme Being, 1005; fall of Robespierre and his adherents, ib.
Jacquerie, in France, the consequence of the miseries occasioned by the ravages of the English, 142
Jaffa taken by the French, 1799, 1029; massacre of its inhabitants, ib.
Jaffier, Meer, Surajah Dowlah's general, conspires, with Clive's assistance, to obtain supreme power, 834; Clive's treaty with, ib.; becomes subahdar of Bengal, 835; the English make war on Cossein to dethrone him, and restore Jaffier, 869
Jamaica, critical state of affairs in, 1237
James I. of Scotland is released from his captivity at Windsor, and accompanies Henry V. in his expedition to France in 1421, 170
James IV. of Scotland receives and protects Perkin Warbeck in 1495, 217; invades England on his behalf but retreats, 218; concludes a truce, and sends Warbeck from Scotland, ib.; marries Margaret, daughter of Henry VII. in 1502, 221; concludes a treaty with France in May, 1512, 228; invades England, 229; valor displayed by, at Flodden Field, Sept. 9, 1513, 230; slain, 231
James I. of England (VI. of Scotland), born June 19, 1566, 347; is crowned in Scotland, July 29, 1567, on his mother's abdication. 349; writes to Elizabeth in favor of his mother on her condemnation, 364; suspected of joining in the projects of Spain against England, 370; he represses the insurrection fostered by Spain, 384; attempts to obtain a subsidy to enable him to assert his claim to the succession of the crown of England, 302; the Gowrie conspiracy, ib.; proclaimed king of England, March 24, 1603, as James I., 396; quits Scotland with his queen, Anne of Denmark, 396; absurd dispensations of knighthood by, ib.; expectations of the Roman Catholics from, 397; coronation of, ib.; the two plots, the "Main" and the "Bye," ib.; Raleigh, Cobham, and Grey indicted for endeavoring to advance Arabella Stuart to the throne, ib.; Raleigh is confined in the Tower, ib.; he presides at a conference at Hampton Court between the heads of the Church and the leaders of the Puritans, 398; a new version of the Holy Scriptures ordered by, ib.; meeting of his first parliament, and dispute with it respecting its privileges, ib.; assertion of their rights by the Commons, in their "Apology," ib.; they remonstrate against some innovations on the canons, aiming at excluding nonconformists from civil rights, 399; recommends an Union with Scotland, ib.; the Commons complain of the grievances of purveyance and wardship, ib.; he concludes a treaty of peace with Spain in Aug. 1604, ib.; unpopularity of, ib.; character of, 400; Cecil communicates the letter of Mounteagle respecting the Gunpowder Plot to the king, 401; the vaults under the Parliament House searched, and Guido Fawkes is taken, ib.; dispersion of the conspirators, ib.; examination and torture of Fawkes, 402; confession of Winter, and details of the plot, ib.; the conspirators attempt to raise a revolt, 403; resist their arrest, ib.; are killed or taken prisoners, ib.; employment of Ben Jonson as a spy, ib.; trial of the conspirators, 404; trial of Garnet the Jesuit, and unfair means taken to procure his conviction, 405; Garnet's doctrine of equivocation, ib.; new statute against papists, imposing an oath of allegiance, ib.; statutes against poaching and drunkenness, ib.; addiction of James to field sports, 406; lavishness of to favorites, ib.; levies a feudal aid on his eldest son being knighted, ib.; imposes taxes on merchandise, and the Commons remonstrate against their illegality, ib.; the colonization of North America commenced in 1606, ib.; New England colonized by the Pilgrim Fathers in 1620, 407; charters granted to the East India Company, 408; sir Thomas Roe sent ambassador to the East Indies, ib.; the Commons continue to remonstrate against the king's arbitrary measures, and are dissolved, 409; the cowardly and selfish policy of James in matters of religion, ib.; forces episcopacy on Scotland and burns an Arian in London, ib.; dedication to, of the authorized translation of the Bible in 1611, ib.; judicious measures for the plantation of Ulster in 1613, 410; raises money by the sale of the new title of baronet, ib.; assists Middleton in bringing the New River to London, ib.; attempts to repress the growth of London, ib.; threatens to remove his court from, and is requested to leave the Thames, ib.; story and death of Arabella Stuart, 411; death of Cecil, and Carr assumes the government, ib.; death and character of prince Henry, ib.; marriage of the princess Elizabeth to the elector palatine in 1613, 412; a parliament called in 1614; they pass a vote against the king's right of imposing customs duties, and are dissolved without passing a single bill, ib.; commits five of the members to the Tower, ib.; levies a Benevolence, to which Oliver St. John refuses to contribute, and is fined 5000*l.*, ib.; sales of public offices by, ib.; rise of the new favorite, George Villiers, ib.; trial of the earl and countess of Somerset for the murder of sir Thomas Overbury, 413; deceitful conduct of James towards the earl, ib.; they are convicted and pardoned, ib.; mysteries of the causes for the murder of Overbury, and for the king's pardon to the murderers, 414; letters of James in refereuce to the affair, ib.; he is opposed in his arbitrary measures by lord chief justice Coke, whom he dismisses, ib.; issues a proclamation for sports on Sundays after divine service, ib.; releases Raleigh from the Tower, in 1616, and allows him to undertake an expedition to Guiana, 416; causes him to be executed under his previous sentence on his return unsuccessful in 1618, at the instigation of the Spanish ambassador, ib.; the elector palatine chosen king of Bohemia in the Protestant interest, 417; protection to papists given by the Spanish ambassador, and anger of the populace caused by it, ib.; calls a parliament and solicits money, ib.; the Commons reply by impeaching monopolists, ib.; lord Bacon is also impeached for and convicted of bribery and corruption, 418; conduct of the parliament in punishing Floyd, ib.; strong feeling evinced by the Commons in favor of the elector palatine, ib.; negotiates for a marriage of Charles with an infanta of Spain, ib.; the king and the Commons at issue on a question of privilege, ib.; he dissolves the parliament, ib.; journey of prince Charles and Villiers to the court of Spain, 419; the Spanish match broken off, ib.; statute passed declaring all monopolies to be contrary to law, ib.; the earl of Middlesex impeached for bribery, ib.; war commenced in favor of the elector palatine, ib.; death of James, March 27, 1625, ib., 420

James II., when duke of York, marries Ann Hyde, the daughter of Clarendon, in 1661, 538; gains a victory over the Dutch off Lowestoffe in 1665, 544; takes the command of the English fleet in 1672, and fights an obstinate battle with the Dutch in Southwold Bay, 556; refuses to take the oath prescribed by the Test Act, and resigns his post of lord high admiral, 557; the House of Commons address the king against the duke's marriage with Maria Beatrix of Modena, 558; his daughter Mary marries the prince of Orange, 560; leaves England in 1679, 564; the bill for the exclusion of, read twice in the House of Commons, 565; returns to England in disguise on learning the sickness of Charles, 568; is sent to Scotland and cruelly persecutes the Covenanters, ib.; assumes a more active share in the government of England, 569; is presented before the Grand Jury at Westminster as a popish recusant by Shaftesbury and others, ib.; returns to Scotland, ib.; he procures a Test Act against the Covenanters to be passed by the Scottish Parliament, 573; fresh persecution of the Covenanters by, ib.; he returns to England, ib.; prosecution of alderman Pilkington for a libel, who is fined £100,000, 574; and of Titus Oates, for a libel, who is also fined £100,000, 576; marriage of his daughter Anne to prince George of Denmark, ib.; succeeds to the throne, Feb. 6, 1665, 577; his address to the Council promising to preserve the established religion, ib.; alteration in the ritual of the coronation by, ib.; issues a proclamation for the levying of customs duties, ib.; selection of ministers by, ib.; releases Papists and Quakers from imprisonment, but no other dissenters, 578; requires and obtains new laws against the Covenanters, ib.; outrageous attempts to secure the elections for the new House of Commons, and large increase of the number of peers, ib.; servile spirit of the Commons, who vote a revenue for life, 579; they address him, praying that the laws may be enforced against all dissenters, ib.; Titus Oates convicted and punished for perjury, ib.; and Richard Baxter for libel, ib.; insurrection in Scotland, headed by the earl of Argyle, ib.; its failure, and Argyle's execution, 580; landing of the duke of Monmouth at Lyme, ib.; the House of Commons pass a Bill of Attainder against him, ib.; the insurgents defeated at the battle of Sedgemoor, 583; interview of, with Monmouth, ib.; Monmouth executed, ib.; military executions in the West, under Kirke and others, ib.; and judicial atrocities committed by Jeffreys on the insurgents, ib.; scandalous traffic in the prisoners sanctioned by the king, ib.; tendencies of, to absolutism, 584; dismissal of Halifax, ib.; opens parliament, announces his employment of Popish officers, and of having dispensed with the Test Act, 585; the Commons timidly address him in favor of Protestantism, ib.; opposition to the dispensing power shown in the House of Lords, ib.; fresh trials and convictions for political offences, ib.; parliament, after two prorogations, is dissolved, ib.; Sunderland becomes a Roman Catholic and chief minister, ib.; the Jesuits paramount in the government, 586; sends an embassy to Rome, ib.; obtains the sanction of the King's Bench as to his power of dispensing with the Test Laws, ib.; appoints Roman Catholics to benefices, ib.; an Ecclesiastical Commission constituted, ib.; monastic establishments opened in London in 1686, 587; Rev. Samuel Johnson tried and convicted of a libellous publication concerning the army, ib.; and he is degraded from the ecclesiastical office, and publicly whipped, ib.; recommends Anthony Farmer, a suspected papist, to be elected president of Magdalen college, 588; the Fellows are expelled by the Ecclesiastical Commission on their electing Dr. John Hough, 589; Tyrconnel is appointed the lord-deputy of Ireland, ib.; publishes a declaration for liberty of conscience in Scotland, ib., and in England, ib.; camp formed on Hounslow Heath, 590; receives the Papal nuncio publicly at Windsor, 591; makes a progress through the country, ib.; orders the declaration for liberty of conscience to be read in churches, 592; the seven bishops petition against compliance, ib.; the bishops are committed to the Tower, 593; brought before the King's Bench to plead, and held to bail, ib.; tried for a libel, and acquitted, ib.; public rejoicings on their acquittal, ib.; birth of a son announced, 594; his legitimacy violently disputed, ib.; James solicits advice of the bishops, 596; he adopts measures of concession, ib.; restores the Charter of London, ib.; reinstates the President and Fellows of Magdalen college, ib.; dissolves the Ecclesiastical Commission, ib.; joins the main body of his army at Salisbury, 597; lord Cornbury and other officers desert his cause, ib.; the duke of Grafton, lord Churchill, and other commanders, go over to William, ib.; prince of Denmark, and princess Anne, join William, ib.; returns to London, ib.; publishes a proclamation appointing Parliament to meet, and nominates Commissioners to bring about an agreement with the prince of Orange, ib.; issues a proclamation for a general amnesty, ib.; his queen, with the infant prince, flies from Whitehall on Dec. 10, and goes to France, ib.; he quits Whitehall Dec. 11, 598; throws the Great Seal into the Thames, ib.; being discovered at Sheerness, is brought back to London, ib.; quits the kingdom, ib.; lands at Kinsale, March 12, 1689, 626; Tyrconnel secures Ireland in favor of, ib.; enters Dublin March 24, 627; his wavering conduct, ib.; displeased at Rosen's cruel order, 628; takes a personal share in the besieging of Londonderry, and the defeat of Macarthy, viscount Mountcashel, at the battle of Newton Butler, ib.; his letter to the Scotch convention, 629; his cause falls on the death of Dundee at the pass of Killiecrankie, 633; opens a parliament at Dublin, May 7, ib.; its severity towards Protestants; issues a coinage of money, ib.; Shrewsbury resigns his seals by order of, 606; meets with disappointment from Louis XIV. of France, 607; effects of his bad administration of public affairs in Ireland, ib.; prepares to oppose William; leaves Dublin, June 16, 1690; retires before his opponent, and comes to a stand on the banks of the Boyne, ib.; on the 1st of July the battle takes place; he is defeated; and retreats to Dublin, 608, et seq.; his speech to the magistrates and resolve to forsake the Irish, ib.; quits Dublin July 3, 639; embarks at Passage, and arrives at Brest on the 4th; his project of invading England is coldly received by Louis, ib.; his courtiers persuade the French that he was deserted by the Irish; Irish refugees in France are on that account harshly dealt with by them, ib.; sends Tyrconnel over to Ireland as his viceroy there, 644; issues a declaration to the English, 651; induces Louis to aid him in an invasion of England, ib.; joins his camp at Normandy, April, 1692, ib.; commiserates the slaughter of his "poor English" at the battle of Steinkirk, 652; his petty revenge on William's relations on the decease of queen Mary, 660; contemplates the invasion of England, 1696, 664; sends Berwick to head the Jacobites if they should rise, ib.; issues protestations against William, 1697, 668; dies at St. Germains, Sept. 16, 1701, 686; he opposed Wren's first design for St. Paul's, 753

James, John, his architectural works, 755

Jameson, colonel, commands the American militia, 893

Java, conquered by the British, 1810; lost at the peace, 1169

Jedburgh, burnt by the earl of Hertford, in 1545, 282

Jefferson, Thomas, his admiration of Henry's eloquence, 850; makes the draught of the declaration of independence, 878; governor of Virginia, 896; defends himself against charges of neglect, ib.; narrow escape from being made prisoner, ib.; succeeds Franklin as minister at Paris; accuses George III. of incivility towards himself, 908; heads the Democratic party, 1012; president of United States, 1801-1809, 1095; considers his election as a pacific revolution, ib.; dreads going to war, 1096; his extravagant hopes of success in the war with Great Britain, 1812, ib.; his prophetic fears of the separation of the Union, 1099; his opinion of Bonaparte, 1155; and cordiality with Great Britain, 1159

Jeffrey, Francis, despairs of British success in Spain, 1808, 1070; remarks on Wordsworth's poetry, 1137; and Scott's, ib.; his reviews, 1140; description of a steamboat on Loch Lomond, 1141; lord advocate, 1187; description of early morning after the rejection of the reform bill, 1190; his anxiety for the prevention of riots, 1191; his description of lord Althorp, ib.; his interview with Althorp on the resignation of the Grey ministry, 1831, 1197; his remarks on the bad working of the new parliamentary system, 1204

Jeffreys, George, as recorder of London, fines and imprisons a jury for having found a verdict in favor of Penn and Mead, indicted for attending a conventicle, 554; exertions of, to procure the return of Dudley North as sheriff of London, 572; services of, while lord chief justice, in making towns surrender their charters in 1683, 574; brutal behavior of, on the trial of Sidney in 1683, 575; and on that of Richard Baxter for libel in 1685, 579; atrocious cruelty of, in punishing the followers of Monmouth, 583; condemnation of Lady Alice Lisle, ib.; is rewarded with the Great Seal for his conduct, ib.; the insolence of, repressed in the House of Lords, 585; he fails to procure the conviction of lord Delamere for treason, ib.; is discovered in disguise at Wapping in London, and committed to the Tower, 598

Jekyll, sir Joseph, regards Sacheverel's sentence as a triumph, 721; returned a member of the parliament, 1710, 724

Jellalabad, Sale's defence of, 1215

Jemappes, battle of, Nov. 6, 1792, 983

Jena, or Auerstadt, battle of, Oct. 14, 1806, 1061

Jenkins, Rev. H., notice of his account of Colchester Castle, 8, note.

Jenkins, Capt. R., ordered to appear before the House of Commons; states the barbarities he had received from the Spaniards to the duke of Newcastle, but obtains no redress; he appears before the House, and there exhibits the ear that had been cut off, 791

Jenkinson. See Liverpool, earl of.

Jenner, Edward, benefit to the world resulting from his discovery of vaccination, 1141

Jenys, Soame, describes his visit to sir J. Jolly, 942

Jerdan, William, his account of Percival's death, 1812, 1082

Jersey, French attack upon, 1781, 894

Jerusalem, mission from the kingdom of, to England in 1185, 90; capture of, by Saladin, in 1187, 91

Jervas, Charles, his paintings, 756

Jervis, sir John, sails in command of a fleet against the Spaniards, 1014; considerably aided by commodore Nelson in gaining the battle of St. Vincent, Feb. 14, 1797, ib.; rewarded with an earldom, 1015; provides Nelson with a fleet to go against Bonaparte, 1020

Jesuits, suppression of the, 1773; their beneficial aid in advancing literature and science, 867

Jews, massacre of, at the coronation of Richard I., 91; plundered by John in 1211, 101; persecution and banishment of, temp. Edw. I., 115; attempt of Cromwell to re-introduce into England, 519; the mines chiefly worked by them in John's reign, 605; bill passed, 1753, for the naturalization of; popular clamor against the bill, 824; bill for their relief from civil disabilities passed the Commons; thrown out in the Lords, 1833, 1205; another introduced by lord Russell, but not passed, 1283

Jezzar, pasha of Acre, seizes El Arish; his defence of Acre, 1029

Joan of Arc, first appearance of, 173; account of her youth, and introduction to the king of France, ib.; relieves Orleans, ib.; terrors inspired in the English troops by, 174; the siege of Orleans raised by, ib.; her enthusiasm a sufficient cause for her success, without assigning miraculous powers, ib.; wins the battle of Patay, ib.; conducts Charles VII. to Rheims, where he is crowned in 1430, 175; attacks Paris, and is repulsed, ib.; is taken prisoner at Compeigne by the Burgundians, ib.; is tried for sorcery at Rouen before the bishop of Beauvais, ib.; is burnt on May 30, 1431, ib.

John, son of Henry II., joins Philip of France in a war against his father, 91; intrigues against his brother Richard, 93; deposes the chancellor William Longchamp, 94; surrenders some of his brother's continental territories to Philip, and does homage for the rest, 95; gives out that Richard has died in prison, ib.; attempts to bribe the emperor of Germany to keep his brother a prisoner, ib.; crowned May 27, 1199, 98; the claim of Arthur of Brittany supported by Philip of France, 99; war with Philip, truce, and war renewed, ib.; captures Arthur at Tours, ib.; suspicions of having caused him to be murdered, ib.; is driven out of Normandy by Philip, 100; quarrels with pope Innocent III. in 1207, respecting the appointment of an archbishop of Canterbury, ib.; the kingdom placed under an interdict, ib.; leads an army into Ireland in 1210, ib.; and effects some useful reforms, 101; represses the incursions of the Welsh, ib.; plunders the Jews to raise money for his expeditions, ib.; small effect of the interdict on the industry of the people, ib.; the kingdom excommunicated and the king deposed by the pope in 1212, and the crown promised to Philip, 102; he anticipates Philip's warlike measures by sending a fleet, which burnt Dieppe, and destroyed many French ships, ib.; he submits, and swears fealty to the pope, ib.; France prepares to invade England, and a naval victory is gained by the English, ib.; admits Langton to the see of Canterbury, ib.; invades France in 1214, and is defeated at Bouvines, ib.; the clergy and barons enter into a league against him at St. Edmundsbury, 103; he solicits the aid of the pope, ib.; the army of God and holy church (the army of the barons) march to London, ib.; signs Magna Charta on June 15, 1215, at Runnymede, ib.; provisions of the great charter, 104; effects of, upon the nation, ib.; rapid movements of John, after signing the charter, and fallacy of the tradition as to his retirement, 105; with an army of mercenaries he ravages England, and the pope annuls the charter and excommunicates the barons, ib.; the crown offered by the barons to Louis of France, ib.; resistance of the fortresses to the French, ib.; suspected treachery of Louis, ib.; death of John on Oct. 18, 1216; buried at Worcester, ib.

John, archduke, of Austria, commands the Austrian army; his campaign with Moreau; concludes an armistice with him, 1035

Johnson, Joseph, tried and imprisoned for being concerned in the Manchester reform meeting, 1150

Johnson, Rev. Sam., tried and imprisoned in 1683 for writing Julian the Apostate, 576; tried and convicted for a libellous publication concerning the army, ib.; degraded from the ecclesiastical office and publicly whipped, 587

Johnson, Dr. Samuel; he is touched for the king's evil by queen Anne, 694; his gratitude to gen. Oglethorpe, 781; does penance at a book-stall at Uttoxeter, 935; forms a link between two periods of literature, ib.; goes to London, 1737, ib.; his vicissitudes and employments for half a century; dies, 1784; his delight in Crabbe's poem "The Village," ib.; his "London," published 1738; "Vanity of Human Wishes," 1749, 936; brings out the "Rambler," 1750, and the "Idler," 1758; writes for the "Adventurer," 937; his partiality for tavern life, 939; his prejudice against tradesmen, 945

Johnstone, sir James; his remarks on Fox's India declaratory bill, 989

Joinville, prince de, his pamphlet on the naval forces of France, 1272

Jolliffe, sir William, his account of the Manchester reform meeting of 1819, 1132

Jones, col., describes the British system of taking towns, 1085; and the capture of Badajoz, ib.

Jones, Inigo, the first to imitate Grecian temples in British churches, 754
Jones, John Gale, proceeding between parliament and, on a question of privilege, 1810, 1078
Jones, John Paul, employed by Franklin in an expedition against Great Britain, 1779, 887; attempts to capture Leith and Edinburgh, but is driven back by a gale; attacks some ships convoyed by the Serapis and Scarborough; takes the former; a native of Scotland, ib.
Jones, Rev. Richard, aids in establishing the principle of the Tithe Commutation Act, 1220
Jordan, Mrs., her happy connection with the duke of Clarence, 1224
Joseph II. of Germany, 1765–1790, 1310; attempts to coerce Holland, 955
Josephine Beauharnois. See Bonaparte, 1010, 1074, 1075.
Joubert, Alvinzy compels him to retreat, 1017; joined by Bonaparte, ib.
Jourdan, J. B., rises from a packman to command a French army, 992; driven by the prince of Cobourg over the Sambre, Oct. 1793, 1000; marshal; appointed to the command of the army of the Moselle, 1794, 1006; defeats the Austrians at Arlon; captures Charleroi; wins the battle of Fleurus, June 29, and compels the duke of York to retreat, ib.; appointed to the command of the Sambre and Meuse, 1796, 1010; failure of the campaign, 1012; his campaign with the archduke Charles, 1799, 1031; major-general; defeated by Wellington at Vittoria, June 21, 1813, 1090
Joyce, Rev. Jeremiah; Stanhope's private secretary; charged with high treason, 1002
Joyeuse, Villaret, admiral of the Brest fleet; defeated by Howe, June 1, 1794, 1004
Judges, independence of, 651
Julian, the emperor, builds warehouses for the reception of British corn, 12; large quantity furnished to the continent, ib.; commands Paulus, governor of Britain, to be burnt, 17
Juliana, Maria, Christian VII.'s stepmother; heads a court party against the queen, Struensee and Brandt, 868
Junius, his letters, 857; characteristics of his writings; abuses Wilkes, 857; a master of personal invective, 857; attempts made to give the credit of his productions to sir P. Francis, lord Temple, and Burke; lord Lyttleton probably the writer, 858; personality of his libels; his attacks upon the duke of Grafton, whose administration he wished to destroy, ib.; his private letters; his character; paltry-minded, ambitious, vain, cowardly, ib.; assaults the duke of Bedford, 859; his address to the king; prosecution of the publisher, Mr. Woodfall, who escapes punishment, ib.
Junot, A., crosses the Bidassoa; captures the Spanish capital, 1808, 1067; defeated by sir A. Wellesley at Vimiero, Aug. 21, 1808, 1069; retreats to Torres Vedras, ib.

Kalendar, note on the French Revolutionary, 996
Kandy, king of, acquiesces in the British possessing the maritime provinces of Ceylon, 1170; deposed for his cruelties, ib.
Katzbach, battle of the, Aug. 26, 1813, 1090
Kay, John, introduces the use of the fly-shuttle about 1760, 923
Keane, sir John, general, has temporary command of the army in America; commands a division; advances against New Orleans, 1101; is wounded, ib.; commands the Bombay division of the Indian army, 1248; his passage through the Bolan Pass; besieges Ghuznee, 1249
Keate, Thomas, surgeon-general of the army; not consulted about the Walcheren expedition, 1809, 1074
Keith joins his brother in an expedition to collect the Jacobites in Scotland, 772
Keith, marshal, slain at Hochkirchen, Oct. 1758, 838
Keith, Rev. Alexander, his cheap marriage trade; damaged by the new marriage act, 1753, 282
Keith, lord, announces to Napoleon that St. Helena is to be his future residence, 1815.
Kellermann, gains the battle of Valmy, Sept. 20, 1792, 982; besieges Lyon, 1793, 997; superseded in his command by Dubois-Crancé, 998
Kelso burnt by the earl of Hertford, in 1545, 282
Kempenfeldt, admiral, his unsuccessful cruise, 1782, 899; perishes at the sinking of the Royal George, Aug. 29, 1782, 906
Kendal, duchess of, bribed by the South Sea directors, 774; caricatures of, 775; bribed to promote Wood's patent, 777; accompanies George I. on his last visit to Hanover, 1727, 779
Kenmure, viscount, commands the Pretender's Scotch forces, 1715, 763; sentenced to death for his concern in the rebellion, 766; executed on Tower Hill, Feb. 24, 1716, 766
Kent, duchess of, marries the duke of Kent, July 13, 1818, 1129; birth of their daughter, the future queen, Victoria, May 24, 1819, ib.; death of the duke of Kent, Jan. 23, 1820, 1132; appointed sole regent should the king die before the 18th year of the princess Victoria, 1180; present at queen Victoria's audience with the privy council, 1224
Kent, his painting, etc., 755
Kent, agriculture of, 915
Kentish petition; its purport, 685; ferment caused by the imprisonment of the presenters, 685
Keppel, admiral; appointed to the command of the channel fleet; sails from St. Helens, June 17, 1778; captures the Lecorne; sails to Portsmouth, 886; again puts to sea, July 9; engages D'Orvilliers off Ushant; his second in command, sir H. Palliser, unable to renew the conflict; debates on their conduct; Palliser charges Keppel with misconduct and incapacity; court-martial on, and acquittal of, ib.; created a viscount, and appointed first lord of the admiralty, 906
Ker, John, of Kersland, his account of the Cameronian demonstration in 1706; he joins them, acting as a spy to watch their proceedings, 712; performs the same part in the Jacobite plots of 1707; offers the services of 5000 men to colonel Hooke, 714
Key, John, lord-mayor, 1830; warns the duke of Wellington to come guarded to his banquet, 1186
Keyes, an assassination plotter; tried, 1696, 665
Khan, Ameer, joins the Pindarees against the British, 1169
Kiel, treaty of, Jan. 14, 1814, 1094
Killiecrankie, battle of, July 27, 1689, 621
Killigrew, admiral, fails in keeping back the French fleet, 657
Kilmarnock, lord, joins the rebel ranks, 1745, 803; fails in raising his tenants to fight for the Stuart cause, 807; trial of, July 28, 1746; pleads guilty; description of his appearance, 813; executed on Tower Hill, Aug. 18, ib.
Kilwarden, lord; lord chief justice, murdered by the Emmett insurrectionists, 1803, 1044
Kimbolton, lord. See Manchester, earl of.
King, Gregory, estimates the population from the hearth tax returns, 601; his "scheme of the income and expense of the several families in England," analyzed, 612, 616, 618, 620
King tried for taking part in the assassination plot, 665
King, lord, extract from his diary on a petition for lord George Murray, 767; lord chancellor; causes a bill to be introduced enacting that all law proceedings be in the English language, 782
King, Dr., his interview with Charles Edward in 1750 in London, 820
King's Weston, built by Vanbrugh, 754
Kingsley, Charles; his novel entitled "Alton Locke;" quotation from, descriptive of the enlightened behavior of class toward class in 1862, 1258
Kinsale capitulates to Marlborough, 1690, 641
Kirchdenkern, battle of, July 15, 1761, 843
Kit's Coty House, description of, 6
Kleber, J. B., defeated by the Vendeans at Chollet, Sept. 1793, 1001; serves in Jourdan's army, 1006; surrender of Maestricht to, 1794, 1007; his struggle against a Mussulman army, 1029; assassinated, June 14, 1800, 1038
Klundert taken by Dumouriez, 993
Kneller, Godfrey, a German; patronized by the duke of Monmouth; and becomes the fashionable portrait painter in England, 756; list of his more famous likenesses, and their general characteristics, 757; president of a private academy of painting, 930
Knight, Miss C., quotations from her "Autobiography," illustrative of the relations between the prince Regent and princess Charlotte, 1118
Knight, sir John, complains of the exportation of corn, 662
Knight, John, imprisoned for being concerned in the Manchester reform meeting, 1819, 1150
Knight, cashier of the South Sea Company; flies to Brabant; his tamperings with the cash-books, 775
Knight service instituted by William the Conqueror, 64; finally abolished in 1660, 501
Knights Templars. See Templars.
Knox, John, preaches at Perth, and the monastic houses are destroyed, 338; preaches against the seizure of the Church patrimony by the nobles, 340; attacks of, upon Mary, and her avowed hatred of him, 341; preaches against the marriage of Mary with a Roman Catholic prince, 343; returns to Scotland in 1567, and preaches violently against Mary, 340
Kœnig invents the steam printing machine, 1141
Kolin, battle of, June 17, 1757, 836
Königsmark, count Philip, tragedy of his death, 760
Kosciusko, engages in the American cause, 1777, 882; appointed leader of the Polish army, 1794, 1007; defeats the Russians, April 4. ib.; compelled to retreat by the Prussian and Austrian forces, wounded in battle, Oct. 10, 1007
Kuchuk Kanarji, peace of, 1774; its terms, 868
Kunersdorf, battle of, 1759, 846
Kyrle, John, "The Man of Ross," a descendant from a serf of bishop Swinfield, 119.

Labedoyère, colonel in the Grenoble garrison; joins Napoleon, 1815, 1104; tried by court-martial on Louis' restoration, and shot, 1111
Labelye, the builder of Westminster Bridge, 935
Laborde engaged in the battle of Vimiero, 1069
Labouchere, Henry, master of the mint; vice-president of the board of trade, 1220
La Bourdonnais, governor of the Isle de France; Fort St. George capitulates to, 1746, 827
Laborers, wages of, in 1288, 119; statute for regulating the wages of, 140; statute for preventing their removal, 141; gradual emancipation of, from serfdom, 150; statute of 1388 against their changing their professions, ib.; in husbandry, not sufficient for the demand, ib.; the wives of, subjected to the statute for the regulation of apparel, 179; statute for regulating the hours of labor of, 182; scale of wages for, 183; injury done to, by parliamentary interference with, ib.; combinations among, and statute against, in 1423, ib.; distress occasioned among, by the fluctuation in the price of wheat, and the statutes fixing a rate of wages, 225; the effects of inclosures upon, 291; sufferings of, in the reign of Henry VIII., from the Statute of Wages in 1515, and the debasement of the coin, 294; love of old ceremonies among, 304; the Protector Somerset's efforts in behalf of, 307; insurrection of, against inclosures, in 1549, ib.; festivals and sports of, temp. Eliz., 381; severities exercised upon, by the Law of Settlement, 385; statute against the able-bodied, who refuse to work at the usual wages, 386; the legislature declare, in 1563, that the statutes for the regulation of wages cannot be enforced, on account of the high price of provisions, 387; other causes of suffering, ib.; healthful influence of the Puritan gentry upon, temp. Charles I., 510; their repulsion of strict Puritanism, ib.; condition of an agricultural laborer, regno of queen Anne, as compared with one of the present day, 617; character of the agricultural, temp. queen Anne, ib.; hardship and distress among, caused by the corrupt state of the silver coinage, 663; labor question between master and, from the reign of Edward III. to the present time, 821; the laws against the combination of, 822; number of agricultural, in 1770 and 1851, 910; condition of the farm, of Suffolk, 912; the Luddite riots and destruction of machinery, 1812, 1083; desire and attempts to level all distinction between laborers and artisans, 1193; incendiary fires and machine breaking, ib.; riots at Derby, Nottingham, and Bristol, 1831, 1194; admonition to, ib.; limitation of labor in factories, 1206; pauperized condition of, 1834; injustice done to the independent, by the old parochial system, 1210; sanitary condition of; state of their dwellings; evil effects of bad drainage on their health, 1227; cleanliness among town laborers, promoted by public baths and washhouses, 1228; condition of the factory workers, 1229; cruelties inflicted on the children and women employed in the coal mines, ib.; condition of agricultural, ib.; condition of, during the prevalence of Chartism in 1839, 1237; popularity of Chartist principles amongst, ib.; sir J. Graham's bill for limiting the hours of labor in factories to twelve; debate and amendments on it, 1269; the bill passed, 1270; Fielden's bill, for limiting the number of working hours in factories to ten, passed, 1283
Lace trade, reigns of William and Anne, 607
La Fayette, G. M., appointed major-general in the United States army, 1777, 882; present at Cornwallis's surrender, 1781, 897; elected commander of the French national guard, 1789, 963; attempts to save Foulon, ib.; ordered to march to Versailles, 965; conducts the royal family to Paris, ib.; takes the oath at the federation fête, 968; keeps watch over the royal family in the Tuilleries, 971; they escape, 972; causes them to be captured and conducted back to Paris, ib.; commands the centre army sent against Austria, 1792, 977; denounces the instigators of the insurrection of June 20; the mob compel him to fly from Paris, 978; opposes the orders of the assembly; is declared a traitor; quits his army; is arrested by the Austrians, and imprisoned, 980; commands the national guard of Paris, July, 1830; obtains possession of the Hotel de Ville, 1183; where he receives the duke of Orleans, ib.
La Fenillade, French general, besieges Turin, 703
Lafitte heads a deputation requesting Marmont to suspend hostilities, 1183; obtains the premiership of France, 1830,
Laguerre, patronized by Charles II. and his court, 752
Lahar reduced by captain Popham, 950
La Hogue, battle of, May 19, 1692, 651
Lake school of poetry, 1137
Lake, general Gerard, his campaign against the Irish rebels, 1798, 1024; surrender of the French under Humbert to, 1025; commands the troops in Hindostan; compels the French to retreat; his triumphant campaign completed in the victory of Laswarree, Nov. 1, 1803, 1054
Lake district, farmers of the, 919; the home of poetry, ib.; cultivation in the; changes in the social condition of its inhabitants; turnips first grown as a field crop, 1793, 920
Lamartine, remarks of, on the September massacres, 1792, 981
Lamb, sir C. M., his account of Burk's dagger speech, 988
Lamb, Charles, character of his essays, 1140
Lamb, William. See Melbourne.
Lamballe, princesse de, a friend of Marie Antoinette; her death scene, Aug. 10, 1792, 980
Lambert, John, trial of, for denying the real presence in the eucharist, 273; disputation of, with Henry VIII., 273; is burnt, 273
Lambert, general, engaged in the attack on New Orleans, 1815, 1101
Lambese, prince, attempts to quell the Paris riots, 1789, 962
Lancashire before the cotton era, 608; formerly an agricultural county, 918; the hill farmers of, now and eighty years ago, ib.; Fylde moss converted into productive land, ib.; double occupation of farmer and weaver in, 924; rapid increase of Bolton, Bury, Birmingham, and Manchester, 926
Lancaster, John of Gaunt, duke of, apprehensions entertained of the ambitious designs of, 147; is accused of treason, 152; demands a trial, but the witness against him dies, ib.; leaves England to assert his claim to the crown of Castile, 153; returns to England in 1389, 154; dies in 1398, and his possessions are seized by Richard II., 156
Lancastrian party, defeat of the, at the battle of Towton, 193; extreme distress of, in exile, 194; total depression of, after the battle of Tewkesbury, 200
Landau, siege of, capitulates to the allies, 1704, 699
Landen, or Neerwinden, battle of, July 29, 1693, 656
Landseer, sir Edwin, succeeds Ward as an animal painter, 1147
Langara, admiral of the Spanish fleet; taken prisoner by the British; surprise at William IV.'s obedience as a midshipman, 905
Langdale, destruction of his distillery by the Gordon rioters, 1780, 892
Langton, Stephen, elected archbishop of Canterbury, in 1207; but John refuses him admission, and banishes the monks, 100; takes possession of his see, in 1213, 102; opposes the despotism of John, ib.; joins the barons at Saint Edmundsbury, in their league against John, 103; conveys the provisions of Magna Charta to John at Oxford, who rejects them, ib.; refuses to excommunicate the barons on the order of the pope, ib.; excommunicates "all violators of the liberties of the Church," 109

Lansdown, lord, Henry Petty; chancellor of the exchequer, 1806, 1056, ; his financial propositions, 1061; lord president of the council, 1187, 1224
Lanusse leads the French infantry at the battle of Alexandria; slain, Mar. 21, 1801, 1038
Las Torres, count of, besieges San Mateo, 1705; is compelled to raise the siege by Peterborough, who follows his retreating army, 702
Laswarree, battle of, Nov. 1, 1803, 1054
Latimer, Hugh, offer of a bribe by, to Cromwell, 261; participation of, in the burning of heretics, 273; preaches against images and relics, 274; resigns his bishopric on the passing of the Six Articles Act in 1539, and is committed to prison, 277; commendation of archery by, 289; advice of, to pay sufficient salaries to officials, and to prevent their taking bribes, ib.; description of a farmer's life by, 291; accused of speaking seditiously against the debasement of the coinage, 294; remonstrance of, against burials in towns, 296; sermon of, on the execution of lord Thomas Seymour, 306; committed to the Tower, after the accession of Mary, on Nov. 13, 1553, 319; condemned, with Ridley and Cranmer, for heresy, at Oxford, 324; burning of, with Ridley, at Oxford, in Sept., 1555, 330
Latin language, probable prevalence of, in England, under the Romans, 13; opinion of Lord Macaulay as to its non-prevalence, ib.; incorporation of much Latin in the Anglo-Saxon and Welsh languages, 161
Latour, an Austrian general, defeated by Moreau, 1796, 1012
Latude, his escape from the Bastille, 1756, 963
Laud, archbishop, introduction of ceremonial observances into the Church service by, 425; persecution of William Prynne, 428, and of Dr. Alexander Leighton, ib.; approves of Strafford's principle of thorough, ib.; urges on the establishment of episcopacy in Scotland, 432; which occasions, in 1637, the revolt of Scotland, and the adoption of the National Covenant, ib.; his palace, at Lambeth, attacked by the populace, on May 11, 1640, 434; his fears of the parliament of 1640, and his superstitious forebodings, 435; opinion of, as to infringements of law, 436; is arrested, and impeached by the Commons, 438; parliament resumes proceedings against, 466; defends himself with skill and courage, but is condemned for high treason, and is beheaded on Jan. 10, 1645, ib.
Lauderdale, earl of, visits Paris, Aug., 1792, 979; his doubts of British operations in Holland, 1793, 993; sent to Paris to negotiate for peace, 1058; opposes the gas company, 1816, 1118
Launay, De, governor of the Bastile, 963; defends it against the mob, July 14, 1789, 963; capitulates on condition of having a free pass; he is seized and murdered by the mob, 963
Laurens, Henry, president of congress; foresees more war, May, 1778, 885; a commissioner for acquiring peace, 1782, 907
Lauriston, general, enthusiastic reception of, in London, as the bearer of peace, 1801, 1039; his despatch to Bonaparte, 1805, 1050
Lauzun, general, his conduct at the Boyne, 1690, 638; considers Limerick untenable, 640
Lavalette tried by court martial for aiding Bonaparte; condemned to death; escapes, 1111
La Vendée, the war in, 1793, 1000
Law, proceedings of, ordered to be transacted in the English language, 1731, 782
Law, John, his Mississippi scheme, 774
Law of Settlement. See Settlement.
Law reform. See Brougham.
Lawrence, captain of the "Chesapeake," his combat with Broke; died 1813, 1098
Lawrence, his conference with Akbar Khan; suspects his good faith; placed as a hostage in his hands, 1250
Lawrence, major, commands the forces blockading Trichinopoly, 1752, 827
Lawrence, sir Thomas, popularity of, as a portrait painter; died, 1830, 1146
Laybach, congress at; circular issued by, 1821, 1155
Layer, Christopher, executed for being concerned in a conspiracy against George I., 1722, 776
Leach, sir John, vice-chancellor, 1148; the king's adviser in the matter of the queen, 1150
Lead mines of Derbyshire, 607
Lead, black, mine of Borrowdale, 610
Leake, admiral sir John, attacks De Pontis, and destroys his fleet, March, 1704, 700; as admiral sails with reinforcements for the relief of Barcelona, 1706, 703; captures Sardinia; carries Port Mahon, 1708, 716
Lear, legend of, given by Geoffrey of Monmouth, 3
Lebas guillotined, 1794, 1006
Le Brun imprisoned, 995; associated with Bonaparte as consul, 1032; has the control of the finances, 1034
Lechmere returned M.P., 1710, 724; impeaches the earl of Derwentwater of high treason, 1716, 766; brings in a bill to strengthen the Protestant interest, 767; his amendment of the Septennial bill, 768
Leclerc aids in expelling the Assembly from their hall, 1799, 1031
Lede, marquis di, lands in Sicily with an army; his operations, 1718, 771
Lee, Arthur, appointed a commissioner to take charge of American affairs in Europe; his negotiations, 880
Leeds, description of its cloth market, and the clothiers attending it, 610; obtains parliamentary representation, 1832, 1200; population of, in 1831 and 1861, ib.
Leeds, Thomas Osborne, duke of, urges William not to abandon England, 634; authorized by William to present an Act of Grace for political offences to the peers, 636; presides at Mohun's trial, 655; impeached for bribery, but on the prorogation of parliament, the impeachment fell to the ground, 661
Leefdale, baron de, a partner in Grandval's plot to assassinate William, 1692, 652
Lee Priory, Kent, built by Wyatt, 1142
Lefebvre, general, taken prisoner by the British, 1808, 1070
Legard, sir Digby, his agricultural improvements, 918
Legendre, his petition to Louis, 1792, 978
Legends, early British, 829
Legge, H. B., chancellor of the exchequer, 829, 865; refuses his signature to the subsidy warrants, 1755, 829; he is dismissed his office, ib.; reappointed to it, 1756, 832, 865; again dismissed, 1757, 833; receives the freedom of London, ib.; again reappointed, 1757, 835, 1324; again removed, 1761, 842
Legion Memorial, the, 1701, 685
Legislative Assembly established, 1791; its constitution and parties, 973
Legnitz, battle of, 1760, 840
Leicester, Simon de Montfort, earl of. See Montfort.
Leicester, earl of, recommended as a husband to Mary of Scotland in 1564, 343; is appointed to the command of the army in the Netherlands, 359; ambitious views of, ib.; repulsed at the battle of Zutphen, ib.; death of, 376
Leicestershire, its trades and manufactures, 607
Leipzig, alliance of, April, 1631, 732; battles of, Oct. 16 and 18, 1813, 1090
Leith burnt by the earl of Hertford, in 1545, 282
Lely, extensive employment of, by the court of Charles II., 752-756
Lennox, lady Sarah, George III.'s love for, 842
Leoben, preliminaries of peace of, signed April 18, 1797, 1017, 1040
Leopold I., of Germany, represented at the Hague congress, 1691; his interests, 643; desires the prolongation of war, 1697, 668; married one of Charles II. of Spain's sisters, 677; delays signing the Partition treaty, 1700, 683; joins the Grand Alliance against France, 1701, 686; succeeded by Joseph I., 1705, 760
Leopold II., of Germany; meets the king of Prussia at Pilnitz; they issue the declaration of Pilnitz, 1791, 974; died, Mar. 1, 1792, 977; the French declare war against him, 1792, 1040; emperor, 1790-1792, 1310
Leopold of Belgium, prince of Saxe Coburg; marries princess Charlotte, May 2, 1816; national acquiescence in the marriage, 1114; national sympathy at his loss of the princess, 1818. 1129; chosen king, 1831; marries Louis Philippe's eldest daughter, 1122
Lepaux, president of the French Directory, his proclamation, 1797, 1014
Lescure, a Vendean leader, 1000; his humanity saves 5000 Vendeans; his horror on hearing of the queen's death; death of, 1793, 1001
Lesley, general David (afterward earl of Leven), a military leader of the Covenanters, surprises Edinburgh Castle in 1639, 434; commands an army which marches to oppose Charles I. at Berwick, ib.; commands the forces, in 1640, sent with a petition to England, 435; routs the king's troops at Newburn, near Newcastle, on Aug. 28, ib.; enters England at the head of the Scottish army, 464; defeats Montrose at Philiphaugh, 470; re-establishes the Covenanting power in the Lowlands, ib.; letter of, to the Committee of both kingdoms, concerning the king's arrival at Newark, May 6, 1646; Charles I. returns to Scotland with the Scotch army, ib.; Cromwell meets with a vigorous resistance from, in his advance into Scotland in 1650, 497; position of his army at Dunbar, 498; where he is defeated, ib.; makes another stand at Stirling, ib.; invades England as lieutenant-general under Charles, ib.; defeated at Worcester, 499
L'Estrange, sir Roger, establishment of the London Gazette by, in 1665, 545; is made licenser of the press, ib.
L'Estrange, colonel, commands the hussars at the Manchester massacre, 1819, 1133
Lethbridge, sir Thomas, his motion against Burdett, 1078
Letters, difficulties of transmission of, in the 15th century, 187
Letters opened by the secretary of state; agitated state of the country thereat; inquiry into the extent of the practice, 1271; reports of the committees; they tranquillize the public, ib.
Leuthen, or Lissa, battle of, Dec. 5, 1757, 836
Levellers, rise of, in the army, 481; the mutiny of, suppressed by Cromwell, in 1647, 482; character of, 492; a mutiny of, in 1649, again suppressed by Cromwell and Fairfax, ib.
Leven, earl of. See Lesley, general David.
Lewes, battle of, on May 13, 1264, 112
Leycester, moves for Melville's impeachment, 1805, 1049
Libel bill fails in being passed, 1791, but is carried, June 11, 1792, 976
Libraries, parochial, founded by Dr. Bray, 670; and established by act of parliament in 1708, ib.
Licensing act, expiration of the, 1693, 655; proposed renewal of, rejected, 1695, 661
Licensing plays, the act for, 1737, 790
Licentiousness of society at various periods in the 17th and 18th centuries, 619, 671, 941, 944
Liége, captured by Marlborough, Oct. 23, 1702, 689; invested by Villeroy, 1705, 704
Ligny, battle of, June 16, 1815, 1105
Ligonier, sir John, commander of the English cavalry at Lauffeld; taken prisoner, 820
Lilburne, John, taken prisoner at Brentford, but is released, 457; publishes, in 1647, bitter denunciations against the betrayers of the people, 479; permitted to ride out for his health, having been sent to the Tower, he goes to the rendezvous of the Adjutators, ib.; conduct of his regiment there, 482; publishes several pamphlets, for which he is committed to the Tower, 492; sends out another pamphlet, 492; sends forth more pamphlets, 493; in consequence of which he is tried in 1649, but is acquitted, ib.; speech of, at his trial, ib.; rejoicings throughout London at his acquittal, ib.
Lille, besieged by the Allies, 1708, 716; surrender, Dec. 29, 718; bombarded unsuccessfully by the Austrians, Oct. 1792, 982
Limbourg taken by Marlborough, 1703, 692
Linchouse church, built by Hawksmoor, 755
Limerick, the Jacobites take refuge in, 639; description of the town and surrounding country in a military point of view, 640; invested by William III., Aug. 9, 1690, ib.; Sarsfield, the commander of the garrison, with 500 horse, makes a successful attack upon William's supplies and artillery, ib.; several attempts to take the town by assault failed, and the siege raised on the 29th, 641; capitulates to general Ginkell, 1691, 644; treaty of, 645
Lincoln, general, commands the forces in Charleston; capitulates May 12, 1780, 892
Lincoln, Abraham, president of the United States; his message proposing a gradual emancipation of the slaves, 1862, 1207
Lincolnshire, population of; reclaiming the land in, 608; fens of, drained and reclaimed by Rennie, 914; reclamation of the heath and wolds of, 914; 22 persons to every 100 acres in 1841, 917
Lind, captain of the Edinburgh city guard; his evidence as to the Porteous riot, 787
Lindsay, lieutenant, his share in the Glencoe massacre, 1692, 648
Line engraving and engravers, 1784-1820, 1148
Linen trade, the, temp. William and Anne, 609
Lingard, Dr., character of his "History of England," 1256
Linieres, general, commands the troops in Buenos Ayres, 1817; obtains favorable terms from general Whitelock, 1064
Lisbon, peace of, Feb. 13, 1668, 732; earthquake at, 1755, 829
Lisle, lady Alice, execution of, for harboring a traitor, 583
Lisle, negotiations at, for peace, 1797, 1017
Lissa. See Leuthen.
Literature, view of the, temp. William and Anne, 620; sketch of the, from 1709 to 1742; the essayists; general literal capacity of the period; the legislature connected with, and the poets, 736-741; manners of the same period illustrated by its, 741-747; rise of a reading public, 747; spread of knowledge of ancient, 748; popular element in controversy, ib.; "battle of the books," by Swift, published 1704, ib.; Pope's essay on criticism, ib.; banter upon antiquaries, ib.; his "Dunciad," 749; character of Swift's writings, 750; his "Tale of a Tub," ib.; "Gulliver's Travels," 751; Defoe, ib.; "The Craftsman," the party organ for Walpole's opponents, Pulteney and others, printed by Benjamin Franklin, who is convicted of a libel, 1731, 782; the proceedings of Parliament not published for several years subsequent to 1747, 819; Henry Fielding's "Inquiry into the Causes of the late Increase of Robbers, 1750," 823; Goldsmith's "History of England," 1771, 824; Wilkes and Churchill start the "North Briton," June, 1762, 846; Churchill's "Prophecy of Famine," Jan., 1763, 846; Dickenson's "Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania," 861; arrest of printers for publishing the debates of parliament, 865; after much agitation and rioting, the affair blows over, and the printers and others are released from prison, ib.; advanced by Jesuitical efforts, 867; Yorkshire dialect 60 years since, 919; changes in the commerce of, 935; the age of magazines, ib.; Johnson the link between the two periods, 1737-1783, 936; state of, time of George II, ib.; Richardson, ib.; Fielding, 937; Smollett, Sterne, Goldsmith, 937; the writers from 1760-1783, ib.; publication of Burke's "Reflections on the French Revolution," 1790, 968; "Anti-Jacobin" started by Canning; first number appeared Nov. 20, 1797, 1017; immense influence of Cobbett's "Two-penny Register" upon the laboring classes, 1816, 1121; sketch of English, 1784-1820, 1135-1142; Cowper, ib.; Crabbe, 1135; Burns, 1136; Darwin, ib.; Della Cruscan school, ib.; the Lake school, ib.; Southey, Coleridge, 1137; and Wordsworth, ib.; Scott, ib.; Byron, ib.; Shelley and Keats; the narrative poems of Campbell, Rogers, Byron, Hunt, Moore, 1138; and Crabbe; delineation of manners contained in his works, ib.; a more Evangelical spirit is revived amongst the people, ib.; the theological literature, 1139; sermons of Chalmers, Blair, and Hall, ib.; hatred of the stage, ib.; plays written by Byron, Coleridge, and Milman, ib.; the smaller novelists, ib.; the Waverley novels, 1087; and Jane Austen's writings; the Edinburgh Review, ib.; and the Quarterly; Blackwood's Magazine, 1140; the essayists; Lamb, 1141; Hazlitt, ib.; Hunt and Foster; the political economists—Malthus, Mill, Ricardo, and Chalmers, ib.; coarseness of the journalism of 1820, 1152; the press and its regulation in India, 1172; "Penny Magazine" started, March 31, 1832, 1202; its large circulation a proof of the increased desire of the people for knowledge, ib.; the new law of copyright of 1842, and its application to copyrights about to expire, 1253; the novelists—Galt, 1264; Hook, ib.; ephemeral critics and superficially informed writers, 1254; utilitarianism, 1255; changes in the character of literature, ib.; the historians — Macaulay, ib.; Hallam, ib.; Carlyle, 1256; Lingard, Tytler, Forster, Mahon, ib.; Brougham, ib.; Napier, Mitford, Thirlwall, Grote, 1257; the novelists—Lytton, Dickens, Ainsworth, Thackeray, and others, ib.; prevalence of serials and works of fiction, ib.; Miss Martineau's political economy tales, 1258; the novels of Dickens, Gaskell, ib.; Kingsley, ib.; Thackeray, ib.; the poets—Tennyson, Browning, 1259; Hood, ib.; Punch; Theological writers, ib.; the political economy and statistical writers; the scientific writers, 1260; the essayists and critics, ib.; antiquarian publication; travels, the book trade, ib.; newspapers, ib.; analysis of the literature issued, 1816–1851, 1261; chronological table of the British writers of the present century, 1311

Lithography, invention of; introduced into England; early prints and lithographs, 1149
Littleton contests the speakership of the Commons with Harley, 1701, 686
Liturgy, bill for the reform of, rejected, 1689, 624
Liverpool, communication between the trading towns, and, very imperfect before the Mersey, Irwell, and Weaver were made navigable, 609; rapid progress of, ib.; formerly engaged in the slave trade, ib.
Liverpool, earl of, Robert Jenkinson; lord Hawkesbury; makes his first speech on the side of government, 1794, 1008; foreign secretary, 1801–1804, 1036, 1325; his frequent interviews with Otto; signs the preliminaries of peace with France, 1801, 1039; complains of Napoleon's conduct, 1040; his correspondence with Talleyrand, 1804, 1047; declines the premiership; lord warden of the Cinque Ports, 1806, 1056; home secretary, 1807, 1062; unable to send Wellington fresh troops, 1076; his fears for the safety of the British army in Portugal, 1809, 1077; war and colonial secretary of state, 1809–1812, ib.; declares England unable to continue operations long in the Peninsula, 1081; prime minister; first commissioner of the treasury, June, 1812, 1083; home secretary, 1804–1806, 1325; congratulates Wellington on his victory at Salamanca, 1087; proposes a bill of pains and penalties against queen Caroline, 1152; but subsequently abandons it, 1153; presses for the readmission of Canning into the Cabinet, 1154; tries a second time in vain, 1157; his answer to the king's question as to what political principles were to be followed, 1158; measures proposed for insuring the stability of the public credit, 1163; he is against granting relief to Roman Catholics, 1164; taken with a fit of apoplexy, Feb. 18, 1827, which incapacitates him for business; his long friendship with Canning, ib.
Livingstone, sir Thomas, commander of the forces in Scotland, 645; instructions to, as to Highland rebels, ib.; considered not guilty of the Glencoe massacre, 649
Local Jurisdiction Courts bill rejected, 1833, 1205
Lochiel. See Camerou of Lochiel.
Locke opposes the depreciated currency theory, 663
Locker, E. H., note on; quotation from his memoir on major André, 893
Lollards, rise and increase of the, 149; the doctrines of, enforced by Piers Ploughman, ib.; the statute de heretico comburendo, the first in England for punishing heresy with death, passed in 1400 for the suppression of, 161; burning of William Salter, a London clergyman, ib.; alleged conspiracy of, against the State, on the conviction of Oldcastle for heresy, 163; suppressed, and some of the conspirators executed, ib.; new statute against, ib.; the spirit of, not wholly trodden out in time of Henry VIII., 231
Londinium, sacked and destroyed by Boadicea, A.D. 61, 9; Roman antiquities of, discovered in 1784, ib.
London, state of, under the Romans, 14; Roman remains found at, ib.; power and population of, in the time of Stephen, 78; amusements and exercises of the inhabitants, ib.; they assist in the "Rout of Winchester," and capture the earl of Gloucester, 78; oppression on the industry of, by Henry III., 108; riots in, in consequence, ib.; unpopularity of Queen Eleanor, 109; notice of bishop Swinfield's house in Old Fish street, in 1289, 120; markets and shops, ib.; state of the streets and highways, ib.; construction of the houses, 121; coal not then generally used, ib.; state of, in 1458, 191; sanitary regulations for, 226; riot in, on Evil May Day, 1517, against the Flemings, 236; buildings of, temp. Henry VIII., 295; state of the highways and streets, ib.; statute of sewers passed for, in 1427, ib.; Act for supplying with water, from Hampstead and other places, ib.; provision for lighting, ib.; statute for regulating watermen's fares, ib.; unwholesomeness of the churchyards in, 296; wealth of the traders, in, ib.; Henry Machyn's Diary of the sights and events in, during the first year of the Marian persecution, 331, et seq.; villainies practised in, temp. Eliz. 386; increase of London and Westminster, 387; statutes against the increase of buildings, ib.; hospitals and almshouses, ib.; plague of 1603, in, 397; New River brought to, by sir Hugh Myddleton in 1613, 410; continued increase of, ib.; ravages of the plague in 1625, 420; proclamation by Charles I. against the increase of houses in, and fines extorted in 1633 to prevent their being pulled down, 429; hackney-coaches forbidden, in 1635, to pass up and down the streets, ib.; despotic order of Charles I. to pull down houses and shut up shops, but without any aim at public improvement, 431; reception given by, to Mary de Medicis in 1638, 432; apprentices of, tumults raised by, in favor of the parliament, 446; skirmishes of, with Lunsford and the cavaliers, ib.; shutting up of the playhouses in, 451; described by Milton at the commencement of the Civil War, ib.; character of the volunteers and militia of, at the time of the Civil War, ib.; active exertions of the women of, in favor of the parliamentary party, ib.; character of the apprentices, ib.; ordered to be fortified, and plan of fortifications, 454; inhabitants of, march to Turnham Green, 457; anxious for peace, ib.; plot to arm the royalists in, discovered, 459; unusual agitation of, 460; prowess of the trained bands of, at the battle of Newbury, 461; consternation of, at the approach of the army, 477; tumults in, 479; royalists re-action and riots in, 483; popular demonstration in, in consequence of Cromwell's departure, ib.; bonfires lighted throughout, on account of John Lilburne's acquittal, 493; tumult of the Fifth Monarchy men, in 1657, 522; rising of apprentices in, against Oliver Cromwell, 525; anger of people of, at the expensive pageantry at Oliver Cromwell's burial, 526; burning of the Rump in 1660, 528; the Great Plague of 1665, 542; deficient supply of water, bad drainage, and crowded dwellings, great promoters of its fatality, ib.; Defoe's narrative of it, 543; departure of the Court, and of such of the inhabitants as were able, ib.; some of the clergy and the non-conforming ministers remain, 544; Great Fire of, 546; accounts of, by Pepys and Evelyn, ib.; by Baxter, 547; estimated loss occasioned by, ib.; Wren's plan for rebuilding the city, ib.; panic of, on the Dutch burning the English ships in the Medway, 550; cut off from their supply of coal by the Dutch fleet, ib.; panic of the inhabitants at the revelations of Oates's Popish Plot in 1678, 562; excitement in, on the occasion of the Court manœuvering to cause Dudley North to be appointed sheriff, 572; a quo warranto against the city for misdemeanors, which submits to conditions, 574; monastic establishments opened in 1686, 587; great rejoicings in, on the acquittal of the seven bishops in 1687, 593; riots in, on James II. quitting Whitehall, 598; influence of the large population of, upon agriculture, 611; population in 1688 and 1801, 613; vessels belonging to the port of, in 1702, ib.; extensive commerce of, at the commencement of the 18th century, ib.; the various trading companies of, 614; the banking system commenced in, temp. Charles II., ib.; mania for companies in, at the beginning of the 18th century, ib.; lotteries, ib.; the tradesmen of, in queen Anne's reign, ib.; the rebuilding of, by sir C. Wren, after the fire, 615; the progress of the fashionable world of, to the west, ib.; its streets; their state, passengers, and police, ib.; desire of nobility and gentry to gather in, 619; the manners and customs of, as influenced by this desire, ib.; large amount of pauperism in, temp. queen Anne, 620; club life of, 746; Wren's improvements in, 753; St. Paul's cathedral, ib.; the parish churches of, built by Wren, 754; street life of, temp. Anne and George I., 758; the Londoners prepare to resist the Highlanders, 1745; public feeling in, during the rebellion, 810; prevalence of robberies, and scarcity of police in, temp. George II., 824; riots of Spitalfields weavers in 1765, 851; the Wilkite mob, 1768, 855; riots among the sailors and coal-heavers, ib.; address and remonstrance of the city of, denying the legality of the parliament, 864; contests between the house of commons and the corporation of, 865; address and remonstrance of the city of, to the king, denouncing the government measures respecting America, 873; monument in memory of W. Pitt, earl of Chatham, erected in the Guildhall by the corporation of, 885; Gordon riots in, 1780, 890; supply of animal food for, from Essex, 912; butter and ducks from Bucks, ib.; sale of cattle and sheep at Smithfield in 1732, 1770 and 1859, 914; eating, coffee, and chop-houses, and other public refreshment places in, 959; Highbury barn; the Devil tavern; the Mitre; the White Conduit house; the Globe; Garraway's and White's, the Chapter coffee-house, ib.; Ranelagh gardens opened, 1742, ib.; the company at the Ranelagh and Vauxhall gardens, ib.; the Pantheon opened, 1772, 940; club-life and gambling in: Almack's, Boodles, White's, &c., 941; the citizens and tradesmen of; their gluttony and ignorance, 945; manners and characters of the lower orders, ib.; rabbles and mobs in, 946; the police and watchmen of, ib.; thanksgiving in, on the king's recovery, 1788, 958; assault on the king by a mob of, 1795, 1010; the declaration of the inhabitants of, that they will defend the British kingdom, 1803, 1044; the corporation of, opposes the renewal of the income tax in 1816, 1113; its crime encouraged by its police; extensive prevalence of crime and vice, 1118; state of, before and after the passing of the Westminster Paving and Lighting Act in 1762, ib.; the introduction of gas in Pall Mall in 1807 considerably influenced the prevention of crime, 119; mendicity, vagrancy, and destitution in, ib.; evils produced by the law of settlement, ib.; inquiry into the state of education of the poorer classes of, 1120; saving banks in, ib.; the Hampden Club of, 1122; the Spenceans, ib.; the meeting in the Spa fields, and the riot in the city, which latter is put down by the mayor, ib.; architecture and architects of, 1140; Waterloo bridge commenced 1811, completed 1817, built by Rennie; Southwark and Vauxhall bridges, 1144; docks of, and London bridge built by Rennie, ib.; the sculpture of, 1145; the Townley, Phigaleian and Elgin marbles, ib.; enthusiastic sympathy of its mechanics with queen Caroline, 1152; mechanics' institution of, inaugurated by Dr. Birkbeck, 1823; university of, opened 1828, 1175; dread of the proposed new police for, 1828, ib.; increased representation of, effected by the Reform Act of 1832; condition of the four new boroughs—Marylebone, Finsbury, the Tower Hamlets, and Lambeth, 1200; population and houses in, 1841, 1226; supply of food to, ib.; sanitary condition of its laboring classes, 1227; evils arising from interment in, 1228; Walker's usefulness in reclaiming the Devil's Acre, 1230
London bridge, building of, in 1209, 101; new bridge, 1144
London Gazette, establishment of, by sir Roger L'Estrange, in 1665, 545
Londonderry, siege of, and gallant defence by Walker and Baker, 1689, 627; invested April 20, 628; miseries, starvation, and agonizing despair endured by the besieged, ib.; the relief, ib.; the siege is raised, Aug. 1, ib.
Londonderry, marquis of. See Castlereagh, lord.
Londonderry, marquis of, anger of, in parliament, 1831, 1190; being considered incompetent to act as ambassador to Russia, he declines the post, 1835, 1216
Long Parliament, the meeting of, on Nov. 3, 1640, 435; its character, 4 6; opened by Charles I., 437; Lenthall chosen speaker, ib.; votes the release of persons imprisoned by the Star Chamber, ib.; Pym's speech in, impeaching Strafford, ib.; Strafford and Laud impeached by, ib.; Finch, Windebank, and the Ship-Money impeached by, 438; orders issued by, for destroying crucifixes, images, superstitious pictures, etc., ib.; a bill of attainder passed against Strafford, 441; act passed against the untimely adjournment or dissolving of the parliament without its own consent, ib.; it proceeds in its reforms, and abolishes the Star Chamber Court, the Court of High Commission, and other arbitrary courts, 442; act for the pacification of Scotland passed; the Irish insurrection of 1641 breaks out, 443; requested by the king to take measures for the suppression of the rebellion, ib.; debate on the Remonstrance, and its adoption, 444; formation of parties for the approaching struggle, ib.; the earls of Holland, Leicester, and Essex join the parliamentary party, ib.; the Remonstrance presented to the king, ib.; popular tumults, increase of petitioning, and cry against the bishops; rise of the terms Roundhead and Cavalier; twelve bishops protest against the force used towards them, and are committed to the Tower for treason, ib.; the question of the militia ordered to be taken into consideration, on Jan. 3, 1642, 456; the claims of the Commons an invasion of the rights of the Crown; the king attempts to seize the five members, Pym, Hollis, Hampden, Haslerig, and Strode, on Jan. 3, 447; sir R. Verney's account of the proceedings on the occasion; the members retire to the city, and the king demands them at Guildhall; they are brought back in triumph to the House; the governors of Portsmouth and Hull are directed by ordinance to hold those places for "the king and parliament," ib.; the bill for excluding bishops from the House of Lords agreed to, and the Militia bill refused by the king, 448; the House approves of Hotham having refused the king entrance into Hull; the leaders prepare for war, but send propositions to the king at York, 449; the king sets up his standard at Nottingham, 453; attempts to negotiate; but his propositions are rejected; issues a declaration of war, and Essex marches from London, 454; sends proposals to Charles, after the battle of Edgehill, to negotiate, 457; sends commissioners to Charles at Oxford, in March, 1643, to negotiate for peace, 458; establishes a Great Seal, and provides for the due administration of justice; Edmund Waller's plot against, 459; Waller's arrest and execution of Challoner and Tomkins, 459; negotiations of, for an alliance with Scotland, 463; its members swear to the "Solemn League and Covenant"; conformity to Presbyterianism enforced by, ib.; resolves to fill up the vacancies in the House, and increased strength of the Independents in consequence, 471; receives overtures of pacification from the king, and rejects them, 471; negotiation with the Scots for the surrender of the king; state of parties in, ib.; the treaty concluded, and the king surrendered, 474; end of the first Civil War, ib.; struggle of the Presbyterian members to repress the Independents, who are strong in the army, and are headed by Cromwell, 475; vote passed for disbanding the army; petition against, presented by the officers, ib.; proceedings of Adjutators, 476; private resolution of the members of, to arrest Cromwell; the army removes the king from Holmby, ib.; the army advances to London and demands the impeachment of eleven of the Presbyterian members, 477; they withdraw, and the House votes the adoption of the army's proceedings, ib.; tumults in London, and the mob forces the House to rescind a vote passed on the day before, 479; the speaker and many of the members proceed to the army, and the Presbyterian party resumes its predominance, ib.; Fairfax and the army restore the speaker and the Independent members, ib.; declares against any further treaty with the king, 482; reaction of the people against, in favor of the king, 483; treaty of Newport commenced, 485; a Remonstrance sent by the army to, 486; the army is marched into London, 487; the House purged by colonel Pride, ib.; ordinance for the king's trial, 488; the High Court of Justice appointed, ib.; the king sentenced to death, 489; issues a proclamation that no new king be proclaimed without its authority, 490; Icon Basilikè printed, 491; the House of Lords voted useless, and the office of king abolished, ib.; Council of State appointed, ib.; trial and execution of the royalists, duke of Hamilton, earl of Holland, and lord Capel, 492; public indignation occasioned by, ib.; the Levellers are suppressed, 493; a thanksgiving day on account of the suppression of the Levellers, ib.; trial of John Lilburne, 493; appoints Cromwell lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 493; Rupert driven from the Irish coast, 495; Cromwell honorably received by, on his return from Ireland, 4 7; prepares forces for a war with Scotland, ib.; Cromwell constituted general by act of, ib.; despatch of Cromwell to, announcing the victory of Dunbar; gives Cromwell liberty to return home, 498; letter of Cromwell to, announcing the invasion of England, 499; defeat of the royalist army at Worcester, ib.; Charles and his adherents declared rebels and traitors to the commonwealth 500; courts-martial held upon nine prisoners taken at Worcester, and three executed, of whom one was the earl of Derby, ib.; reward of £1000 offered by, to any one who would capture Charles II., ib.; law for the election of future parliaments passed, the House voting not to sit beyond Nov. 3, 1654, 502; conference on the settlement of the nation, ib.; foreign relations of the commonwealth, ib.; differences with the United Provinces, 503; Navigation Act passed. ib.; war declared against the Dutch, ib.; general thanksgiving appointed on account of the successes of Blake over Van Trom, 504; petition of the army to, ib.; the question of future parliamentary representation, 505; dissolution of, 506; public opinion on dissolution of, ib.; restored under the name of "the Rump," 527; resolves that the military shall be under the civil power, ib.; discussions as to form of government, ib.; the Rota Club, ib.; royalist insurrection breaks out, 528; council of officers, ib.; committee of safety, ib.; the parliament is ejected, ib.; is restored by the council of officers, 529; disaffection of the city towards it, ib.; Monk employed to quell the disaffection, 530; burning of the Rump in Jan., 1660, ib.; the secluded members are restored by Monk's intervention, ib.; renewal of the Presbyterian measures on their restoration, ib.; final dissolution of, on March 16, 1660. 531

Longchamp, William, appointed chancellor of England by Richard, is deposed by prince John in 1191, 94; retires to Flanders, and writes to Richard, ib.

Longwy taken by the Prussians, Aug. 22, 1792, 981

Losowitz, battle of, Oct. 1, 1756, 674

Lotteries, multitudinosity of, temp. William III., 614, 659; suppressed 1698, 614

Loudon, earl of, commands the British troops in America, 833; shrinks from attacking Louisbourg, 836; censured and recalled; surprises Frederick in his camp, 837

Loughborough, A. Wedderburn, lord, solicitor-general, 1771; reproves Fox's expression of "criminals," 865; insults Franklin, 870; attorney-general; his opinion on the employment of the military in suppressing riots, 891; supports Fox's Libel bill, 1792, 976; attempts to promote a union between Fox and Pitt, hoping thereby to obtain the lord chancellorship, 977; his further intrigues for the same object are successful; he obtains the Great Seal Jan. 28, 1793, 985; his "Traitorous Correspondence" bill passed in a modified form, 992; his extravagant idea of the success of the British arms in Holland, 993; principal adviser of the trials of Hardy and others; anecdote of George III. and, 1003; his opinion on the order forbidding the Bank to pay in cash, 1013; one of "the king's friends"; opposes the concessions to Catholics, 1035; resigns his chancellorship, 1801, 1036; lord chancellor, 1783, 1325

Louis, prince, of Baden, commands the allied armies in 1704, alternately with Marlborough, 695; aids him in gaining the battle of the Schellenberg or Donawert, July 2, 696; despatched by Marlborough to carry on the siege of Ingoldstadt, 697; conducts the siege of Landau, which capitulates in Dec., 699

Louis of France offered the crown of England in 1215, 105; arrives in England, and receives the homage of the barons in London, ib.; suspected treachery, and decline of the popularity of, ib.; his forces are defeated at Lincoln by the earl of Pembroke, 106; and a fleet with reinforcements destroyed near Dover, ib.; makes a treaty with Henry III., and withdraws, ib.

Louis XI., of France, meets Edward IV., and cajoles him into a disgraceful treaty, 201; breaks off the contract for the marriage of the dauphin with Edward's daughter, 202

Louis XIV.; extent of his aid to king James, 1690, 637; receives James' project of invading England with coldness, 639; his power and kingdom, 641; himself, not the French, the real enemy of England, 642; besieges Mons and compels it to surrender, 643, on the death of his minister Louvois he offers his assistance to James in invading England, 651; conducts the siege of Namur, 652; which surrenders to him, ib.; his position and opinions, 656; the routine of his day, 656; prepares for a campaign, 1693, ib.; suddenly leaves his army and returns to Versailles, ib.; promises to aid James in invading England, if the Jacobites rise, 664; negotiates for peace with William III., 1697, 668; the treaty of Ryswick is concluded, 668; his reception of the English ambassador, Portland, 1698, 671; sends count Tallard as his ambassador at the court of William, 671; William's dread of Spain and the Indies being acquired by, 677; seizes the Spanish crown for his grandson William in opposition to the terms of the two partition treaties, 679; suspected of bribing the English, 680; his ostentatious extravagance and that of his court bring about the poverty of the nation, 681; his policy, ib.; attempts to influence Charles of Spain to place the succession in the Bourbon family, 683; he accepts the will of Charles, ib.; his grandson succeeds to the Spanish dominions, ib.; on the death of James II., in 1701, he proclaims his son, the prince of Wales, as James III., king of England, 686; concentrates the military of France upon Germany, 694; receives news of the defeat of his armies at Blenheim, 699; feels his losses in the Low Countries; invited to invade Scotland, 707; pride roused by Marlborough's demands; his example, and appeal to his subjects, fires the spirit of the nation, 717; anguish at the exhausted state of the kingdom and inability to obtain peace, 723; secretly promotes the election of Charles of Austria to the German empire, 1711, 738; makes viscount Bolingbroke a present of a ring worth 4000*l.* during his embassage at Paris, 1713, 735; his concessions in the peace of Utrecht, ib.; died Sept. 1, 1715, 762

Louis XV., of France is declared of age; takes upon himself the government of France; appoints duke de Bourbon his minister, 778; refuses to marry the infanta of Spain, to whom he was betrothed, ib.; joins his army at Fontenoy, 1745; urged to retire from the battle by marshal Saxe, but he spiritedly remains to see the battle out, 798; sends an army to invade Brabant, 1747; present at the battle of Lauffeld, 820; sensitiveness to Frederick the Great's ridicule, 831; sides with Maria Theresa in the Seven Years' war, 1756, ib.; his nervousness caused by an attempt on his life by Damiens, 1757; misery of the country and extravagance of the court, 842; died, May 10, 1774, 871; reigned, 1715-1774, 1309

Louis XVI. quarrels with his parliament, 960; attends the meeting of the states-general, 1789, 961; his views on the union of the three orders, 961; agrees to the formation of the national assembly, ib.; refuses to withdraw the troops stationed between Paris and Versailles, 962; yields to his people's demands, 963; revived loyalty of the national guard towards, 964; his audience with the Parisian women, 965; besieged in the Versailles palace by the mob, ib.; himself and family removed to Paris, 965; his speech at the sitting of the national assembly, Feb. 4, 1790, 967; attends the federation fête, 968; his deposition demanded by the mob, 971; himself and family vigilantly watched; he escapes with it from Paris, July 21, 1791, 972; is captured at Varennes, and conducted back to Paris, ib.; the people's hatred of royalty, ib.; the formation of the legislative assembly agreed to by, 973; confidence in revived, ib.; desires emigants to disarm; applies his veto to the decrees against the emigrants, 974; opposed to declaring war with Austria; his powers as king, 977; insulted by Roland, whom he dismisses; agrees to the formation of a camp near Paris, but not to the deportation of priests, 978; his firmness in the interview with the insurrectionists of June, 1792, 978; his deposition again demanded, 979; blockaded in the Tuileries by the mob; places himself and family under the assembly's protection, 979; removal of the royal family to the Temple, 980; all the members of which are there harshly treated, 984; he is impeached at the bar of the convention, 984; anxiety for his fate shown in the British parliament, 985; his trial, 987; condemnation, 987; and execution, Jan. 21, 1793, ib.; proceedings of the British parliament, 988

Louis XVII., of France, presented to the people at the federation fête, 1790, 968; unharmed by the people at the opera, 974; present at Louis XVI.'s interview with the insurrectionists of June 20, 1792, 978; imprisoned in the Temple, Aug. 1792, 984; death of, in the Temple, Paris, June 8, 1795, shameful treatment of, 1009

Louis XVIII., of France, enters Paris, May 3, 1814, 1092; reception of, on his entry into London, 1092; retrospect of his restoration, 1102; promulgation of the constitutional charter, ib.; its provisions, ib.; partly his own work, ib.; discontent shown under his government, ib.; deserted by marshal Ney, dissolves the chambers and removes his court from Paris to Ghent, 1104; public entry into Paris, July 8, 1815, 1109; execution of Labedoyere and marshal Ney, 1111; evacuation of France by the allied troops, 1818, 1130; declares war against Spain, 1823, 2157; the campaign; occupation of Madrid and overthrow of Spain, ib.; death of, Sept. 6, 1824; his good sense preserves his kingdom from convulsions, 1180; anecdote of, 1181; reigned from 1815 to 1824, 1310

Louis Philippe (France), present at the battle of Valmy, 1792; and at that of Jemappes, 1792, 982; appointed lieutenant-general of France, 1830, 1153; opens the legislative session; accepts the throne of France, Aug 9, 1154; his daughter married to king Leopold of Belgium, 1832, 1221; death of the duke of Reichstadt, ib.; his government and frequent changes of ministry; attempts to assassinate him by Fieschi (1835), Alibaud and Meunier (1836), 1222; his fears of Louis Napoleon, ib.; the king's perplexity caused by Louis Napoleon's enterprise at Strasbourg, ib.; the king sends him to America; compels his extradition from Switzerland, ib.; his visit to the queen, 1272; his Spanish marriage plans, 1283; doubts as to his friendliness towards England, 1284; his abdication, ib.; stormed in his palace by the mob, and compelled to fly, ib.

Louisbourg capitulates to the British, 1758, 837

Louvain given up to Marlborough, 1706, 706

L'Ouverture, Toussaint, accomplishes the freedom of the St. Domingo slaves; commander-in-chief of their armies, 1796, 1042; president and governor for life, 1801; Bonaparte sends an expedition against him, ib.; resists, but is compelled to submit; arrested and imprisoned; died April 27, 1803, ib.

Louvois, chief minister of France; suspected to have been poisoned, 1792, 651; favors Dumont's plot against William III., 653

Lovat, Simon Fraser, lord, takes possession of Inverness for government, 764; his perfidy and wavering conduct during the rebellion of 1745, 814; he is impeached by the House of Commons, Dec. 1746; trial of, and death, 818

Lowe, sir Hudson, governor of St. Helena; complained of as being harsh to Napoleon, 1155

Lowick tried for conspiring against William III.; and executed, 665

Lowry, his engraving machine, 1148

Lucerne, prince de, present at Cornwallis's surrender, 897

Lucius, or Lever Maur, "who reigned in Britain, A.D. 180," doubtful statement of his having become a Christian under pope Eleutherius, and having built the chapel in Dover Castle, 16

Luddism active in 1812, 1083; in 1816, 1117; in 1817, 1124; in 1830, 1184; and in 1831, 1193

Ludlam, Isaac, executed for insurrectioning, 1124

Ludlow, Edmund, parliament wishes to apprehend him, 1689, on hearing of his being in London, he returned to Vevay, 634

Lundy appointed governor of Londonderry by William; but being suspected of an intention to surrender he is turned out by the townspeople, 627

Luneville, peace of; preliminaries signed July 28, 1800; and completed on Feb. 9, 1801, 1035, 1040

Luther, Martin, denouncement of the sale of indulgences by, 231; attends the Diet at Worms, 235; intrepid behavior of, before the Diet, ib.; Henry VIII. writes a book against, ib.; Luther's works burnt at Paul's Cross, ib.; spread of the doctrines of, in Germany, 240

Luttrell, col., his motion against Wilkes; opposes Wilkes as a candidate for Middlesex; defeated; but is declared to be the legal representative, 1769, 856

Luttrell, Temple, proposes a measure for manning the navy, 1777, 881

Lützen, battle of, May 2, 1813, 1089

Luxemburg, French general, gains the battle of Fleurus, 1690, 642; helps Louis in besieging Namur, 652; defeats William III. at Steinkirk, 652; campaign of 1693, 656; again defeats William at Landen, ib.

Lyndhurst, J. S. Copley, lord; advocates the allowance of counsel to prisoners, 693; sergeant; Watson's counsel, 1817, 1122; lord chancellor, 1827, 1166; resigned 1830, 1187; moves that the disfranchising clauses of the Reform bill be postponed, 1197; negotiates for the formation of a ministry willing to carry out an extensive parliamentary reform, 1832, 1198; his temporary government with the duke of Wellington, 1835, 1214; lord chancellor in the Peel ministry, 1215; opposes the Municipal Reform bill, 1218; his hostile speeches against the Melbourne government, 1836, 1219; approves of the bill for allowing counsel to prisoners, 1220

Lyndsay, Patrick, M.P. for Edinburgh; his speech on the Porteous riots, 787; evidence of, on these riots, ib.

Lyon, siege of, by, and surrender to, the Jacobins, 1793, 997; massacre of the Lyonnese, ib.

Lyttelton, sir George, opposes the convention with Spain, 791; speaks against an amendment of the address for preventing parliamentary corruption, 806; chancellor of the exchequer, 1755, 865

Lyttleton, Thomas, lord, his claims to the authorship of Junius's Letters, 858

Maas, Dirk, a Dutch battle painter, 757

Macarthy, viscount Mountcashel; commands a force advancing against Enniskillen; defeated 1689, 628

Macaulay, lord, low estimate of ancient Britain by, 4; his remarks on Pitt's policy in 1793, 1000; M.P. for Calne, 1830; his first speech in parliament, 1180; speaks in favor of reform, 1189; dangers feared by, on the rejection of the Reform bill, 1197; M.P. for Edinburgh; his speech on disloyal Tories, 1238; his influence in causing the rejection of sergeant Talfourd's copyright bill, 1253; his plan, ib.; eloquence and powerful memory evinced by, as Guizot's cicerone in Westminster Abbey, 1255; his mode of treating history, ib.; his estimate of Hallam's "Constitutional History," ib.; his speech on "the people's charter" presented by Ducombe, 1263

MacCallum Mhor. See Argyle, J. Campbell, duke of.

Macclesfield, Thomas Parker, earl of, lord chancellor, impeached, 1725, for malversation in that office; he is found guilty, excluded from his office, and fined 30,000*l.*, 778; helps Chesterfield in carrying the bill for reforming the calendar through the Lords, 751, 822

MacDonald of Boisdale, advises Charles Stuart to forego his insurrection designs, 1745, 801

MacDonald of Glencoe. See Glencoe.

Macdonald of Keppoch, raises his clan, and joins Dundee in defeating Mackay at Killiecrankie, 631; letters of fire and sword issued against, 649; slain at Culloden, 658

MacDonald of Kinloch Moidart, argues against the Pretender's plans; joins his cause, 801

MacDonald, lady Margaret, aids the young Pretender in his escape from Skye, 818

Macdonald, general, defeated at Trebbia, 1799, 1030; and at Katzbach, 1813, 1090

MacDonald, Flora, aids prince Charles during his wanderings in the Highlands, 1746, 818

Macdonnell, colonel, his exploit at Waterloo, 1106

Machyn's "Diary of a Resident in London," notices from, 331

MacIntosh, brigadier; commands a detachment sent to aid the southern insurgents; his march to Seton House, 1715, 763; commands the rebels at Preston, 764; escapes from Newgate, 767

MacIver survives the massacre after Culloden, 817

Mack, general, Austrian commander; communicates secretly with Dumouriez, 993; surrenders 30,000 troops to Napoleon at Ulm, Oct. 20, 1805, 1050

Mackay, general, appointed to the command of the army in Scotland, 631; his character, ib.; marches upon Blair castle; is met by Dundee while advancing through the pass of Killiecrankie, and sustains a defeat, July 27, 1689, ib.; takes an active part in the capture of Athlone, June 30, 1691, 644; builds Fort William, and fixes a garrison there under colonel Hill, 645; slain in the conflict at Steinkirk, Aug. 3, 1692, 653

Mackintosh, sir James, his remarks on Burke's opinions, 969; his speech in defence of Peltier, 1808, 1043; wrote the declaration for the Londoners, 1044; takes up the advocacy of amendment in the criminal laws on the death of sir S. Romilly; moves for a select committee to consider this subject, 1130; opinion of, on the emancipation of the slaves, 1161, results of his efforts for the repeal of capital punishments, ib.; supports the bill for allowing counsel to prisoners, 1220

MacLean, colonel, repulses Arnold; saves Quebec, 1775, 877; tenders Hastings's resignation of his governorship, 949

MacNaghten, sir William, directs the affairs at Cabul, 1249; appointed governor of Bombay, 1250; his conference with Akbar Khan, by whom he is massacred, ib.

Macpheadris, captain John, his ill-treatment in the Fleet prison, 782

MacPherson, Cluny, demand of, on joining the Pretender, 1745, 802; his dashing bravery at Clifton, 812; keeps up a correspondence with Charles Edward, 820
Macquirk tried, and found guilty of murdering Mr. Clark; pardoned, 858
Madison, James, president of the United States, 1809-1817, 1310; his hostile message against England, 1091; proposes a repeal of the Embargo acts, 1814, 1099; deprecates the destruction of the Washington public buildings by the British, 1100
Madras attacked and taken by the French, 1746, 827; restored to Britain, ib.
Madrid, taken by the duke of Berwick, 713; entered by the allies, 1710; and the French, 725; taken by the French, 1808, 1070; entered by Wellington, Aug. 1812, 1087; occupied by the French, 1823, 1157
Mæatæ, revolt of, 11; suppressed, ib.
Maestricht, surrendered to Kleber, 1794, 1007
Magdalen bridge, Oxford, built by Gwyn, 935
Magdalen College. See Oxford.
Magna Charta proposed to John at Oxford by archbishop Langton and the earl of Pembroke, who rejects it, 103; signed by John at Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, ib.; provisions of, ib.; effects of, upon the nation, 104; provisions for the observance of, ib.
Magnentius, revolt of, A.D. 350, 17
Maharajpoor, battle of, Dec. 29, 1843, 1268
Mahomed Ali flies to Trichinopoly, 827; struggles against Chunda Sahib, ib.
Mahon, lord, his plan for amending the copyright law, 1253; characteristics of his History of England, 1256
Mahoni, commands at Murviedro; received by Peterborough; arrested, 702
Mahratta wars, history of the, 1778-1782, 949; and 1802-1805, 1053-1055
Mahrattas, peishwa of, concludes an alliance with Cornwallis, 989; prepares to invade the British territories, 1169; surrenders to the British; abdicates his throne; becomes a pensioner of the East India Company, 1170
Maida, battle of, July 4, 1806, 1060
Mail-coaches, introduction of, 1784, 938
Mailliard leads the Parisian mob of 1789, 965; president of the assembly; his sentence of death on prisoners, 980
Maine, duc de, receives an important command in the French army, 661; incompetent and cowardly, ib.
Maitland captain; Bonaparte surrendering to him, he conveys the ex-emperor to Plymouth, 1108
Malacca ceded to the British, 1824, 1170
Malaga, sea fight off, 1704, 700
Malcolm, king of Scotland, receives Edgar Atheling, 58; invades England in 1070, and marriage of, with Margaret, sister of Edgar, 59; civilization of Scotland promoted by Margaret, 61; unsuccessfully attacks William II., 67; killed, ib.
Malcolm, king of Scotland, compelled to surrender Cumberland and Northumberland to Henry II. in 1157, 82
Malesherbes counsel for Louis XVI., 1792, 987; guillotined, 1794, 1001
Malines submits to Marlborough, 1706, 706.
Malmesbury, Harris, lord, British chargé des affaires at Madrid, 1770, 866; minister at Berlin; his correspondence with the home government, ib.; recommends that the proceedings against Portland be postponed, 985; sent on an especial mission to Berlin to purchase assistance by subsidy, 1793, 1006; appointed a negotiator to demand the princess Caroline of Brunswick for the prince of Wales, ib.; negotiates unsuccessfully for peace with France, 1796, 1012; leaves Paris, Dec. 19; gives warning of a French expedition against Ireland, ib.; appointed to negotiate for peace at Lisle, 1797; the negotiations are put an end to by the revolution of the 18th Fructidor, 1017; quotation from his diary, 1046; remarks on the effect of the news of the Ulm surrender on Pitt, 1050
Malplaquet, battle of, Sept. 11, 1709, 718
Malta taken by Bonaparte, 1798, 1020; surrenders to the British after a two years' blockade, Sept., 1800, 1035; retained by the British, 1043
Malthus advocates the adoption of savings banks, 1120
Manchester, its population in Charles II.'s reign, and fifty years later, 609; its men and manufactures, ib.; the Blanket meeting at, 1817, 1123; the great reform meeting, 1132; and massacre at, ib.; obtains parliamentary representation, 1832, 1200; population of, with Salford, in 1831 and 1861, ib.
Manchester, earl of, as lord Kimbolton, accused, with the five members, of sedition, by Charles I., 447; commands at the second battle of Newbury, 466; is accused of indecision and delay by Cromwell in parliament, ib.
Mandat prepares to resist the insurrectionists of the 10th Aug., 1792; murdered, 979
Manners, illustration of, 1709-1742, from Hogarth, 758; 1737-1783, 937-947; 1784-1820, 1135, 1139, 1231
Mansfield, William Murray, earl of, attorney-general; his interview with lord Kilmarnock, 818; becomes chief justice and lord Mansfield, 1756, 832; declares Wilkes's outlawry null and void, 856; presides at Woodfall's prosecution, 859; chancellor of the exchequer, 1767, 865; his house sacked, and its contents, including his valuable library, burnt by the Gordon rioters, 1780, 891; opposes the "contractors" and "revenue officers" bills, 901
Mantua besieged by the French; capitulates, Feb. 2, 1797, 1017
Manufacturers, list of articles with which foreigners were not allowed to compete, 185
Mapes, Walter, satires of, on the state of the Church in the time of Henry II., 83
Mar, James Erskine, earl of, appointed secretary of state for Scotland, 1706; deprived of his office; marries the duke of Kingston's daughter; organizes an insurrection in Scotland; inaugurates it by raising the Pretender's standard at Braemar, September 6, 1715, 761; his want of energy and action; debilitates the powers of the insurrectionists; his movements cramped by the duke of Argyle; detaches a part of his army under MacIntosh; withdraws Argyle's attention from MacIntosh by a feint, 763; his indecisive march; halts at Sheriffmuir; receives a severe reverse in the conflict with Argyle, Nov. 13, 765; accompanies Charles in his flight to France, ib.
Marat harangues the populace of Paris, 1789, 962; desires to erect 800 gibbets, 969; advises that the royal palace be well watched, 971; aids in bringing about the September massacres, 1792, 981; denounces the moderation of Dumouriez, 993; excites the people to plunder the shops, 994; represents the executive power of France, 996; hates Robespierre, 996; assassinated by Charlotte Corday, July 13, 1793, ib.
Marcus Antoninus sends a number of Germans into Britain, 14
Marengo, battle of, June 14, 1800, 1034
Margaret, the heiress of Alexander III. of Scotland, dies in 1290, and leaves the succession to the crown in dispute, 123
Margaret of Anjou. See Henry VI.
Margaret of Burgundy, sister to Edward IV., married in 1468, 196; supports the pretensions of Lambert Simnel against Henry VII., 213; in 1492 protects Perkin Warbeck, 215; visited by Henry VIII. in 1513, 229
Maria Josepha of Austria married Augustus III. of Poland; compelled by force to give up his state papers, 831
Maria Louisa, archduchess of Austria, marries Bonaparte, 1078; gives birth to a son, March, 1811, 1081; appointed regent of France, 1091
Maria Theresa, daughter of Charles VI.; heiress of his states, 794; the English parliament grants a subsidy to, ib.; marries Francis, grand duke of Tuscany; her claim disputed, 795; flies to Hungary; throws herself on the support of the Hungarians; the fortunes of her armies, 796; restores her conquests in Bavaria, 798; grieves at the loss of Silesia; joined by Louis XV., 831; opposed to the partition of Poland, 866; Empress of Germany, 1745-1762, 1310
Marie Antoinette escapes from the mob, 1789, 965; removed to Paris, ib.; presents the dauphin to the people, 1790, 968; interview with Mirabeau, 969; accompanies Louis XVI. in his flight from Paris and capture, 972; her apparent calmness at the opera, 974; present at Louis's audience with the 20th June insurrectionists, 978; description of, at the attack on the Tuileries, August, 1792, 980; imprisoned in the Temple, ib.; treatment pursued towards, 984; guillotined, Oct. 16, 1793, 1000
Marlborough, S. Churchill, duchess of, lady of the bedchamber to the princess Anne; her friendship for and large influence over the princess, 634; urges her to obtain increased income from the parliament and not from the king, ib.; she is dismissed the royal palace, 650; she loses her influence over the queen, 715; her account of the queen's political intrigues with Harley at private audiences, 716; her income 9500*l.* per annum, ib.; her description of Sacheverel's character, 723; she is hated and given up by Mrs. Morley (Anne), ib.; her dismissal from Anne's service, 1711, 725; her revenge, ib.; her meanness towards Vanbrugh, 755
Marlborough, duke of, John Churchill; an expedition against Ireland sails under his command, which disembarks near Cork, September 22, 1690; takes Cork on the 29th, 641; and Kinsale, ib.; he is intrusted with the command of the English troops in Flanders, 644; offers to go over to James, ib.; is dismissed from office by William, 650; in consequence of plotting for James's recall to the throne, ib.; treachery of, in the Brest affair of 1694; offers William his services, which are refused, 659; implicated by Fenwick with holding treacherous correspondence with James II., 668; governor of the duke of Gloucester, 682; receives the Order of the Garter, and is made captain-general of Anne's forces, 1702, 689; he is sent as envoy extraordinary to the States-general; his preparations for war, ib.; appointed generalissimo of the allied forces by the States; takes Venloo, September 18; Ruremonde, Stevenswart, Liege, October 23, and the castle of Chartreuse, ib.; an adventure, escape, and return to London, ib.; he is made duke of Marlborough, 1702, 690; desires to assist the Camisards, 691; takes Ulm, Bonn-Huy, 1703; proposes a grand design, but is thwarted by the States; takes Limbourg, 692; his difficulty in recruiting the army, 694; Louis XIV. concentrates his forces upon Germany, 1704, ib.; Marlborough plans a series of operations for opposing him, which he carries out with secrecy; marches to the Moselle, there gives Villeroy the slip, and pushes on to the Danube, 695; his march along the Rhine; his attention to detail; the high spirits of his army, ib.; passes the Neckar, June 3, ib.; meets prince Eugene on the 10th, and prince Louis of Baden on the 13th, ib.; encamps at Giengen; receives intelligence of the vicinity of the Bavarian and French army, 696; description of the Schellenberg, ib.; storms the Schellenberg in conjunction with prince Louis July 2, ib.; lays waste many villages in Bavaria, ib.; encamps at Friedberg, August 3; at Schonefeldt on the 10th; joins prince Eugene on the 11th, 697; they resolve to attack the enemy, who are encamped five miles off, ib.; marches upon their position, ib.; attacks Tallard's head-quarters at Blenheim, ib.; which leads to a general conflict, 698; he gains the victory, Aug. 13, ib.; his anxiety to obtain sufficient food for his troops and prisoners, 699; sets down before Ulm, Aug. 20; it capitulates Sept. 12; sets down before Landau, which also capitulates, December; concludes treaties with Bavaria and Prussia; receives honors; arrives at the Hague, Dec. 16; embarks at Rotterdam on the 22d and arrives at St. James's by the 26th, ib.; honors bestowed on, ib.; enthusiastic reception; opposes the Conformity bill, 699; embarks at Harwich, March 31, 1705, 703; his plans are opposed by the Dutch; crosses the Moselle and Saar, June 3, ib.; scarcity of food, and other disappointments, cause him to despond; rouses his spirits, joins d'Auverquerque, and regains possession of Huy, July 11, 704; forces the French lines, July 17, ib.; Villeroy retreats beyond the Dyle; he follows, but his plans are thwarted by the Dutch generals, 705; the first stone of his palace at Woodstock laid, ib.; opposes jobbery; arrives at the Hague, April 27, 1706, ib.; his confidence of victory; advances to give battle to the French, 706; the battle commences; he is nearly made prisoner; the village of Ramillies is seized by his forces; gains the victory of Ramillies, ib.; Antwerp, Ghent, Bruges, and Oudenarde surrender; Ostend is besieged; capitulates July 7; Menin captured, August 22; Dendermonde surrenders, Sept. 5; Ath falls October 4; he returns to England, 706; his pension of 5,000*l.* per annum settled upon his posterity, 713; visits Charles XII. at Alt Ransadt, April 27, 1707; and diplomatizes with him, ib.; accomplishes little in his campaign in the Netherlands; plans an attack upon France, 714; prepares to attack the French before Oudenarde; is joined by prince Eugene; and attacked by fever brought on by long marches and disappointments, 1708, 715; defeats the French at Oudenarde, July 11; his description of the battle, ib.; besieges Lille, 716; his disgust at the queen's temper; he is on the point of retiring from business, ib.; his yearly income nearly 75,000*l.*; covers the siege of Lille; his meanness towards Webb, 717; urges upon Godolphin the necessity of another campaign, ib.; his desire and attempt to reduce France to accept unmilitary terms; rouses the French national spirit; surrender of Tournay, 718; gains a victory at Malplaquet, Sept. 11, 1709, ib.; represents England at the conferences of Gertruydenberg, 1710, 723; his despondency at the state of affairs, ib.; mortified at the dismissal of his Whig friends and relations from office, ib.; returns to London, December; coldness of the queen, 724; and opposition of Harley and St. John towards him, ib.; sinister motives imputed to him; his wife dismissed from Anne's service, ib.; hostility shown towards, 725; leaves London, March 4, 1711, to assume his command in the Netherlands, 728; his terror of the press, ib.; forces the French lines with an inferior force, ib.; invests and takes Bouchain, ib.; his successes disparaged by the press; he writhes under their attacks, ib.; lands at Greenwich on his return home Nov. 17, 729; his answer to the queen's speech insinuating his desire for prolonging war, ib.; he is still opposed by Harley and the ministry; is turned out of all his offices by the queen, Dec. 31, ib.; his avariciousness; charged with illegally taking public moneys; his defence thereof, 730; his resignation in adversity, 733; his name omitted in the regency list 760; retains his office of captain-general and master of the ordnance, 761; death of, 1722, 775
Marlborough, duke of, resigns his military commission, 1743, 797; commands the troops sent against Cherbourg and St. Maloes, 1758, 837
Marlborough House built by Wren, 754
Marmont, marshal, appointed to command 20,000 men to be sent against England, 1065, 1050; commands the army of Holland, ib.; weakens the garrison of Ciudad Rodrigo, advances to its relief, 1085; commander of the French army in Spain, 1811; his manœuvres near Salamanca, 1086; a fault he commits is taken advantage of by Wellington, which results in the battle of Salamanaca, July 22, in which he is wounded and defeated, ib.; Napoleon's rage against, 1087; commands the forces in Paris, 1830, 1183; ordered to act against the July revolutionists; the struggle of July 28, ib.; he is besieged in the Tuileries and compelled to give in, ib.
Marriage act, 1753, 824
Marriage act, Royal, 868
Marriages bill, regulation of Dissenters', 1836, 1221
Marseillais, their arrival in Paris, July 30, 1792, 978; they assemble before Danton's club, ib.; their contest at the Tuileries, 979
Marshalsea prison, the horrors of the, 782
Marsiglia, defeat of the duke of Savoy at, 1693, 657
Marsin, general, commands a division of the French army at the battle of Blenheim, 697; joins his army with that of Villars, 1705, 701
Marston Moor, battle of, July 2, 1644, 465
Martignac, M. de, French Minister; character of his policy, 1181
Martineau, Harriet, success and objects of her political-economy tales, 1258-9
Martinique surrendered to the British, 1762, 845
Mary, queen of England, born 1516, refuses to acknowledge the validity of her mother's divorce, 265; refuses to accede to Edward's request to forbear the use of the mass, 313; bold letter of, to Edward VI., ib.; addresses a letter to the council on the death of her brother, and claims the crown, 317; is joined at Kenninghall by numerous adherents, ib.; is proclaimed in London, 318; triumphant arrival of, in London, ib.; Northumberland is tried and executed for treason, ib.; causes of her being so joyfully received by the people, 319; the coronation of, ib.; description of her person, ib.; meets her first parliament, and passes an Act for repealing certain treasons, and the penalties for denying the king's supremacy, ib.; repeal of Acts of Edward VI relating to religion, 320; projected marriage of, to Philip of Spain, and dissatisfaction of the people, ib.; arrival of ambassadors to arrange terms, ib.; insurrection of sir Thomas Wyat against the marriage, ib.;

courage and address shown by Mary on the occasion, 321; the populat on of London arm in her behalf, 322; Wyat is defeated, ib.; lord Guilford Dudley and lady Jane Grey beheaded, ib.; execution of Suffolk and numerous others, 323; trial and acquittal of sir Nicholas Throckmorton, ib.; the jury committed to prison, ib.; execution of Wyat, ib.; the princess Elizabeth sent for to court, ib.; is committed to the Tower, ib.; letter of Elizabeth to, ib.; the Spanish ambassador urges her trial and execution, 324; unquiet condition of the country, ib.; fiery zeal of Gardiner to suppress the Reformation, ib.; the married clergy expelled from their livings, ib.; Cranmer, Latimer, and Ri ley condemned as heretics at Oxford, ib.; arrival of Philip, of Spain, ib.; marriage of, with Philip, and pageantry on the occasion, ib.; bribery exercised by Philip, 325; arrival in England of cardinal Pole, ib.; he absolves the realm, ib.; submission of the parliament to the papal see ib.; the statutes against heretics revived, ib.; the Marian persecution, 326; list of Protestant victims, ib.; cardinal Pole exhorts to gentleness, but gives a commission to Gardiner, Bonner, and others, to deal with heretics then in prison, ib.; encouragement of the spy-system for the discovery of heresy, 329; Philip leaves England, 331; discontent of Mary at his not returning, ib.; opposition of the parliament to pope Paul IV.'s claims of supremacy, ib.; Dr. Dee in trouble for casting the nativities of the queen and the princess Elizabeth, 332; the Dudley conspiracy for robbing the exchequer, and placing Elizabeth on the throne, ib.; its discovery, and execution of the conspirators, ib.; Elizabeth suspected of participation, and her letter to the queen, ib.; cardinal Pole created archbishop of Canterbury, ib.; his moderation not satisfactory to the Pope, ib.; Philip returns to England, March, 1557, ib.; war declared against France at Philip's instigation, 333; the English forces assist in winning the battle of St. Quentin, ib.; Calais besieged and taken by the French, on Jan. 7, 1558, 334; Guisnes and Hammes taken, and the English wholly expelled from France, ib.; her last illness and death, on Nov. 17, 1558, ib.

Mary, daughter of James II., marries the prince of Orange, in 1677, 560; proclaimed queen with William, 599; coronation of, with her husband, April 11, 1689, 626; asks the princess Anne what she means by applying to parliament to increase her income, 634; appointed regent in William's absence, 636; her energetic conduct in retrieving the disaster of Beachy Head, June, 1690, 639; quarrels with her sister Anne, 650; addresses a dispatch to the commanders of the fleet; enthusiasm caused on its being read, 651; joins in the national gratitude by making a gift of the royal palace of Greenwich as an asylum for the disabled mariners of England, 652; issues proclamations for the discovery of seditious libellers, and for the apprehension of highwaymen, 653; her reply to the deputation requesting an inquiry into the naval miscarriages, 657; she is taken dangerously ill at Kensington, 660; her conduct highly praised by William; her fortitude and resignation in illness, ib.; dies of the small-pox, Dec 28, 1694, in her 33 l year; her character and burial, ib.

Mary, queen of Scotland, born Dec. 7, 1542, 281; Henry VIII. negotiates a marriage between her and his son Edward, ib.; the project defeated by the queen-mother and cardinal Beaton, 282; the duke of Somerset endeavors to enforce the treaty, 302; is contracted in marriage to the dauphin of France, 309; the marriage solemnized in Paris, 1558, 333; becomes queen of France on the accession of her husband Francis II., in 1559, 337; assumes the royal arms of England, ib.; refuses to ratify the treaty of Edinburgh in 1560, 340; answer of, to Throckmorton on being urged to sign it, ib.; her husband, Francis II., dies, Dec 6, 1.60, ib.; lord James Murray sent as ambassador to request her return to Scotland, ib.; policy of, towards Elizabeth, ib.; indignation of, at being refused a safe conduct, 341; imprudent avowal of her hatred of John Knox, ib.; farewell of, to France, ib.; arrival and reception of, in Scotland, Aug. 19, 1561, 342; contrasted with Elizabeth, ib.; summons Knox before her for preaching against her marriage with a papist prince, 343; writes to the council of Trent, that if she succeeded to the throne of England she would bring both kingdoms under the apostolic see, ib.; lord Robert Dudley recommended as a husband by Elizabeth, ib.; continued efforts of, to be declared successor to the crown of England, 344; marries Henry, lord Darnley, July 29, 156), ib.; Murray revolts unsuccessfully, and takes refuge in England; discontent of the reforming nobles at the marriage, 345; suppresses the revolt, and banishes the insurgent lords, ib.; rise of Riccio, ib.; joins the league of Catherine de Medici and the duke of Alva for the extermination of Protestantism in Europe, 346; jealousy of Darnley, ib.; quarrels with the queen, and unites with the Reformers, ib.; murder of Riccio, ib.; described by the English ambassadors, ib.; gives birth to a son, June 19, 1566, 370; amicable relations with England established, and Elizabeth becomes godmother to James, ib.; Bothwell becomes Mary's adviser, ib.; she visits Darnley when sick, and has him removed to Kirk of Field, near Edinburgh, 347; the house is blown up, and Darnley murdered, 348; undoubted guilt of Bothwell, ib.; his mock-trial and acquittal, ib.; is carried off by pretended force by Bothwell, ib.; and is married to him, ib.; the nobles revolt against the marriage, and she surrenders to them at Carbery Hill, on June 18, 1567, 349; carried prisoner Lochleven, ib.; is compelled to abdicate on July 24, in favor of her son, James VI., ib.; Murray is proclaimed regent, ib.; question as to the authenticity of the letters to Bothwell attributed to her, 350; escapes from Lochleven, ib.; romantic circumstance of, ib.; assembles forces, fights, and loses, the battle of Langsyde, May 16, 1568, ib.; takes refuge in England, 351; question as to the justice of her detention ib.; is removed to Bolton Castle, and is indignant at being considered a prisoner, 351; conference appointed to hear the charges against her, ib.; proceedings of the conferences at York and London, 352; placed under the care of the Earl of Shrewsbury, ib.; project for the marriage of, to the duke of Norfolk, ib.; is removed from Tutbury Castle to Coventry, 353; intrigues of Philip of Spain and the Romar. Catholics in favor of, 354; plan for giving her up to her own subjects to be punished, 358; insecurity of, ib.; alleged complicity of, in Babington's conspiracy, 361; is transferred to Fotheringay, and her papers are seized, ib.; a commission issued for her trial at Fotheringay, 362; proceedings on the trial, 363; and judgment against, ib.; conflicting opinions on the judgment, ib.; proclamation is made of the judgment, and she is excluded from all claim to the crown of England, 364; the warrant of execution is issued, ib.; is refused a confessor, 365; is beheaded at Fotheringay, on Feb 8, 1587, 366

Marylebone church built by Hardwick, 1144

Masham, Mrs., becomes a favorite of Queen Anne's, 1708, 715; contrives a secret correspondence between Anne and Mr. Harley, 716; obtains the ascendency in Queen Anne's confidence, 724; keeper of the privy purse, 1711, 725

Mas-achusetts Bay Government Regulation Bill passed, 1774, 871

Massacres of September, 1792, in Paris, 980

Massena, Andrew, barbarity of, 696; a general in Bonaparte's army, 1011; commands the French sent to pillage Berne, 1798; obtains a large share of the booty, 1020; baffled in driving the English out of Portugal, 1810, 1079; Almeida surrenders to, Aug. 16, ib.; loses the battle of Busaco, Sept. 27, ib.; sufferings of his army, 1080; retreats into Spain, 1082

Matilda, daughter of Henry I., married in 1114 to the emperor of Germany, 72; becomes a widow in 1124, 73; named successor to the crown of England in 1126, ib.; marries Fulk, earl of Anjou, in 1127, ib.; her son Henry born in 1133, ib.; arrives in England to assert her claim to the crown; is besieged in Arundel Castle, but allowed by Stephen to join the earl of Gloucester at Bristol, 77; after the battle of Lincoln is proclaimed queen in 1141, 78; revolt of the Londoners against, ib.; escapes to Devizes, ib.; besieged in Oxford, and escapes, 79; leaves England, ib.

Mauritius acquired by the English, 1810, 1169

Maury, abbé, advocates for the proprietary rights of the clergy, 967

Maximilian, the emperor, concludes a treaty with Henry VIII. against Louis XII. of France, 229; takes military service under Henry, ib.; leads the charge at the battle of Spurs, ib.; dies 1519, 231

Maximus, assists Theodosius in repulsing the Picts and Scots in the r invasion of Britain, 17; proclaimed emperor of Britain, ib.; leads a British army into Gaul, is defeated, and put to death, A.D. 388, ib.

Mayence surrenders to the king of Prussia, July 22, 1793, 996

Maynooth College, grant to, proposed, 1274; stormy debate on the measure, ib.; finally carried, ib.

Meadows, General, commands the British army in the Carnatic; takes Severndroog and Octradroog, 989

Meanee, battle of, Feb. 17, 1843, 1267

Mechanics' Institution of London, inaugurated by Dr. Birkbeck, 1823, 1174

Meehudpore, battle of, Dec. 21, 1817, 1170

Mer Cossein. See Cossein.

Meer Jaffier. See Jaffier.

Mehemet Ali, pasha of Egypt, invades Syria, thereby involving himself in war with Mahmoud; his successes and aggrandizing views, 1241; compelled to submit to the terms proposed by Britain, 1244

Melas, General, drives back Moreau, 1030; drives the French from Nice; prepares to battle Bonaparte; defeated at Marengo, June, 1800; concludes an armistice, 1034

Melbourne, W. Lamb, viscount, chief secretary for Ireland, 1828, 1173; resigned the same year, 1176; home secretary, 1187; speech in the debate on secondary punishments, 1204; his difficulty in forming a ministry according to the king's plan; ultimate formation of his ministry, 1834, 1213; sudden dismissal, 1214; ostensible cause of his dismissal, ib.; not brought about by any act of the ministry, ib.; his amendment on the address, 1215; first lord of the treasury, 1835, 1217, 1274; exclusion of Lord Brougham from his ministry, 1217; his reply to Lord Lyndhurst's hostile speech, 1220; denies having made a compact with the O'Connell party, ib.; his eulogy on William IV., 1223; first lord of the treasury, 1232; proposes the suspension of the Jamaica constitution for five years; his proposition carried, 1237; his ministry resigns, but again returns to power, ib.; adopts free-trade opinions, 1244

Melcombe See Doddington.

Melfort, earl of, his letters to Balcarres intercepted and read before the Convention, 630

Melrose Abbey, foundation of, 76

Melville, Henry Dundas, lord; lord advocate of Scotland, supports the opposition party, 899; declares that Lord Chatham never advocated reform, 902; supports Pitt, 953; opposes the hostile motion against the ministry, 1784, ib.; recalls Earl Gower, the ambassador at Paris, 980; urges Loughborough to decide as to taking the great seal, 985; secretary of state, delivers the king's message about seditious practices to the Commons, 1002; praises the British humanity shown at Howe's victory, 1794, 1005; his conference with the king on the Catholic question, and the Coronation oath, 1026; succeeded in his secretaryship by Lord Hobart, ib.; first lord of the admiralty, 1048, 1148; implicated on a charge of tampering with the public money, vote of censure passed against him, resigns, 1805, 1048; progress of the motion for impeaching him, ib.; his acquittal, June 12, 1806, 1057; home secretary, 1791 1794; war and colonial secretary, 1794-1801, 1325; retires from the admiralty, 1165

Menai suspension bridge built by Telford, 1144

Mendicity of London in 1815, 1816,

Menin taken by Marlborough, Aug. 22, 1706, 706

Menou, general in chief of the interior, unable to suppress the Lepelletier section revolt, 1009; superseded by Barras, ib.; succeeds Kleber in the command of the French army in Egypt, 1038; his charge at the British, 1801; beaten back by the Highlanders, ib.

Methodism, rise of; its professors produce a reformation in the English manners; characters of its leaders and originators, Whitefield and Wesley; Wesleyism; the Cambuslang conversions, 947

Metnuen, British ambassador at the Portuguese court, concludes the Methuen treaty, 692; his account of the battle of Almanza, 713; secretary of state, 1716; resigns, 769

Methuen treaty, terms of the, with Portugal, 1703, 845; annulled, 1835, 1225

Milan entered by the French, 1796, 1011

Milan decree issued by Bonaparte, Dec., 1807, 1067

Militia bill passed, 1756, 832

Miller, J., a printer. See Onslow colonel.

Milton, John, embodiment of early English legends by, 3; his description of London at the commencement of the civil war, 451; publishes his "Iconoclastes," in reply to the "Icon Basiliké," 491; appointed Latin secretary to the Council of State, ib.; his death, and warning of, against slavery, 559; see Addison, 739

Minden, battle of, Aug. 1, 1759, 839

Mines. See copper, coal, lead, tin, etc.

Mines in Britain, under the Romans, notice of, remains of iron works yet existing, 12

Minorca taken by the English, 1708, 716; surrendered to the French, 1756, 830; restored to England 1763, 845; surrendered to the French, 1782, 899; ceded to Spain by Great Britain, 907

Minto, lord, governor-general of India, 1168; quells the mutiny at Madras, and other places, ib.; acquisition of the eastern archipelago; other acts of his administration, ib.; resigns, 1813, ib.; first lord of the admiralty, 1169

Mirabeau, comte de, bold speech of, at a meeting of the National Assembly, 1789; moves for an address to the king for the removal of the troops, 962; prevents the National Assembly from assuming the power to declare war, 964; named president of the National Assembly, Jan., 1791; endeavors to secure order, and curb violent measures; negotiates with Marie Antoinette; his services paid for by Louis; his character and unwearied energy, 969; death of, April 2, 1791; burial at the Pantheon; disinterred, 1793, 969; advocates the king's veto, 974

Moira, lord, his severe measures toward deserters, 892; gains a battle near Camden, 896; sets out to aid the Vendeans, but arrives too late, 1001; governor-general of India, Oct. 4, 1813, 1169; obtains permission to war against the Pindarees on a huge scale, i.; the campaign, ib.; breaks up the Mahratta confederacy, 1170; rules issued by, for regulating the newspaper press in India, 1171

Molesworth, sir William, remarks of, on Canadian affairs, 1232

Molwitz, battle of, April 10, 1741, 796

Mona (Anglesey), the isle of, taken by Suetonius, 8

Monastic establishments, magnificence and riches of, temp. Henry VII., 222

Money, value of, in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I., 109; scarcity of, during the wars of the Roses, 181; laborers to be paid in, and truck forbidden by statute in 1465, 183; money prices of clothing in 1450-1485, 184; debasement of the coin in 1464, 195; altered value of, in 1547, 287; debasement of coin by Henry VIII. and Edward VI., 293; rise of prices occasioned by the influx of the precious metals, 387; a debased brass coinage issued by James II. in 1689, 633; depreciated state of coinage in 1695, 662; guineas rise to thirty shillings apiece, ib.; extensive circulation of clipped, 663; a new coinage issued and the old collected by government in payment of taxes, ib.; remarkable scarcity of, 1696, 666; the government refuses to restore the proper standard of; the currency of the new coinage established, 697; want of, caused by the South Sea scheme, 774; Wood's copper coinage for Ireland; Swift's letters causes the patent to be withdrawn, 777; depreciation of the American currency, 1779, 888; suspension of cash payments by the Bank of England, Feb., 1797; currency of cash almost superseded by that of paper, 1013; the panic in 1797, funds fall to 47, 1016; reduction in the circulating medium, and rise in the value of, 1116; state of the currency, 1816, 1130; the panic of 1825, 1162; the panic of 1847, 1283

Monk, George (duke of Albemarle), left by Cromwell to manage affairs in Scotland, 499; conduct of, in Scotland, 528; Charles endeavors to engage him on his side, ib.; resolves to restore the parliament, 528; sends commissioners to London to negotiate with the army, ib.; marches to London, 529; is employed by the parliament to quell the disaffection in the city, 530; causes the secluded members to be restored, ib.; promises sir A. Haslerig to oppose the setting-up of Charles Stuart as king, ib.; agrees to act for Charles, 531; suppresses the insurrection of Lambert, ib.; receives the king on his landing at Dover, 533 produces private letters from the marquis of Argyle to procure his conviction, 539; appointed to the command of the fleet against the Dutch with Prince Rupert, 545; meets their superior fleet unexpectedly, but fights obstinately for four days, ib.; ravages the Dutch coast, 546; commands the forces sent against the Duke of Monmouth in 1685, but is forced to retreat, 581

Monkton, General, falls in attacking Quebec, 839
Monmouth, duke of, connives at the mutilation of sir John Coventry, 555; pretensions of, to legitimacy, 564; marriage of, to the duchess of Buccleugh, ib.; the king solemnly affirms his legitimacy, ib; is sent to take the command of the army against the Covenanters, 567; defeats them at Bothwell Bridge on June 22, 1679, ib.; returns suddenly to England to attend the sick-bed of Charles, and is considered as a rival for the succession, 568; is sent to Flanders, ib.; returns to England, and is received with great joy, ib.; is made by the Whigs the Protestant candidate for the crown, 569; his triumphant progress in the West of England, ib.; dissatisfaction of, at the acquittal of Count Königsmark for the murder of Tayne, 574; accused of a participation in the Rye House Plot in 1683, ib.; he escapes, ib.; is pardoned, 576; lands at Lyme in 1685, 580; publishes a declaration against James II., ib.; is very favorably received at Taunton, 581; proclaims himself king, ib.; marches to Bristol, ib.; fails in receiving support, and retreats, ib.; skirmish at Philip's-Norton, ib.; battle of Sedgemoor, 582; the flight and capture of, ib.; abject behavior of, in his interview with James, 583; execution of, ib.; considered by the people as a martyr for the Protestant religion, ib.
Monnet, gen., commander of Flushing; cuts dikes to drive away the British, 1809, 1075
Mons besieged and taken by the French, 1691, 643
Monson, col., a member of the council at Calcutta, opposes Hastings, 948; his death, ib.
Montague, Charles. See Halifax, earl of.
Montcalm, marquis de, commander of the French troops in Canada, 1759; attacks Wolfe on the heights of Abraham, Sept. 13; is defeated; and mortally wounded; died Sept. 14, 983
Montenotte battle of, April 12, 1796. 1011
Monte Video. See Auchmuty, 1063
Montfort, Jane de, heroic defence of the castle of Hennebon; is relieved by sir Walter Manny, 136
Montfort, Simon de, earl of Leicester, attends the parliament at Westminster in 1258, 111; nominated head of the council, ib.; is forced to withdraw to France, ib.; character of, ib.; returns to England, and a civil war takes place, ib.; wins the battle of Lewes, and takes Henry III. prisoner, ib.; burgesses summoned to parliament in 1264 by, ib.; is defeated and slain at the battle of Evesham, 112; prohibition of holding him for a saint, 113; continued resistance offered by his sons, who murder the nephew of Henry, ib.
Montgomery, Richard, general in the American army, invades Canada, 1775; killed in an attack upon Quebec, Dec. 31, 1023
Montjuich. See Peterborough.
Montrevel, marshal de, unable to subdue the Camisards, 1703; superseded by marshal Villars, 691
Montrose, James Graham, marquis of, victories of, in Scotland in 1645, 467; influence of his letter containing an account of these victories upon Charles I., ib.; advice of, to Charles I., ib.; defeats the Covenanting army under Baillie, 470; defeated at Philiphaugh by Lesley, ib.; counsels Charles II. to win his kingdom by battle, 493; who gives him a commission to do so, 496; lands in the Orkneys, March, 1650, ib.; defeated by Colonel Strachan at Craigchouichen, ib.; wanders among the Highlands, and is taken on May 3, ib.; exultation of the Covenanters at his capture, ib.; sentenced to death, ib.; ill-treatment of, at Edinburgh, ib.; conduct of, before parliament and at his execution, ib.; character of, by Clarendon, 497
Montserrat taken by the French, 899; restored to England, 907
Moore, sir John, takes Wexford, June 21, 1798, 1024; appointed to command 11,000 men in the Peninsula; his mortification at being made subordinate to sir H. Dalrymple, and sir H. Burrard. 1069; commences his march into Spain, Oct. 1808; his progress through the country to Sahagun; commences a retreat; pursued by Napoleon, Dec. 24, 1070; halts at Lugo, ib.; marches to Corunna; defeat of the French there, Jan. 16, 1809; death of, 1071; his burial; ib.; opinions on his retreat, ib.; sufferings of his army, ib.
Morcar and Edwin, insurrection of, suppressed by William the Conqueror, 58; join Hereward, and death of Edwin, 60; imprisonment of Morcar, ib.
Mordaunt, sir John, has joint command of the Rochefort expedition, 1757; acquitted by court-martial, 980
More, Hannah, rejoices at the fall of the Bastile, 966; her writings, 1139
More, sir Thomas, unsuccessfully attempts to prevent the riot on "Evil May-Day," in 1517, 236; is chosen speaker of the House of Commons, in 1523, 236; is created lord chancellor in 1529, and speaks harshly against Wolsey, 245; opposes the doctrines of the Reformers, 246; lays before parliament the opinion of the universities in favor of Henry's divorce, but is himself against it, 248; retires from the chancellorship, 251; doubts whether he sanctioned the burning of John Baynham in May, 1532, ib.; official character of, ib.; implicated in the charge of conspiracy against the king with the Holy Maid of Kent, 255; is committed to the Tower with Fisher, bishop of Rochester, for refusing to swear to the illegality of the king's first marriage, 256; tried for treason, convicted, and executed on July 6, 1535, 258
Moreau, J. V., serves in Jourdan's army, 1006; appointed to command the army of the Rhine and the Moselle, 1796, 1010; failure of his campaign; his retreat through the Black Forest to Strasbourg, 1012; beaten back by gen. Melas; defeated, 1799, 1030; campaign of, in Germany, 1800, 1035; victory of Hohenlinden gained by, Dec. 3, ib; conspires against Bonaparte, 1804; exiled, 1046; takes part in the battle of Dresden against Napoleon, in which he is wounded; death of, 1090
Morgan, gen., defeats Tarleton at Cowpens, Jan. 17, 1781, 1043; joins his forces with Greene's, ib.
Morland, George, the representative of his day in animal painting, 1147
Mornington, earl of. See Wellesley, marquess of.
Morpeth, lord, his eulogy on Francis Horner, 1817, 1127; votes for Sutton as speaker of the House of Commons, 1833, 1202; moves an amendment for reform in the address, 1835, 1215; secretary for Ireland, 1224
Mortemart, duke de, his audience with Charles X.; promises extorted by, from the king, 1830, 1183
Mortimer, Roger. See Edward II. and Edward III.
Mortmain, statute of, passed, 7 Edwd. I., 115
Moscow, entry of the French into, Sept. 14, 1812; the conflagration of; evacuated by the French, Oct. 19, 1068
Mounier, president of the French Assembly; obtains the king's consent to the articles of the constitution, 965
Mountcashel, viscount. See Macarthy.
Mountfort, William, a player, murder of, by Hill, 655
Mountjoy, lord, sent by Tyrconnel on a mission to James II. at St. Germains; on his arrival there he was put into the Bastile, 626
Mourad Bey heads the Mamlooks; defeated by the French at the battle of the Pyramids, 1798, 1020
Muir, Thomas, sentenced to transportation for advocating a reform in the representation of the people, 1794, 1002
Municipal corporation reform, 1217-19; report of the commission of inquiry showing the generally corrupt state of the corporations, 1217-18; passing of Lord Russell's reform bill through parliament, 1218; it receives the royal assent, Sept. 9, 1835, 1219; departing glories of municipal pomp, ib.; bill for corporation reform in Ireland; opposed by the Lords; passed by the Commons, Mar. 28, 1836, ib.
Municipalities, character of those established by the Romans in Britain, 15; form of government, in, ib.
Munro, sir Hector, major; defeats an Indian army, 869; compelled to retreat before Hyder Ali, 950
Murat, Joachim, helps Bonaparte in suppressing the revolt of the sections in Paris, May, 1795, 1009; assists Kleber against a Mussulman army, 1029; with Leclerc clears the Assembly, Nov., 1031; seizes Godoy, and sends him to Bonaparte, 1803, 1069; king of Naples, 1081; deserts Napoleon for the allies, 1110; his entering into a correspondence with the ex-emperor hastens his fall, ib.
Murray, lord George, obtains the king's pardon for joining the rebellion of 1715, 767; joins Charles Edward, 1745, 803; takes part in the battle at Preston-Pans, Sept. 22, 804; quarrels with the duke of Perth, 808; his tactics in approaching Derby, 808; he convinces Charles of the uselessness of advancing farther into England; persuades him to retreat to Scotland, 809; his able and creditable management of the retreat from Derby, 811; halts at Clifton, ib.; securing the army's retreat by stemming the tide of the pursuing enemy; reaches Carlisle; represents to Charles that his troops could not hold the place, 812; signs an address to the prince showing the desertions in the Highland army, 814; leads the Highlanders to the attack of Cumberland's camp; but finds a surprise impracticable, 815
Murray, James, earl of, sent as ambassador to France to request the return of queen Mary, 340; with other reformers revolts against Mary's marriage with Darnley, 344; is forced to fly to England, 345; returns to Edinburgh on the death of Riccio. 347; is proclaimed regent after Mary's abdication, 350; defeats Mary at the battle of Langsyde, ib.; accuses Mary of the murder of Darnley at the conference in London, 352; favors Norfolk's project of marrying Mary, 352; is assassinated in Jan., 1570, 353
Murray, William. See Mansfield, earl of.
Musgrave, sir Christopher; a leader of the opposition party, 1693; bribes received by, 655
Mutiny bill, an important part of the government; first passed 1689, 325
Mutiny at Ipswich, 1689, 625; at Spithead, 1797, 1015; at the Nore, ib.; at Vellore, 1806, 1056; and at Madras, 1809, 1168
Muttra, battle of, 1803, 1054
Mylne, Richard, architect of Blackfriars bridge, 935

Nadin, unable to apprehend the leaders of the reform meeting at Manchester, 1819, 1133
Nagpore, rajah of, joins the Mahratta confederacy against the British, 1169; defeated by the British, ib.
Nairn, William, lord, impeached of high treason, tried and sentenced to death, 1716, 766; reprieved, ib.; released from prison by an act of grace passed, 1717, 770
Namur, siege and capture of, by the French, June 30, 1692, 652; besieged by the allies, 1695, 661; and taken Aug. 26, 662
Nankin, treaty of, Aug. 29, 1842, 1226-1248
Nantes, revocation of the edict, 584; effect of, in France, as described by Burnet, ib.
Napier, sir C. James, major, taken prisoner at Corunna, 1809, 1070; a benefactor of his race. 1266; his march on, and destruction of, Emaun-Ghur, 1267; gains the battle of Meanee, ib.; Hyderabad surrenders to him; he defeats and quells Shere Mahomed, and becomes the governor of Scinde. ib.
Napier, sir C. John, his services under admiral Stopford in the campaign in Egypt and Syria, 1840, 1243
Napoleon, comparison of his intended invasion of Britain, with that of Caligula, 7
Napoleon III. of France, son of Louis Bonaparte, king of Holland; Louis Philippe's fear of him, 1222; his futile revolutionary attempt at Strasbourg, 1836, ib.; sent to America by Louis Philippe; escapes to Switzerland; Louis compelling his extradition from thence, he withdraws to England, 1223; crosses the Channel to Boulogne, 1241; fails to produce an insurrection, 1242; surrenders; is imprisoned, ib.; tried. ib.; sentenced to imprisonment for life in Ham fortress; but escapes, ib.; elected President of the French Republic, 1848, 1286
Naseby, battle of, June 14, 1645, 468
Nash, Beau, master of the ceremonies at Bath; his rule, 940; suppresses duelling at Bath, 941
Nash, John, his architural works, Regent Street, Park, and Canal, 1144
Nasmyth, his landscape painting, 1147
National Debt, commencement of the, 1693, 654; its growth, ib., 773; reduction of the interest on the, 821; increase of the, 1755-1763, 845; table showing its growth, 1691-1792, 911, 1321; fears of ruin from its increase, 1225; growth of, 1793-1815, 1225, 1322; 1816-1837, ib.
Navarino, news of the battle of, received in London, 1172; it occurred, Oct. 20, 1827, ib.
Navigation act obstructs the Scottish trade, 694; suspension of the navigation laws, 1282
Navy, difficulty of manning the, 881; corruption prevalent in the, 944; the British and French navies, 1793, 991; state of the, 1793, 1004; discontents and mutinies in the, 1797, 1015; number of men voted for the, 1802, 1041; the British navy of 1812, 1098; its glory departed, ib.; restored again by the Shannon and Chesapeake conflict, ib.
Necker, James, controller-general of finance, 958; dismissed the post, May, 1781, ib.; recalled to it again, 1789, 960; again dismissed, July, 1789, 962
Neerwinden. See Landen.
Neerwinden, battle of, Mar. 18, 1793. 993
Nelson, Horatio, post-captain, 1793; present at the surrender of Toulon to lord Hood. 998; his daring achievement of the capture of Bastia, Corsica, 1794, 1007; commodore; joins admiral Jervis's fleet; disobeys his superior officer; engages, with the assistance of Troubridge and Collingwood, several of the enemy's vessels at the battle of St. Vincent, Feb. 14, 1797, 1014; his desperate condition; gallantry shown in boarding and taking the San Nicolas and San Josef; his name not noticed in Jervis's despatches, ib.; made a knight of the Bath, 1015; watches the movements of the Toulon fleet, 1020; appointed to command a Mediterranean fleet, 1798, ib.; he misses the French fleet, sails to Alexandria, and returns to Sicily, ib.; refused supplies by the Neapolitans; obtains them through his interview with lady Hamilton; again sets out for Alexandria, 1021; position of the French fleet, Aug. 1; Nelson's manœuvres, ib.; the conflict; Nelson wounded; his heroism; the French flag-ship, L'Orient, on fire; the awful silence succeeding the explosion; returns to Naples; his injunctions for rejoicing, 1022; vice-admiral under sir Hyde Parker, 1801, 1037; opposes his admiral's arguments for delay; his approach to Copenhagen, ib; the battle of Copenhagen, April 2, ib.; disregards Parker's signals to stop fighting, ib.; concludes an armistice, 1038; fails in cutting the armed flotilla out of Boulogne harbor, 1039; appointed to command the Mediterranean fleet; his letter to the lord mayor, 1049; his chase after the combined fleet, ib.; worn out with anxiety he returns home, ib.; offers his services against Villeneuve; preparations, ib; enthusiastic reception at Portsmouth, 1050; his last farewell to England; sets down before Cadiz; his system of breaking the line; the enemy in sight, ib.; his preparations for battle, ib.; his victory, Oct. 21, 1805; his death, ib.; the nation's grief; the funeral, 1051
Nepaul, war with, 1813-1816; its results, 1169
Nero, attempts of, to reconcile the revolted tribes after the defeat of Boadicea, 9
Nevill's Cross, battle of, won by queen Philippa, in 1346, and David Bruce taken prisoner, 139
Newburn, battle of, on Aug. 27, 1640, 435.
Newbury, battle of, on Sept. 19, 1643, 462; second battle of, on Oct. 27, 1644, 466
New England, foundation of the colony of, in 1620, by the Pilgrim Fathers, 407
Newcastle, duke of, entertains William III. at Welbeck, 1695, 662; made lord privy seal, 1705, 705; captain Jenkins reports to him his ill-treatment by the Spaniards, but receives no redress, 791; his jealousy of Walpole, 793; helps his brother, Mr. Pelham, in the administration; his talent for electioneering business, 819; becomes jealous of the duke of Bedford, 823; gets him turned out of the office of secretary of state, ib.; becomes first lord of the treasury at his brother's death, 1754; his claims to the post, 825; character of; offers Fox the seals of secretary of state, who refuses them, ib.; Pitt's and Fox's opposition; the latter obtains a seat in the Cabinet, 826; becomes terrified at the opposition to the subsidies; applies to Pitt for help, who refuses it, 829; opposing the ministry in a speech in parliament; Pitt is dismissed his office of paymaster, ib.; placed at the head of the ministry, ib.; Fox resigns his seals, and Newcastle, having no support, 832, also resigns, ib.; George again offers him the administration of affairs; refuses to act with Pitt, 833; but ultimately consents; first lord of the treasury, 834; supports Bute, 843; retires from the treasury, June, 1762, 844; becomes privy seal, 1765, 852; secretary of state, 1746-1754, 1324; first lord of the treasury, 1754-1756, 865, 1324; 1757-1762, 866
Newcastle, duke of, his interference with the Newark election complained of, 1179-4 proceedings against, ib.; his remarks on the Reform bill, 1198
Newfoundland ceded to Great Britain, 1713, 735
Newmarket, races held at, temp. William III., 612
New Orleans, attack on, by the British, 1814, 1815. 1101
Newspapers; first beginning of the newspaper press,

620; the newspapers, 1709, 1742, 737; eagerness for, 1745, 807; provincial papers badly conducted about 1757, 836; the newspapers, 1737-1783, 935; number of American, 1775, and 1810, 1096; of London in Crabbe's time; The Times first assumed the name, 1788, 1135; The Times of Nov. 28, 1818, the first sheet of paper printed by steam, 1141; increased circulation o., due to the steam-printing machine, ib.; violence and ribaldry of, during Queen Caroline's trial in 820, 1152; the newspapers of India; their regulation by government, 1171; case of Mr. Buckingham proprietor of The Calcutta Journal, ib.; royal ordinance against the liberty of the French press, 1820, 1182; the protest of the newspaper conductors, ib.; stamp on, reduced, 1836, 1221-7; altered character of, 1842, 1260

Newton, sir Isaac, as master of the mint he succeeds in establishing an adequate supply of circulating medium, 663; statue of, by Roubiliac, 756; declares Wood's Irish coinage satisfactory, 777.

New on-Butler, battle of, 1689, 628

New York evacuated by the Americans, Sept. 15, 1776, 879

Ney, Michael, marshal, serves in Jourdan's army, 1006; defeats the Austrians at Elchingen and Guntzburg, 1805, 1050; defeated at Dennewitz, 1813, 1090; deserts Louis XVIII. for Napoleon, 1815, 1104; executed on the return of Louis to power, 1111

Nicholls, sir George; his letters on the Poor Laws; his poor law reforms at Southwell, 1210; appointed a poor law commissioner, 1834, 1211; and to initiate the working of the poor law in Ireland, 1234

Nile, battle of the, Aug. 1, 1798, 1021

Nimeguen, peace of, Aug. 11, 1678, 732; surrendered to the French, 1794, 1007

Nipchoo, treaty of, ratified June 14, 1728, 733

Nithisdale, William, earl of, impeached of high treason, 1716; tried and found guilty; his wife vainly petitions the king to pardon him; she effects his escape to France, 766

Nizam. See Deccan.

Nollekens, Joseph, his sculpturing, 934, 1145

Nonconformists, rise and growth of, in the second half of the reign of Elizabeth; notice of the Ma prelate tracts, 377; objections of, to the ceremonies of the church, ib.; preaching in private houses prohibited, ib.; statutes against Puritans and Popish recusants in 1593, ib.; the nonconformist ministers preach resistance, ib.; severities directed against the Brownists or Independents, 378; opposition of the nonconformists to the habits and amusements of society, ib.; music and dancing held to be corrupting by, 380; offensiveness of Sabbath sports and games to, ib.; denunciations of gaming by, 381; aversion of, to stage plays, 382; petition James I. for a conference with the English clergy, which is held at Hampton Court, 398; James insults and decides against them, ib.; a new code of canons, tending to exclude them from civil rights, established in Convocation, 399; settlement of New England in 1620 by the Pilgrim Fathers, 417; increase in the numbers of, from disgust at the principles and conduct of James and his courtiers, 411; offence given to by the proclamation in 1618, for the practice of sports on Sundays, 414; consternation of, at the defeat of the elector palatine and the triumph of Roman Catholicism in Germany, 417; offence given to by Laud's introduction, in 1628, of new ceremonies into the church service; the religious opinions of, identified with the assertion of civil rights, 425; excessive punishment of the Puritan Prynne, for writing against stage-plays, 427; and of Dr. A. Leighton for writing against prelacy, ib.; aversion of the Puritans to all dramatic exhibitions, 428; conviction and excessive punishments of Prynne, Burton, and Bastwick, in 1637, for their anti prelatical writings, 431; triumph of the principles of, on the meeting of the Long Parliament in 1640, 438; great influence of the Puritans at the commencement of the Civil War, 450; the shutting-up of the playhouses and discouragement of popular amusements a consequence of, 451; Baxter's statement of the oppressions of the, by the royalists, 458; increased bitterness of feeling between them and the Cavaliers, 460; the Presbyterian Covenant adopted by the synod at Westminster, and by parliament, 463; growing dissensions between Presbyterians and Independents, ib.; struggles between, in the House of Commons, 474; power of the Independents in the army, 475; opinions of the Independents, 476; the position of the Presbyterians and Independents compared with the Girondists and Mountain parties of the French revolution, ib.; negotiations of the Independents with the king, 478; the king's deceptive conduct toward them, ib.; Cromwell tries to effect a reconciliation between the Presbyterians and Independents, 483; depression of, after the Restoration, 536; insurrection of the Anabaptists in London in April, 1661, 537; ineffective conference at the Savoy between the bishops and the Puritan divines, ib.; the Corporation Act and Act of Uniformity passed against, 539; Conventicle Act passed against in 1664, 541; the Five-Mile Act passed against, 544; the penalties of, not enforced against for a short time after the Fire of London, 353; propositions made by, for a union of Protestants, ib.; rejected by the parliament, ib.; declaration of indulgence by Charles II. in 1672, 557; release of John Bunyan from prison, ib.; the Indulgence unpopular among, ib.; in 1665 the House of Commons prays James II. to put in execution the laws against all dissenters from the Church of England, 579; the principle of resistance not extinguished in, as shown by their joining Monmouth at Taunton, 581; they generally consider the declaration of James II., in 1687, for liberty of conscience, as a snare, 590

Nonjurors, origin of the, 623; bill against, passed, 624; libellous pamphlets issued by, in 1692, 653

Nore, mutiny at the, 1797, 1016

Norfolk, soil of, 911; agricultural improvements in, promoted by Coke, ib.; a seat of the husbandry implement trade, 912; number of persons to every 100 acres in, in 1841, 917

Norman clergy, character of, at the time of William I., 59; nobles, various characters of, and beneficial exertions of some, ib.; barons, description of their modes of life in their castles in the time of Stephen, 75

Normanby, marquis of. See Buckingham.

Norris, sir William, sent to desire of Aurungzebe his favor for the new East India Company, 1698, 669; mission failed; dies on his way home, 670

North, Dudley, nominated sheriff by the lord mayor of London, in 1682, in order that he might return partisan jurymen, 572; is rejected by the Common Hall, but ultimately sworn in, 573

North, Frederick, lord, chancellor of the exchequer, 1767-1782, 855, 865, 1325; moves the repeal of the American duty on all articles but tea; his proposition carried, 863; nearly demolished by the mob, 1771, 865; his apology for retaining office, ib.; first lord of the treasury 1770-1782, ib.; brings in the Boston port bill, 1774, 876; and the Massachusetts bay government regulation bill, ib.; his conciliatory measure, 873; his Prohibitory bill, 877; exults at the display of public spirit, 1778; introduces two bills, one on American taxation, the other appointing commissioners to treat with America; fear and astonishment of the House at his submissions and concessions, 884; wishes to resign his premiership on hearing of the peace between France and America, ib.; his speech on the address to the king, 887; his amendment on Burke's Economical Reform bill, 889; his consternation and distress at the news of Cornwallis's surrender, 1781, 898; announces the resignation of his premiership, Mar. 20, 1782; the scene in parliament on this occasion, 900; consents to the proposed free trade measures towards Ireland, 902; coalesces with Fox, appointed secretary of State, 1783, 951; ordered to give up his seals by the king, 952; home secretary of state, 1783, 1325

Northampton, battle of, the Lancastrians defeated, July 10, 1460, 192

Northamptonshire, the county of, 913; low state of farming, ib.; farmers and laborers, ib.

Northmen, or Danes, ravages of, 25

Northumberland, its wretched breed of sheep, and large districts of waste land, 1760-1783, 919; unsettled state of its inhabitants long after the Union; agriculture stimulated by the Culleys and others, ib.

Northumberland, Dudley, duke of. See Warwick, earl of.

North-West Company for trading in furs; ultimately united with the Hudson's Bay Company, 614

Norwich Cathedral, foundation of, in 1094, 76

Nottingham, earl of. See Winchelsea.

Nottinghamshire, the oak of Sherwood forest succeeded by turnip and wheat-fields, 914; "the cars" reclaimed, ib.

Novels, careless and inaccurate style of, 1255; prevalence of: large numbers published in a serial form, 1257; changed manner in conducting prose fictions as shown in the works of the novel writers, 1258

Nugent, lord, moves for a list of persons holding crown places and pensions, 889; his Irish free trade notions, 903

Nuncomar, an intriguing Hindoo, executed by the British for forgery, 948

Oates, Titus, first revelation of the Popish Plot by, in 1678, 561; is brought before the Council, 562; is examined by the House of Commons, ib.; increasing boldness of his accusations, and assertion of the queen having concerted the king's murder, ib.; has a pension assigned him by the Commons, 563; fresh convictions on the evidence of, in 1679, 565; payments to and to other witnesses, 566; is a witness against lord Stafford, who is convicted in 1684, 570; contradicts Dugdale on the trial of Stephen College, the "Protestant joiner," and his pension is stopped, 572; is prosecuted for a libel on the duke of York in 1683, and 100,000*l.* damages awarded, 576; is convicted of perjury, and sentenced to be imprisoned, pilloried, and whipped, in 1685, 579; released from prison, pardoned, and pensioned, 1689, 632

O'Brien, Smith, a member of the Irish Confederation; his share in the insurrection of 1848, 1286

Occasional Conformity, bill against; its objects; discussion on; rejected 1702, 540; a new bill introduced, 1703, again rejected, 542; thrown out a third time, 1704, 547; its repeal desired by Stanhope, 1718, 771

Ochterlony, sir David, compels the Ghorka commander, Ameer Singh, to capitulate, 1815, 1169; engages to support the rajah of Bhurtpore, 1171

O'Coigley, arrested and executed, 1797, for conspiring against government, 1024

O'Connell, Daniel, returned M.P. for Clare, who as a Roman Catholic was disqualified from sitting there, 1828, 1176; his great influence over the Irish peasantry, ib.; upon taking his seat, 1829, refuses to take the oath of supremacy, claiming that set forth in the Relief act; returned a second time for Clare, and takes his seat, 1178; moves an amendment in the king's speech; coarseness of his language; Stanley's reply to; the amendment rejected, 1203; again attacked by Mr. Stanley, 1205; condemns the appropriation of funds to be sanctioned by the Irish church reform bill, 1206; his speech on the repeal of the Union question, 1834, 1212; his amendment on the Irish tithe bill, 1213; his alleged compact with the Melbourne Whig government, 1220; his efforts to bring about a repeal of the Union, 1265; arrested for conspiring, ib.; tried, 1203; found guilty and punished, ib.; appeals for a reversal of his sentence, which he obtains; Ireland celebrates his triumph, 1270; loss of his demagogic power, ib.; his last parliamentary speech; died May 15, 1847, 1282

O'Connor, Arthur, a member of the Irish Directory, tried for high treason, May, 1797; acquitted, 1024

O'Connor, Feargus, insists upon parliament's testing the repeal question, 1834, 1222; attempts to rouse the people to rebel, 1235; heads the chartist movements of 1848, 1285

Odo, archbishop of Canterbury, revolts against Edwy, and separates him from his wife, 42

Oglethorpe, general, promotes the state of prisons inquiry, 1729, 1730, 780; pursues the retreating army of the rebels, 1745, 812

O'Hara, general, commands the Toulon garrison; wounded; taken prisoner, 1793, 999

Oldcastle, sir John, condemned as a heretic, 163; respited by the king, and escapes, ib.; joins in a conspiracy with the Lollards, and is retaken in 1418, and burnt, ib.

Oliver, alderman, his share in the arrest of a House of Commons officer, 1771; imprisoned in the Tower, 865

Oliver the Spy acts as government spy against reformers, 1817, 1123

Ormichund engages in a conspiracy to depose Surajah Dowlah; Clive's treachery towards, 834; causes him to die an idiot, 835

Onslow, sir Richard; chosen speaker of the House of Commons, 1708, 717; retires from the speakership, 1761; pensioned, 842

Onslow, colonel, his proceedings against printers for publishing parliamentary debates, 1771, 864

Opium trade, circumstances connected with the, which led to the war with China, 1246

Oporto taken possession of by Soult, Mar. 29, 1809, 1072

Oppian, description of the dogs of Britain by, 5

Orange, prince of. See William III.

Orange, prince of, relieves Charleroi, 1794, 1006; engaged at Waterloo, 1105

Orange, princess of, arrested; her cause espoused by the king of Prussia, 956

Oregon question, settlement of the, 1279

Orford, earl of. See Walpole, Robert; Russell, Adm. Edward.

Orleans, duke of, regent of France; refuses to aid the Pretender against England, 1715, 762; desires England to support his claim to the throne, 768; his lenity towards Alberoni, 771; informs the British government of the proposed Jacobite expedition to Scotland, 1719, 772; and the Jacobite plot of 1722, 776; died, 1723, 778

Orleans, duke of, banished Paris for taking part in a discussion against the court, 1788, 961; assumes the name of Egalité; votes for Louis XVI.'s death, 987; his defence for so doing, ib.; imprisoned at Marseilles, 994; executed, Nov. 1793, 1000

Orleans, duke of. See Louis XVIII. of France.

Ormond, marquis of, assembles a force in Ireland in favor of Charles II., 493; besieges Dublin, and is defeated by the garrison, ib.; visits London to forward a plot against Cromwell, from whom he receives a hint that he is known, and returns to Bruges, 525; attempt of Blood, Dec. 7, 1670, to seize and hang, 555; the king desires that he should pardon Blood, 555

Ormond, duke of, makes, in conjunction with sir George Rooke, an unsuccessful expedition to Cadiz, 690; put in command of the British forces, 1712; receives secret instructions from the ministry not to hazard a battle, while there was a chance of negotiating peace; besieges Quesnoy; it surrenders, July 4, 734; proclaims an armistice with France; withdraws his forces from the allied army, ib.; his march from Ghent to Bruges, 735; impeached of high treason; flies to France; an act of attainder passed against him, 1715, 761; passes from France into Spain, 771; appointed to command a proposed expedition against England, 772

Orrel, captain, his interest at the riots of 1710, 722

Orrery, earl of, arrested, and sent to the Tower, 1722, for conspiring, 776

Orthez, battle of, Feb. 27, 1814, 1092

Osborne, lord S. G., draws attention to the condition of the Dorsetshire laborers, 1230

Ostorius Scapula, defeat of Caractacus by, 8; triumph decreed to, ib.; defeat and death of, ib.

Otaheite discovered, 1767; visited by Captain Cook, and Bougainville, 990; dispute between France and England as to the national rights over, 1272

Otterbourne, or Chevy Chase, battle of, on Aug. 10, 1388, 154

Otto, M., negotiates the preliminaries of peace, 1801, 1039; remonstrates against the newspaper remarks on Bonaparte, 1041

Oudenarde, battle of, July 11, 1708, 715

Outram, major, British resident at Hyderabad; attacked by the Beloochees, 1267

Oxford, state of, in 1289, 121; parliaments held at. See Charles I. and Charles II.

Oxford university, the members of, preach passive obedience in 1684, 756; Walker, the master of University College, becomes a Roman Catholic, 586, mass celebrated in University College, 587; John Massey installed dean of Christchurch, 588; the king recommends Anthony Farmer, a suspected papist, to be elected president of Magdalen College, ib.; the Fellows elect Dr. John Hough, ib.; they are cited before the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and are expelled, 589

Oxford, his attempt upon the queen's life; acquitted on the ground of insanity; remarks on this acquittal, 1241

Oxford, Robert Harley, earl of, a Tory leader; moves for the disbanding of the troops, Dec. 1798, 679; chosen speaker by the fifth parliament of William III., 1701, 684; speaker of Anne's first parliament,

1702, 690; he is turned out of the ministry by Marlborough and the Whigs, 1708, 714, 715; has private audiences with the queen; commences a system of political intrigue with her, 716; the impeachment of Sacheverel brings him in opposition with Godolphin, 719; his intrigues are successful; Godolphin is dismissed, and himself is made chancellor of the exchequer, 1710, 724; is seriously opposed by the Tories; stabbed by Guiscard, Mar. 8, 1711, at a privy council sitting, 726; which leads to his being made earl of Oxford, and lord high treasurer, and to the establishment of his ministerial influence, 727; carries on a secret negotiation with France for peace, 729; invites Eugene to dinner, 733; quarrels with Bolingbroke; he is dismissed from office, 1714, 736; lord Coningsby impeaches him of high treason, 1715; he is committed to the Tower, 761; upon petitioning for release in 1717 he is put upon trial, and acquitted, but not included in the act of grace passed soon after, 769; his national debt proposal, 773
Oxfordshire, agricultural condition of, 912
Oyster dredging by the ancient Britons, 51

Paget, sir William, appointed by Henry's will one of the sixteen councellors to Edward VI., 301; warns Somerset that the people desire liberty, and urges repressive measures, 307; reproaches Somerset for his too great lenity, 309; despotic principles of, 310; writes to the confederated lords that Somerset is secured, 311; opposes a bill for the punishment of heresy with death, which is thrown out by the peers, 324
Paget, lord. See Anglesea.
Paine, Thomas, author of "The Rights of Man," his early career, 973; invites the Parisians to establish a republic, ib.; found guilty of libel in publishing his book, 986; a member of the National Convention of France, ib.; votes that Louis XVI. be imprisoned and banished, 988
Pains and Penalties bill passed against two Irish priests, 1723, 776, and against Atterbury, bishop of Rochester, 776; against Queen Caroline introduced, 1820; examination into the evidence; trial of the queen; abandonment of the bill, 1152
Painters in Water Colors, Society of, started 1805, 1147
Painting; celebrated painters in England from Henry VIII.'s time to William III., 756; general decline of portrait painting from Lely to Reynolds, by whom it was restored, 756; low state of the art of, temp. George II., 930; formation of the English school of, initiated by Hogarth; idea of a royal academy started by Thornhill previous to 1724; revived in 1749; public exhibition of paintings in 1760, and 1761, the first practical embodiment of the idea, 941; exhibition of designs for sign-boards, ib.; sign painters, ib.; foundation of the Royal Academy, Dec. 10, 1768, ib.; the British Institution established, 1145; the National and Dulwich galleries, ib.; rise of water-color painting; Society of Painters in Water-Colors formed 1805, 1147
Pakenham, sir Edward, commands the British army in America, 1814, 1101; his appearance raises the confidence of the army, ib.; his advance upon New Orleans, and struggle with general Jackson; organizes an attack upon the enemy, Jan. 7, ib.; in which he is mortally wounded, ib.
Paley, his high intellectual position among English churchmen, 1139
Palliser, sir Hugh, accuses admiral Keppel of misconduct and incapacity, 886; tried by court martial; acquitted, ib.
Palm, German minister in London; disavows the secret articles of the treaty of Vienna; ordered to leave England, 778
Palm, J. P., executed by the French for publishing a certain book, Aug. 26, 1806, 1059
Palmer, Thomas Fyshe, sentenced to transportation for advocating a reform in the representation of the people,
Palmerston, lord, secretary at war, 1809, 1077; 1820, 1148; in the Canning cabinet, 1167; joins the Wellington ministry, 1828, 1173; opposes lord Russell's motion for the repeal of the Corporation and Test acts, 1175; resigns office with Mr. Huskisson and the other Canningites, ib.; secretary of state for foreign affairs, 1187, 1224; advocates reform, 1831, 1189; success of his policy towards France, 1241; denies having visited Louis Napoleon for two years previous to 1840; his conversation with Guizot on the fleets of England and France, 1242; absurdly suspected of being in the pay of Russia, 1243; advocates free trade in the debate on the sugar duties, 1244
Pamplona surrendered to the British, Oct. 31, 1813, 1091
Paoli, the Corsican patriot; defends the island against the French, 1768, 865; becoming in exile, he seeks refuge in England, ib.; organizes a revolt against the French, 1791, 1007
Paris, entry of the allies and Louis XVIII. into, July, 1815, 1109
Paris, peace of, signed Feb. 10, 1763; its terms, 845, 909; treaty of, May 15, 1796, 1040; peace of, July 20, 1806, 1093; peace of, Jan. 6, 1810, 1094; treaty of, ratified by Napoleon and the allies, April 11, 1814, ib.; between France and the allies, May 30, 1815, 1103; peace of, Nov. 20, 1815, 1109, 1224
Parker, Hyde, admiral; engages the Dutch off the Dogger Bank, 1781, 894; commands the fleet against the Danes, 1801, 1037; allows Nelson to fight and win the naval battle of Copenhagen, ib.
Parker, Richard, chosen president of the delegates of the mutineers at the Nore, May, 1797; trial and early career; executed at Sandwich, June 30, 1016
Parkyns, sir William, concerned in a conspiracy against William III., 1696, 664; is executed, 665
Parliamentary reform; two attempts at reforming parliament made, 655; Chatham recommends, 880; agitates the public mind, 1780, 888; Pitt's scheme of, proposed, 902, and rejected, 902; his second bill for, produced, 951; rejection of his third bill for, 955; in Ireland, 1023; taken up by ignorant and uneducated persons, 1120; Cobbett advocates it, ib.; the Hampden club reformers, 1121; Burdett twice revives the question of, 1129, 1131; lord Russell becomes a reformer and obtains the disfranchisement of Grampound, 1131; cases of borough corruption, 1175; preparation of the Reform bill, 1188; lord John Russell introduces the bill before a full house, ib.; purport of the bill, ib.; its reception by the opposition, ib.; sir R. Inglis's reply, ib.; debate on the bill, 1189; Macaulay's speech, ib.; speeches of Palmerston and Peel, ib.; defeat of the ministers in committee, 1190; introduction of separate reform bills for England, Scotland, and Ireland, 1191; Macaulay's speech on the English reform bill, ib.; the bill is read a second time and passed into committee; Mr. Croker's steady opposition to it, ib.; his fears as to the results of its passing, ib.; the bill passes from the commons to the lords, ib.; the five nights' debate speeches of earl Grey, 1192; of the duke of Wellington, ib.; of lords Dudley, ib.; Eldon, ib.; and Brougham, ib.; the bill thrown out by the Lords, ib.; resolutions of the Commons, 1193; the king's speech again recommends reform; new bill introduced by lord John Russell; alterations contained in it; second reading of bill in Commons; passed by them; introduced into the Lords, 1196; scene at the second reading; defeat of the ministers in committee, ib.; the king refuses to create peers to insure the passing of the bill; the ministers resign; the Commons implore the king to call another reform ministry, 1197; the king consents to the creation of peers; abatement of the opposition of the anti-reform peers, 1198; passing of the Reform bills for Great Britain and Ireland, June and July, 1832, 1199; changes effected by the working of the reform acts, ib.; fears of anti reformers, 1202
Partition Treaty, negotiations between England and France for a, 677; the partition scheme originated with France, ib.; the negotiations are carried on, 678; correspondence and proceedings of William in connection with the first, 678; it is signed Oct. 11, 1698, by Portland and sir J. Williamson, 679, 732; stipulations of the first, ib.; the second signed in 1700, 679, 732
Paston Letters, curious illustrations of the manners of the time, afforded by, 179-181, 184-186; instance from, of the endeavor to influence a county election, 190
Pastons, defence of Caister Castle by, against the duke of Norfolk, 171
Paterson, William, proposes the scheme of a great national bank, 1691, which is carried out by the establishment of the Bank of England, in 1694, 659; obtains a 300, 000*l.* subscription for forming a company for trading to Africa and the Indies, 674; sails with the colony for Darien, July 26, 1698; quarrels with the ship's officers and the council, 675; he is attacked by fever, June, 1699, 676
Paul, Lewis, his cotton machine, 924
Paul I. of Russia, succeeds Catharine, favors the French interests, 1012; joins the coalition against France, 1030; won back to the French side, 1034; assassinated, 1801, 1038; emperor, 1796-1801, 1310
Paulinus, conversion of Edwin, king of Northumbria, by, 23
Paull, James, brings charges against the marquis of Wellesley, 1053; duel with Burdett; commits suicide, 1807, 1056
Paulus, the notary, suppresses the revolt of Magnentius, 17; despotism of, in Britain, ib.; burnt alive by order of the emperor Julian, ib.
Paving and Lighting Act, passed, 1762, 1118
Pearls found in Britain, 5
Pearson, captain, his naval engagement with Paul Jones; defeated, 888
Peel, sir Robert, first returned to parliament, 1809; chosen chairman of the currency committee; declares himself open to conviction, 1130; modifications of his views regarding the currency question, ib.; passing of the act called Peel's act, 1131; appointed home secretary, 1822, 1156-1162; objects to the extent of Mackintosh's measures for abolishing capital punishment, 1162; his high position as an anti-Catholic partisan, 1164; debate with Canning, the head of the Catholic party, on the Catholic question, 1165; resigns his office on Canning becoming minister, 1827, ib.; freedom from acrimony in his opposition to Canning, ib.; his testimony in favor of Canning's political integrity, 1166; his share in the negotiations for the premiership, 1168; home secretary in the Wellington administration, 1173; consulted by Wellington in the formation of the new cabinet, ib.; gradual advocacy of liberal principles, ib.; adoption of his motion for inquiry into the public income and expenditure, and the state of the metropolitan police, 1175; proposes a compromise of the bill for repealing the test and corporation acts, ib.; refuses to acquiesce in the government's bringing forward the relief bill, 1176; consents to continue in office on Wellington earnestly soliciting him to do so, 1177; vacates his seat for Oxford, ib.; fails to be re-elected; but obtains the seat for Westbury, ib.; speech explanatory of the bill for the relief of Roman Catholics; solemnly affirms that his conduct with respect to this question was regulated by honest motives, 1178; compels Mr. Brougham to apologize for his strong language against the Wellington ministry, 1180; his retirement from office, 1830, 1187; his emotion at the introduction of the Reform bill, March, 1831, 1188; his reply to Lord Palmerston's speech, 1189; refuses to advocate reform upon any terms, 1832, 1198; his declaration as to reform, 1823, 1203; speech of, supporting government in the Irish Coercion Bill, 1205; Cobbett's motion to have him dismissed the privy council, ib.; his narrative of his appointment to the premiership, 1214; first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, 1834, ib.; formation of his ministry, 1215; list of his cabinet; his Tamworth manifesto, ib.; general principles of his government, 1216; ministerial defeats, ib.; supports the amendment on the motion for a London university charter, ib.; speech of, on explaining the cause of his resignation, ib.; acts the part of moderator in the dispute between the two houses, 1219; eulogizes William IV., 1223; his solicitude as to the condition of the laboring classes, 1237; fails in forming a new ministry on account of the Queen's refusing to dismiss the ladies of the bedchamber, 1238; speaks against free-trade principles, 1244; moves that the ministry have not the confidence of the House of Commons, ib.; his speech on the address, 1245; difficulties of his position, ib.; proclaims the necessity of the war with China, 1247; supports Macaulay's amendments to the copyright bill, 1253; his reserve as to his policy, and of the intended course to be pursued in the corn-law question, 1261; his opinions on this question, 1262; introduces a bill for better protecting the queen's person, 1263; his debate with lord Palmerston as to his policy towards France, ib.; considers the Ashburton treaty decisive of the boundary question, ib.; resolves to maintain the union with Ireland, 1264; his speech on the state of Ireland, 1268; considers the prosperous state of the country a justification of his financial policy of 1842, ib.; advocates protection to agriculture, 1269; his position reviewed, ib.; his bank act passed, ib.; its advantages and disadvantages, ib.; objects to lord Ashley's ten-hour clause in sir J. Graham's bill for regulating factory labor, ib.; conduct of, in the sugar-duty debate; Mr. Disraeli's hostility towards, 1270; remarks of, on the Tahiti affair, 1271; his financial statement for 1845, 1274; opposition to his proposals, ib.; again attacked by Mr. Disraeli, ib.; introduces the government plans for a grant to Maynooth college, ib.; denunciations poured upon him, ib.; his measure carried, ib.; Tory bitterness towards, 1275; apprehends a failure of the potato crop, ib.; proposes a modification of the corn-laws, ib.; dissensions in his cabinet as to suspending the corn-laws, 1276; he resigns his premiership, ib.; refuses to pledge himself to support the repeal of the corn-laws, ib.; his parting interview with the queen, ib.; reassumes his office, ib.; the duke of Wellington's admiration of his courage, 1277; ministerial explanation of; determines to hold his power unshackled, ib.; again attacked by Mr. Disraeli, ib.; his new tariff and corn-law bill, ib.; debate on his plans, ib.; his speech in support of his measures, 1278; adoption of his bills, ib.; the bill for the protection of life in Ireland, rejected; violent attack on, by lord Bentinck; defended by Mr. Cobden, 1279; vindicates his own conduct; resigns office, ib.; opposed to limiting the hours of factory labor, 1283
Peerage bill introduced; rejected, 1719, 773
Pelham, Henry, speaks against the motion for repealing the Septennial act, 1734, 785; appointed first lord of the treasury, August, 1743, 797, 865; succeeds Walpole in his command of the House of Commons, 798; turned out of office for 48 hours; conducts the financial part of the administration, 819; regarded the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle as a necessity; his despondency at the weakness of the nation, 821; proposes the reduction of the national debt interest, ib.; death of, March 6, 1754, 825; first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, 1743-1754, 865
Pellegrini, Antonio, a ceiling painter, 757
Peltier, trial of, for libelling Bonaparte, 1803, 895; Mackintosh's speech in defence of, ib.
Pembroke, William, earl of, one of the leaders of the barons who obtained Magna Charta, 103; is appointed regent to Henry III. in 1217, 106; succeeds in expelling the French under Louis, ib.; death of, in 1219, ib.
Pembroke, Thomas Herbert, earl of, represents England at the conferences at Ryswick, 1697, 668
Pendergrass. See Portland, earl of, 665
Penn, Richard, governor of Pennsylvania; entrusted with the presentation of a petition to the king, 1775, 876; examined in the House of Lords, 877
Penn, William, arrested on March 5, 1682, with Mead, for attending a Quaker's meeting, 554; behavior of Jeffreys, ib.; is acquitted, ib.; obtains a grant of land in America in lieu of money owing to him by the crown, 577; resolves to found a colony for the Quakers there out of the reach of the penal laws, ib.; obtains a charter from the king, who names the settlement Pennsylvania, ib.; with the assistance of Algernon Sidney, frames a constitution for it, ib.; lands at Newcastle on the Delaware, October 27, 1682, ib.; founds Philadelphia, and enters into a treaty with the Indians, ib.; influence of, in procuring the release from prison of 1400 Quakers on the accession of James I., 578
Penny Magazine started, 1832; large circulation of, proof of the increased desire for knowledge, 1202
Penny Postage. See Post.
People, history of the, desirableness of, preface, 3
Perceval, Spencer, opens the case for the crown in the trial of Peltier, 1803, 1042; opposes the bill for promoting the enlistment of Roman Catholics, 1062; chancellor of the exchequer, 1807, ib.; moves that the duke of York is innocent of the charge brought against him, 1072; premier, 1809; constitution of his ministry, 1077; his ministry retained on the prince of Wales becoming Regent, February, 1811, 1080; assassinated in the lobby of the House of Commons by Bellingham, May 11, 1812, 1082
Perron commands the Scindia's army, 1054; defeated by general Lake; puts himself under British protection, ib.

Persigny, M. de, aids Louis Napoleon in his enterprise at Strasbourg, 1837; effects his escape, 1222
Perth, duke of. See Drummond, James.
Pestilence in 1479, notice of, 201
Peter the Great, czar of Muscovy, visits England in 1698; Evelyn's house is hired for him; he engages himself as a ship-carpenter; description of, 672; career of, from 1698 to 1709, 718; when his empire is invaded by Charles XII. of Sweden, whom he defeats at Pultowa, July 8, 1709, ib.; enters Mecklenberg and threatens Denmark, 1716, 769
Peter the Hermit, first preaching of the Crusade by, 67; first crusade led by, 68; rout of, ib.
Peterborough, Charles Mordaunt, earl of, impeached, 1689, 634; his early career, 700; and character, 709; he is sent on an expedition to Spain, ib.; opposes the prince of Darmstadt's and the archduke Charles' plan of besieging Barcelona; but finally agrees to it, ib.; quarrels with the prince of Darmstadt, ib.; attacks Montjuich; his men are repulsed, he rallies them, and finally reduces the post; Barcelona soon after surrenders, 1702, 701; raises the siege of San Mateo; pursues Las Torres and his army; commences operations for the defence of Valencia, ib.; removes the besieging army under Arcos out of his path, and obtains admission into Valencia by a stratagem, 1706, 702; defeats Philip's troops, ib.; relieves Barcelona, 703; goes to Madrid; his gayety of temper as shown by a letter, ib.; his disgust at Charles; leaves him; returns to Spain, 1707; recalled by government, ib.; his subsequent occupation, ib.; receives the thanks of parliament for his services in Spain, 725
Peters, Hugh, idea afforded by, of the havoc of the Civil War, 470; execution of, as a regicide, 536
Petion, Villeneuve, sent by the National Assembly to conduct Louis XVI. back to France, 1791, 972; chosen mayor of Paris, 973; his conduct in the insurrection of June 20, 1792, 978; popularity of, ib.; heads a deputation demanding the king's deposition, 979
Petition of Right passed in 1628, 423
Petticoat costume, 18th century, 742
Petty, lord Henry. See Lansdown, lord.
Phigaleian marbles, 1145
Philadelphia occupied by the British, 1777, 882
Philip of Spain contracted in marriage to queen Mary, 320; marriage of, to Mary, 324; bribery of the English parliament by, 325; leaves England, 331; continued interference of, in its affairs, ib.; return of, to England, 332; war of, with the Pope and France, ib.; engages England to join in the war against France, 333; quits England, ib.; his ambassador's account of Elizabeth's character, 334; proposes himself as a husband to Elizabeth, 335; efforts of, to suppress Protestantism in the Netherlands, 354; cruelties of the duke of Alva in carrying his desires into effect, ib.; intrigues of, against Elizabeth, ib.; schemes of, for invading England, 359; his fleet in Cadiz destroyed by Drake, 369; fresh preparations for the invasion, 370; the Armada sets sail from the Tagus, May 28, 1588, 372; ill-success and defeat of the Armada, 373; fresh preparations made by, 376; Corunna and Vigo taken and burnt by the English fleet, ib.; intrigues of, in Scotland against England, 383; endeavors to have Elizabeth poisoned, 384; death of, in 1598, 388
Philip V. of Spain succeeds to the throne, 1700, 683; enters Catalonia, 1706; besieges Charles in Barcelonia, 702; Peterborough compels him to raise the siege; retires to Madrid; but is driven hence by the allies, ib.; the national enthusiasm rises in his favor, 703; the duke of Berwick compels the allies to evacuate Madrid, ib.; reseated on his throne, 1707, 713; he is opposed by Charles and assisted by Staremberg and Stanhope, 1710; is defeated at Almenara and Saragossa, 725; the duke of Vendôme takes command of his army and retrieves his cause, and establishes his family on the throne, ib.; stipulations granted to, by the treaty of Utrecht, 735; the French invade his territory; they compel him to dismiss his minister, Alberoni; accedes to the Quadruple Alliance, January, 1720, 772; succeeded by Ferdinand VI., 1746, 1309
Philippa, general, commands the French at the siege of Badajoz, 1812; his defence, 1085; capitulates to the British, ib.
Phillips, sir Thomas, aids in quelling the Frost insurrection at Newport, 1239
Philpot, the martyr and persecutor, 329
Physicians' College, founded in 1518, 301
Pichegru, Charles, defeated by the duke of York, May, 1794, 1005; compels the British under Dundas to abandon Holland, 1007; suppresses an insurrection in Paris, April 1, 1795, 1009; banished France, 1797, 1017; implicated in a conspiracy against Bonaparte, 1804; he is found strangled in prison, 1047
Picton, sir Thomas, takes part in capturing Ciudad Rodrigo, 1812, 1085; his arrival at Quatre Bras interferes with Ney's movements, 1105; slain at the battle of Waterloo, June 18, 1815, 1107
Picts and Scots, irruption of into Britain, 17; opinions of Dr. Lingard and Dr. Lappenberg that they were the same people, ib.; driven back by Theodosius, ib.
Piedmont, annexed to France, September, 1802, 1041
Pierson, major, defeats the French under Rullecourt on Jersey Island, 1781; killed, 894
Pilgrimages to holy places, popularity of, in the 15th century, 186; to shrines, prevalence of, temp. Henry VII., 223; Erasmus' account of his pilgrimages to Walsingham and Canterbury, ib.
Pilgrim Fathers, settlement of, in Massachusetts, in 1620, 407
Pilnitz, declaration of, 974, 1040
Pindarees, war with the, 1817-1818, 1169; results in the breaking up of the Mahratta confederacy, which had aided the Pindarees, ib.
Pinkie, battle of, October 10, 1547, 302
Pitt. See Chatham.
Pitt, William, unsuccessful candidate as M.P. for Cambridge University; returned for Appleby, 1780; first speech in support of Burke's Civil List Bill; Wilberforce's prophecy of, 894; his hostile speech toward the ministry, 899; his motion for the Reform of Parliament proposed, 1782, 902; rejected, ib.; becomes chancellor of the exchequer, 905; commencement of the party conflict between Fox and, 908; his argument in favor of a commercial treaty with France, 927; introduces his second reform bill; it is rejected; as also another bill for preventing abuses in public offices, 951; appointed first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer, December 19, 1783, 952; his anxiety and disinterestedness; his India bill thrown out; his struggle against a majority in the Commons, 953; addresses to the king for the removal of the Pitt ministry; his popularity; and final triumph, ib.; general character of; re-elected for the University of Cambridge, ib.; squibs against, ib.; considered a safer minister than Fox, 954; his financial measures, ib.; introduces his bill for promoting commerce between Great Britain and Ireland; withdrawn; his reform bill is rejected a third time, 955; his scheme of the sinking fund; its futility, ib.; his speech in favor of the commercial treaty with France, ib.; consolidates the taxes; Burke's tribute of thanks to; Pitt's increase of popularity, 956; endeavors to restrict the prince of Wales' power as regent, 957; the king's gratitude to, for his conduct during his illness, ib.; his popularity still further increased, ib.; hopes for an improved state of France; visits France, 1783, 958; his spirited conduct averts the war with Spain, ib.; his calmness and confidence in the stability of the British power, ib.; keeps aloof from the declaration of Pilnitz, 974; displays the flourishing condition of Great Britain, ib.; his eloquent speech in favor of abolishing the slave-trade immediately, 975; supports Fox's libel bill, ib.; attempts made to bring about a coalition between Fox and Pitt, ib.; his opinions on parliamentary reform, 976; lord warden of the Cinque Ports, 988; his strong desire to remain neutral with France, ib.; his opinion of the French proceedings against Louis XVI., 985; his interview with lord Loughborough; is induced by him to favor a war policy, ib.; his address to the king on the execution of Louis XVI, 988; his Indian declaratory bill passed, 1788, 989; defends his abandonment of the cause of parliamentary reform, 992; opinions of, on the French war, ib.; measures adopted by, toward France; they are opposed by Burke, ib.; Fox, ib.; Sheridan, Grey, and Erskine, 993; points out the difficulty of conducting a negotiation with the French, 995; Fox lays the blame of the war miscarriages in the campaign of 1793 upon, 997; Canning becomes his supporter, 1008; opposition of Wilberforce to the address, 1794, ib.; brings before the House of Commons a seditious meetings bill, 1795, 1010; tenor of the bill; disputes with Fox; the bill is passed, ib.; in consequence of a heavy pressure on the Bank of England he is unable to obtain financial assistance, 1797; his difficulty got over, 1013; introduces bills for suppressing mutiny in the navy, 1797; the mutiny at the Nore is thereby quelled; advocates peace with France, 1016; proposes an income tax; his estimate of its amount, Dec. 3, 1798; the measure passed, 1022; anxious to promote the relief of the Irish Catholics, 1026; his resolutions on the Union agreed to, 1027; endeavors to persuade the king not to openly oppose the Catholic emancipation question, 1035; the king refusing to do so, Mr. Pitt resigns, March 14, 1801; the king's insanity imputed to the hasty resignation of, 1036; negotiations for his return to power, 1803; stipulates for more than Addington will grant, 1044; his speech advocating war with France, ib.; commands the volunteers at Walmer, 1045; presses for an administration on a broad basis; obtains the premiership on certain prescribed conditions, 1046; his government opposed by the Addington, Grenville, and Fox parties; effects a reconciliation with Mr. Addington, 1047; carries the question of war against Spain, 1048; his mortification on the charges of corruption being brought against lord Melville further increased on the passing of the vote of censure, ib.; effect of the news of Mack's surrender at Ulm on, 1050; his feelings on hearing of the battle of Trafalgar and death of Nelson, 1051; Napoleon's triumph at Austerlitz completes the ruin of his health; last days of Pitt; story of the desertion of his deathbed; died Jan. 23, 1806, 1052; public honors conferred on, 1056
Pius VI., feebleness of his government; buys Napoleon off from invading his territories, 1012
Pius VII. compelled to officiate at Napoleon's coronation, 1804, 1047; imprisoned at Savona, 1081; released, 1091
Plague, the great, of 1665, first appearance of; the condition of London, such as to promote it, 542; Defoe's narrative of it in London, ib.; superstitious fears of the people respecting it; notices of, by Pepys and others, 544
Plassey, battle of, June 23, 1757, 834
Platiere, R. de. See Roland.
Plattsburg, the British fail to take, 1814, 1100
Plautius, sent from Gaul by Claudius to invade Britain, 7; attacks Togodumnus and Caractacus with indifferent success, ib.; applies for succor to Claudius, ib.; triumph bestowed on, 8
Plentheim. See Blenheim.
Plymouth, not a great naval station at the end of the 17th century; its prosperity caused by the erection of the breakwater by Telford, 604
Pocock, sir George, admiral; reduces Havannah in conjunction with the earl of Albemarle, 845
Poitiers, battle of, won by the Black Prince, Sept. 19, 1356, 141
Poland, incorporated with Russia, 1295
Pole, cardinal Reginald, publishes a book against the divorce of Henry VIII.; his family in England are arrested, in 1539, and his mother, the aged countess of Salisbury, executed, in 1541, 278; he arrives in England, in 1544, as legate, 325; the parliament submits to the pope, and he absolves the realm, ib.; moderation of, during the Marian persecution, 326; success of his efforts towards a reconciliation defeated by the zealotry of pope Paul IV., 331; is made archbishop of Canterbury, 332; his proceedings against the bodies of dead heretics, 332; his death, 336
Police, state of London, 18th century, 946; inquiry into the state of the, made 1816, 1817, 1118; the new Metropolitan formed, 1829, 1175
Polignac, prince Jules de, president of the French council, 1829, 1181; his ministry sends out an expedition against Algiers, ib.; informs the king of the unsettled state of the kingdom, ib.; refuses to recall the royal ordinances; the king is compelled to dismiss the ministry of, 1183
Political Unions, extensive formation of, 1832, 1196
Pollock, gen., his Indian campaign, 1842, 1251
Pondicherry, siege of, raised by the English, 827; surrenders to the English, 949; taken by sir John Braithwaite, 990
Poniatowski, prince, heads the Poles in their claim for independence; leaves Poland, 1007
Ponsonby, G., proposes several reform measures, 1023; moves an amendment in the address claiming independence for Ireland, 1026; his sorrow at Perceval's death, 1080; a lord of the treasury, 1187
Ponte-corvo, prince of. See Charles XIV. of Sweden.
Poor, condition of the Anglo-Saxon, 29; progress of legislation for the relief of, 384; statute passed for, 39 Eliz., the foundation of the English Poor Law, 385
Poor Laws, administration of, 1816, 1119; the poor law amendment bill brought in by lord Althorp, April 17, 1834, 1209; the report of the poor law commissioners, 1209-11; debates on, opposition to, and passing of, the bill, 1211; it receives the royal assent, Aug. 14; first report of the commissioners, ib.; introduction of the poor laws into Ireland proposed, 1837, 1223; working of the new poor law, 1230-1235; introduction of the, into Ireland by Mr. Nicholls, 1234
Pope, Alexander, essays by, in the "Spectator" and "Guardian," 741; sketch of his life, ib.; and traits of his character, 742; his "Rape of the Lock," 743, 744; highly remunerated for his translations of the Iliad and Odyssey, 748; his essay on criticism and attack on Dennis; his satire upon antiquaries; the Dunciad, 748, 749, 936; remarks on the commentators, public schools; the universities and the traveller; entomologists and florists, 750; condemns Vanbrugh's architecture, 755; his libel on lord Hervey, 782; died 1744, 936
Popham, sir Home, captures Buenos Ayres, 1060
Popish Plot of 1668. See Charles II., and Oates, Titus.
Population of England, at the end of the third century, a very mixed one, 14, 15; introduction of large bodies of Germans, Burgundians, and Vandals, by the Roman emperors, 14; mixed character of, at the departure of the Romans; cowardice and effeminacy of, as described by Gildas, not credible, 18
Popular amusements and games, 150, 220, 226, 298, 299, 342, 378-381, 537
Popular sports, temp. Richard I., 97, 98
Port. See Wine.
Porteous, John, captain of the Edinburgh city guard; fires on a mob, killing several persons; convicted of murder; sentenced to death; reprieved; murdered by the mob, 787
Porteous riots in Edinburgh, 786
Porter, George, his share in the assassination plot, 1696, 664; gives evidence against Fenwick, 667
Portland, William Bentinck, earl of; example of his integrity, 661; accompanies William to the siege of Namur, 1695; summons Boufflers to surrender the place, 662; William orders a grant of an estate to him, which is recalled, on the Commons showing it to be unconstitutional, 663; is informed of the assassination plot by Fisher, Pendergrass; and De la Rue, 665; arranges with marshal Boufflers the preliminaries of the peace of Ryswick, 1697, 668; is sent on a mission to France by William, 1698; description of his entrée and private audience; his reception by Louis and the French court, 671; correspondence of, in connection with the first Partition Treaty; signed by him as commissioner, Oct. 11, 678; jealousy of, towards Albemarle; he retires from court and gives up all his offices; but is persuaded by William to continue the negotiations for the second Partition Treaty, 681; he is impeached by the Commons for his concern in the Partition Treaties, 684; attends William on his death-bed, 687
Portland, duke of, appointed viceroy of Ireland, 1782, 904; first lord of the treasury, 1783, 951, 1325; supports the Alien bill; opposes lord Loughborough being chancellor; after considerable hesitation gives his adherence to the war party, 985; appointed third secretary of state, 1794, 1007; requested to aid the bribery for accomplishing the Irish Union, 1027; nominal head of the administration, 1807; resigns the premiership, 1809; died Oct. 29, 1809, 1062; home secretary of state, 1794-1801, 1325
Portmore, lord, governor of Gibraltar; hastens to defend it in his 80th year, 780
Porto Bello, taken by admiral Vernon, 793
Porto Carero, cardinal, his practisings on Charles II. of Spain, to induce him to give the Spanish inheritance to France, 683; his purpose accomplished; chief of the Spanish council, ib.
Portugal, prince regent of. See John of Portugal.
Post, insecurity and tardiness of the, 18th century;

introduction of mail coaches, 1784, 938; rapid increase and celerity of communication by, 1227; insufficiency of postal accommodation, ib.; public opinion on Rowland Hill's penny postage plan, 1239; the system is tried, found successful, and finally adopted. ib.; variety of stamps in use. ib.
Pottinger, sir Henry, the British plenipotentiary at Canton; his proceedings as such, 1248; concludes the treaty of Nanking, ib.
Pounds, John, his benevolent career; died 1839, 1230
Power loom, invented by Dr. Cartwright, 926
Pragmatic Sanction published by Charles VI., April 17, 1713, 733
Prague, peace of, May 30, 1635 732; taken by the elector of Bavaria, Nov. 25, 1741, 815; besieged by Frederick of Prussia, 1758, unavailingly, 835
Pratt, sir C. See Camden, lord.
Presburg, peace of, signed, Dec. 26, 1805, 1051
Presbyterians. See Nonconformists.
Press, the See Newspapers.
Preston, lord, plots against William; tried; and convicted, 643; implicates several eminent persons with being concerned in the plot, 644
Preston, captain, tried for abetting the murder of a mulatto; defended by John Adams; found "not guilty," 863
Preston-Pans, battle of, Sept., 1745, 803
Prevost, sir George, governor-in-chief of the British North American Provinces, 1096; his failure in an attack on Plattsburg; outcry raised against him; resigns; demands a court-martial, but dies before it commences, 1100
Priestley, Dr. Joseph, accused of being opposed to the church of England, 970; becomes a Unitarian minister at Birmingham, 1780. ib.; his character, ib.; his "Familiar Letters to the Inhabitants of Birmingham," published, 1791; the riots of 1791; the rioters burn his chapel, house, and books, and compel him to flee the town, ib.
Printing begun in England by Caxton about 1474, 187
Printing and the importation of books, encouragement afforded to by Richard III., 209.
Prior, Matthew, accompanies St. John, viscount Bolingbroke, on his embassy to France, 1712, 735; excluded from the act of grace, 1717, 770
Prisons. See Gaols.
Pritchard, British consul at Tahiti; the French outrage on that island compels him to quit it, 1271
Privateering, prevalence of, 1781; abolition of, recommended, 1856, 896
Probus, emperor, sends Burgundians and Vandals into Britain, 14
Prohibitory bill passed, 877
Prome occupied by the British, April, 1825, 1171
Property qualification bill, passed 1711, 726
Provera marches to relieve Mantua; surrenders himself and army to Bonaparte, Jan. 16, 1797, 1017
Provisions, prices of, in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I., 110; prices of, in 1495 and 1497, 225; proclamation by the Protector Somerset, against the unreasonable prices of, 307; scarcity of, and fluctuations in the prices of, in 1573, 1586, 1587, and 1596, 387
Prynne, William, excessive punishment of, in 1633, for publishing the "Histrio-Mastix," 427; renewed severe sentence on, in 1637, for anti-prelatical writing, 431; is released with Burton and Bastwick, on the meeting of the Long Parliament in 1640, 437; triumphant entry of, into London, ib.; prosecution of Laud by, in 1645, 466
Ptolemy, list of towns in Britain by, 15
Public health, state of the, more especially that of the laboring classes, 1227; causes of the bad, 1228; arrangements for bettering the, ib.; general and local boards of health established; public health act passed, 1286
Pulteney, William, opposes Walpole; his name struck off the Privy Council list, 782; his spiteful quarrel with Walpole; and duel with Lord Hervey; opposes the bill for proposing standing armies, 782; and the resolution to publish the parliamentary debates, 783; shows the fallacy of the arguments in favor of remposing the duty on salt, ib.; argues that it is a step towards a general excise, 783; favors the motion for repealing the Septennial act, 785; opposes the Gin act, 1736, 786; created earl of Bath, 795
Pultowa invested by the Swedish, 718; battle of, July 8, 1709, 718
Purchase, George, charged with high treason for taking part in a riot, 1710, 721; tried, convicted, pardoned, 722; his share in the riot, ib.
Puritans. See Nonconformists.
Putnam, Israel, a farmer and tavern-keeper; heads his neighbors in the revolution; becomes a general, 875; commands the Americans at the battle of Brooklyn, 1776, 879
Pym, John, joins in the protestation of the House of Commons in 1621, against the king's interference with their liberty of speech, 418; assists in the debate on the Petition of Right, in 1628, 423; prophetic threat of, to Wentworth, on his becoming minister to Charles I., 427; speech of, impeaching Strafford, 437; conducts the proceedings on the trial of Strafford, 439; moves in the Commons, that the form be changed to a bill of attainder, ib.; produces the notes of the Privy Council furnished by Henry Vane, against Strafford, ib.; his vehement reply to Strafford's defence, 440; attempted to be seized by the king, on Jan. 3, 1642, 447; addresses the Londoners, 453; death of, Dec. 8, 1643, 464; buried in Westminster Abbey, ib.
Pyrenees, treaty of the, Nov. 7, 1659, 732; battles of the, 1813, 1076; view from the, at sunrise, described, 1090

Quadruple alliance signed Aug. 2, 1718; joined by the duke of Savoy and Spain, 733
Quakers, interview between George Fox and Cromwell, 518; case of James Naylor, a Quaker, 521; George Fox lays before Cromwell the sufferings of the, 525; proclamation against holding conventicles, and passive resistance offered to, 537; stubborn resistance of, to the provisions of the Conventicle act in 1664, 542; Penn and Mead arrested and tried for attending a Conventicle, 554; they are acquitted, and Jeffreys fines and imprisons the jury, who are liberated by the judges of the Common Pleas, ib.; founding of Pennsylvania by Penn in 1682, 577; fourteen hundred released from prison on the accession of James II., 578; exempted from the Toleration act on certain terms, 624; bill for the relief of, passed, 1722, 775; endeavor to obtain the abolition of the slave trade, 1057
Quarterly Review started, 1809, in opposition to the Edinburgh Review; its editor, partisans, and criticism, 1140
Quebec. See Wolfe, 839; capitulates to the English, Sept. 18, 1759, ib.; besieged by the Americans, 1760, 840; blockaded by them, 1775, 877
Queensbury, duke of, character and amusements of the, 941
Queensbury, James Douglas, duke of, high commissioner to queen Anne; quells the riots made in opposition to the union, 1706, 711; he is threatened with assassination, ib.; induces Ker to try to thwart the Cameronian schemes, ib.; he is advised of the proceedings of the Jacobite plotters by John Ker, 714
Quesnoy, surrendered to Ormond and Eugene, July 4, 1712, 733; taken by the Austrians, 1793, 996
Quiberon Bay. See Hawke, 839
Quiberon, the British expedition to, 1795, 1009

Radstadt, peace of, March 6, 1714, 733; congress at, 1797-1799, 1030, 1040
Raeburn, his portrait painting, 1146
Raffles, sir Stamford, lieutenant-governor of Java, 1169; established a factory in Singapore, 1819, 1170
Ragged schools. See Education, 1230
Ragusa, duke of. See Marmont.
Raikes, Robert, ordered to attend the bar of the House of Commons for printing the debates, 1729, 783; Sunday schools originated by, 1781, 647; changes in English society noticed by, 1231
Rajah of Nagpoor. See Bhoonsla.
Rajah Sahib, his contests with Clive; put to death by the Mahrattas, 827
Raleigh, sir Walter, failure of his first attempt to found a colony in North America, 371; commands the land forces at Plymouth, on the approach of the Armada, 373; goes on board the fleet, 384; assists Essex in his attack on Cadiz in 1596, 384; commands another expedition with Essex, with whom he disagrees, 384; is deprived of his offices by James I.; indicted in 1603, for projecting to dispossess James in favor of Arabella Stuart, 397; brutality of Coke, and calm bearing of Raleigh, during the trial; he is convicted, reprieved, and confined in the Tower; his employments during his confinement, 398; opposition of, to the treaty with Spain in 1604, 399; is released from the Tower in 1616, 415; undertakes an expedition to Guiana, to discover a gold mine, ib.; is attacked, driven back, and returns to England, 416; arrested at Plymouth, ib.; and executed under his former sentence on Oct. 29, 1618, ib.; popular indignation occasioned by his execution ib.
Ramillies, battle of, May 23, 1706, 706
Ranelagh gardens, its company and amusements, 939
Rangoon taken by the British, 1823; defended by sir A. Campbell, 1170
Rawdon, lord. See Moira.
Rebecca riots. See Riots.
Rebellion of 1715, 761-767
Rebellion of 1745, 801-818
Reciprocity of Duties bill passed July 4, 1823, 1160
Re-coinage bill passed, 1695, 663
Recognition act passed, 1690, 636
Reform, Irish church. See Church, 1206, 1212, 1216
Reform law. See Brougham, 1175
Reform, parliamentary. See Parliamentary Reform.
Reformation, commencement of, in England, in 1531, 250; Henry VIII. obtains from Convocation a recognition of his being supreme head of the church in England, "as far as the law of Christ will allow," ib.; payment of annates to the see of Rome abolished in 1533, 251; statute forbidding appeals to Rome passed, 254; act of supremacy passed, 257; visitation of the monasteries in 1535, and statute for their dissolution, 259; English bibles ordered to be set up in churches in 1538, 273; act of 1539 passed for the dissolution of abbeys, 273, 276; exposure of impostures connected with images and relics, 273; destruction of the religious houses, 275; act passed in 1539 for enabling the king to make bishops, 276; projected applications of the monastic revenues, and their non-fulfilment, ib.; the intolerant statute of the Six Articles passed, ib.; reformers executed or driven out of the country by this act, 277; continued burnings for heresies in England, under the Six Articles act, 285; Anne Askew and others burnt, ib.; beneficial effect of the act of 1548, allowing of the marriage of priests, 297; various forms of church service before the establishment of the Book of Common Prayer in 1548, 298; dissensions regarding the keeping of holidays, ib.; the reading of the Bible forbidden "to the lower sort," ib.; progress of, under Edward VI.; the Paraphrase of the New Testament published in English, and the Book of Homilies, ib.; ecclesiastical visitation to inquire as to the existence of Roman Catholic abuses, and the reading of the Bible in English in churches, 303; act for administering the Sacrament in both kinds, ib.; act for the suppression of chantries, ib.; proclamation against religious processions, ib.; the abolition of them not popular, ib.; act for the uniformity of service, ib.; publication of the Book of Common Prayer, 304; persecution of Anabaptists, and burning of Joan Bocher, 312; Articles of Belief set forth by Edward VI., ib.; book of Canon laws issued by Cranmer, ib.; Roman Catholic bishops deprived of their sees, ib.; execution of Somerset, and account of his promotion of the doctrines of the Reformation, 313; sweeping changes effected by Mary on her accession, 319; Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridley condemned for heresy at Oxford, 324; the statutes against heretics revived, ib.; the Marian persecution, ib.; list of Protestant victims, 326; martyrdom of Hooper, bishop of Gloucester, 327; of Rowland Taylor, at Hadleigh, 328; prevalence of intolerance in both Reformers and Papists, 329; Cranmer burnt, March 21, 1556, 330; the church services ordered to be performed in English on the accession of queen Elizabeth, 335; Mary's statutes in favor of popery repealed, 337; dissensions among the Reformers, and progress of Protestantism on the Continent, 338; persecution on the continent of Protestants in the Netherlands and France occasions the settlement of a great number of Calvanists in England, 354; a new statute against Papists passed in 1571, 356; growth of the Puritanical party, ib.; plots of the Jesuists against Elizabeth and the Reformation, 358; increased severities enacted against Papists, priests being ordered to quit the country, 358; the Pope excommunicates England, and publishes a crusade against, 371
Reformation in Scotland, progress of, 281; Patrick Hamilton, the first Protestant martyr in Scotland, burnt at St. Andrews, in 1528, ib.; James V. opposes himself to it, ib.; he refuses Henry VIII.'s proposal to make himself supreme head of the church, ib.; Wishart burnt, March 26, 1546, 283; cardinal Beaton assassinated, May 29, ib.; hostility of the queen regent to the Reformers, 338; the Lords of the Congregation remonstrate, ib.; John Knox arrives from the continent, preaches at Perth, and the Reformers destroy the monastic houses, ib.; Elizabeth lends secret assistance to the Reformers, 339; the Congregation has recourse to arms, ib.; Elizabeth assists them openly with an army, and they besiege and take Leith, ib.; a Confession of Faith drawn up by a parliament in 1560, ib.; other acts passed establishing the reformed religion, 340; Knox preaches against the abstraction of the church patrimony, ib.; Knox's attacks upon Mary, and her avowal of her hatred of him, 341; essential differences of, from that of the Reformation in England, 344; danger of the establishment of, from the opposition of Mary, 345; the pope's authority abolished, and the Confession of Faith of 1560 sanctioned, by the parliament in December, 1567, 351
Regency bill passed, 705; differences between George III. and his ministers on the, 1765; a regency bill passed, 851; another passed, 1788, for appointing the prince of Wales regent, 957
Register Book of births, deaths and marriages, order for the keeping of, in every church, by Thomas Cromwell. 287
Registration bill passed, 1836, 1221
Regner Lodbrok, first invasion of England by, 25; second invasion and death, 78
Remonstrance of London, 1770, 864; of the Massachusetts state against war with Britain, 1812, 1096
Rennie, John, aids in draining the Lincolnshire fens, 915; his early career; and engineering works of Waterloo bridge, and at the Docks, 1144
Rents, rise of, in the reign of Henry VIII., 294
Resumption bill passed, 1699, 680
Revenue, the amount of, in 1547, 287; sources of, 288; of the crown, as settled on Charles II., 534.
Revenue act, opposition to the, by the Americans, 1768, 861
Revolution of 1688, the commencement of a new era of English history, 600
Revolution in Scotland, 630
Revolution, French, 958-967; 968, 969; 971-975; 976; 977-985; 987, 988, 990; 993-1001; 1002; 1004-1006; 1009; 1010 1014; 1017; 1018-1020; 1029-1031; 1032; 1033, 1034, 1035; 1038-1040
Revolution, French, of 1830. See Charles X., 1181-1184
Revolution, French, narrative of the, of 1848, 1285-6
Reynolds, sir Joshua, a leading portrait painter, 930; first president of the royal academy; knighted; contributes to the royal academy's first exhibition, 931; critiqueson his works; the true founder of the English school of painting, 932; died in 1792, 1146
Ricci, Lorenzo, chief of the Jesuits; opposes the suppression of the company, 867
Ricci Sebastian, a ceiling painter, 757
Ricci. Marco, a ceiling painter, 757
Richard of Cirencester, record by, of "a profound peace," from A.D. 211-286, 11; list of cities in Roman Britain given by, 13
Richard I., behavior of, on the death of his father; crowned Sept. 3, 1189; massacre of the Jews at the coronation of; engages in the third crusade, 91; mistaken sympathy for the character of; quarrels with Philip of France, and marries Berengaria of Navarre; conquers Cyprus; besieges Acre; which surrenders; Philip returns to France in anger, 92; Richard orders the massacre of the Turkish hostages, because the Holy Cross had not been delivered; marches towards Jerusalem; defeats Saladin in 1191; is forced to retreat after reaching Jaffa, 93; hears of disturbances in England occasioned by the intrigues of his brother John; Longchamp, his chancellor in England, deposed; Richard is falsely accused of the murder of the marquis of Montferrat; last Eastern campaign of, 94; approaches Jerusalem, but again retreats; attempts in vain to retake Jaffa, agrees to a truce, and sails from Acre on Oct 9, 1192; is captured on his return, and imprisoned by the emperor of Germany; is ransomed, 95; lands at Sandwich, March 12, 1194, 96; leaves England on May 9, lands at Harfleur, and pardons John, 98; drives Philip out of Normandy, ib.; besieges Chaluz, is wounded, and dies April 6, 1199, ib.

Richard II., coronation of, on July 16, 1377; appointment by parliament of a council of regency; ill-success of his foreign wars, and increase of taxation; insurrection against the poll-tax, headed by Wat Tyler, in 1381; the demands of the insurgents granted by, at Mile End, 147; Wat Tyler killed in Smithfield during a parley with the king, who then heads the insurgents himself, and at length dismisses them to their homes, 148; the grants revoked, ib.; proposes to abolish slavery, but parliament refuses, ib.; statute against the preachers of heresies; contest with the pope as to the bestowal of benefices; is supported in it by the parliament, 149; rise of the Lollards; unnecessary and oppressive interference of the government of, in social affairs; marries Anne of Bohemia, 151; intrigues of his uncles and ministers; war with France to support the Flemings in 1383, and truce in 1384; becomes suspicious of the duke of Lancaster; invades and ravages Scotland, 152; rise of Michael de la Pole; projected invasion by the French, and destruction of the French and Flemish fleets; extravagance of, and appointment of a commission of regency; impeachment and dismissal of De la Pole, earl of Suffolk; tampers with the judges, and obtains an opinion that the commission is illegal, 153; goes to London, the Lords assemble in arms, and defeat his adherents; for about a year the government in the hands of a parliamentary council; battle of Otterbourne fought in 1388; dismisses his guardians and assumes the government in 1389; his queen, Anne, dies; goes to Ireland in 1394 with a large army; marries Isabella of France, 154; parliament repeals the commission of regency, and the king becomes despotic; duke of Gloucester arrested and murdered; submission of the barons; quarrel of the duke of Hereford with the duke of Norfolk, 155; he banishes them both; seizes the possessions of the duke of Lancaster on his death in 1398; goes to Ireland with an army, but has little success, 156; learns that Henry of Lancaster has landed in England, and returns to Conway; is captured by the earl of Northumberland; carried to London, 157; is deposed, and resigns his royalty, crown, and heritage; is imprisoned in the Tower; death of, at Pontefract, in 1400; Henry IV. accused of being his murderer; doubts as to the death of, and statement of his escape from Pontefract, and death of, at Stirling, in 1419, 160

Richard III. created duke of Gloucester in 1461, 194; flies with Edward to the duke of Burgundy on the restoration of Henry VI., 197; lands with Edward at Ravenspur; successfully attacks Warwick at the battle of Barnet, 199; distinguishes himself at the battle of Tewkesbury, 198; different accounts of the personal appearance of, ib.; accused of the murder of prince Edward, ib.; suppresses the insurrection of Falconbridge, ib.; doubts as to his guilt of the murder of Henry VI., 199; quarrel with Clarence, 200; marries Anne, daughter of the earl of Warwick, and widow of prince Edward, ib.; popularity of, in the North, ib.; opposes the treaty of Picquiny, 201; no foundation for the statement of his causing Clarence's death, ib.; takes Berwick; swears fealty to Edward V.; arrests earl Rivers and the members of Edward's council, 202; is appointed Protector; accuses Hastings of treason, and causes him to be executed, 203; proclaims his life in danger; accuses Jane Shore of sorcery and conspiracy, 204; Shaw preaches in favor of his claim to the crown; and the duke of Buckingham harangues the citizens on the same subject; parliament assign him the crown on the ground of the illegitimacy of Edward V.; causes earl Rivers and others of Edward's council to be beheaded, 205; he is crowned at Westminster, July 6, 1483; death of the two princes in the Tower; evidence as to their murder considered, 206; ready submission of the people to, and its causes; mixed character of Richard; acts of clemency and restitution by; revolt of Buckingham, 207; which is suppressed, and Buckingham executed, in 1483, 208; merits of Richard as a legislator; salutary laws passed by the parliament of; causes the statutes to be first printed, and in English; encourages printing and the importation of books, 209; death of his son; negotiates with the duke of Brittany, for the delivery of Henry of Richmond; death of Anne, his queen; publicly disavows any intention of marrying Elizabeth, his brother Edward's daughter; mistaken estimate by, of Henry of Richmond, as an adversary; insufficient precautions against treason taken by, 210; Richmond lands at Milford Haven; inadequate preparations to resist; battle of Bosworth, Aug. 22, 1485; his death, 211

Richardson, Samuel, his novel of "Pamela" published 1740, 1741; its extraordinary popularity; his "Clarissa" appears 1748; and "Sir C. Grandison" in 1751, 936

Richborough, Roman colony at, 13; notice of the ruins of, ib.

Richelieu, duc de, advises that a battery be directed on the duke of Cumberland's column, at Fontenoy, 1745, which is forced to retreat, 789; drives the duke of Cumberland out of Hanover, 1757; convention of Closter Seven, 836

Richmond, duke of, secretary of state, 1766, 865; moves for Penn's examination, 877; for an address to the king on the state of the nation, 1778, 885; proposes a bill for extending the right of vote, and other parliamentary reforms, 891

Right of search, disputes between England and America on the, 1084

Rights, bill of, passed 1689, 633

Riot act passed 1715, 761

Riots, the Porteous, of Edinburgh, 1736, 780; the Wilkite, London, 1768, 835; and 1771, 865; the Gordon, 1780, 890; the Birmingham, 1791, 971; in London, 1795, 1010; throughout the country, 1800–1801, 1023; on the occasion of Burdett's committal to the Tower, 1810, 1078; in 1812, 1083; in 1816, 1116; the reform, in the city, 1816, 1122; at Queen Caroline's funeral procession, 1820, 1154; in 1826, 1162; the Bristol, 1831, 1194; raised by John Thom amongst the Canterbury fanatics, 1234–6; the Chartist, of 1839, 1238; the Frost insurrection at Newport, ib.; rioting in 1842, 1263; the Rebecca riots in Wales, 1266

Ripon. See Goderich.

Ripperda, duc de, sent on a secret mission to Vienna, to negotiate a treaty, 768; disgraced; sent to prison; reveals the secret articles of the treaty of Vienna, 768

Rivers, earl, patronage of printing by, 200; appointed of the council of Edward V., 202; arrested with the other members of the council by order of Gloucester, 203; beheaded, 205; poetic composition by, ib.

Rivoli, battle of, Jan. 14, 1797, 1017

Roads, British and Roman, different character of, 56

Robert succeeds William the Conqueror, as duke of Normandy, 65; state of Normandy under, 66; denounces his brother William as perjured, and prepares for war, 67; mortgages his dukedom in 1096 to William, ib.; becomes one of the leaders of the Crusade, ib.; returns to Europe, and marries, 70; invades England, but is reconciled to his brother Henry, to whom he cedes his claims to the crown of England, ib.; rebellion of Robert de Belême against, who is however pardoned and restored to his estates; disaffection of the Norman barons against, fostered by Henry, 71; is attacked by Henry, and taken prisoner, at the battle of Tenchebrai in 1105, 72; dies a prisoner in 1135, ib.

Robert, earl of Gloucester, becomes an adherent of Matilda against Stephen, 75; encourages the people of Bristol in their attacks on Stephen's partisans, ib.; maintains possession of Bristol and Leeds, ib.; lands in England with Matilda in 1130, 77; wins the battle of Lincoln and takes Stephen prisoner, ib.; captured at Winchester, and exchanged for Stephen, 78; character of, ib.; death of, in 1147, 78

Robertson, a smuggler, condemned to death for robbing an excise collector, but escapes, 787

Robespierre, Augustin, commissioned by the French convention to punish the Toulonese, 1000; death scene of, July, 1794, 1006

Robespierre, M. S., leader of the Jacobins; mover of the self-denying ordinance of the national assembly, 973; his hatred of Marat, 995; rouses the mob against the Girondins, ib.; maintains the system of terror, 1005; officiates at the festival of the Supreme Being, ib.; his speech in the hall of the Convention, ib.; his arrest; attempts to commit suicide; is guillotined, July 28, 1794, ib.; uncertainty as to what was his real character, ib.

Robin Hood, first mention of, 96; theories as to the reality of, ib.; the representative of resistance to aristocratic tyranny, ib.; detestation of oppression, and poetical excellence shown in the Robin Hood ballads, 97; theory of the adventures connected with, being founded on those of the defeated adherents of Simon de Montfort, 113

Robinson, F. J. See Goderich.

Rochambeau, comte de, commands the French armament sent to reinforce the Americans, 1780, 892; present at Cornwallis's surrender, 897, a commander in the French army sent against Austria, 1792, 977

Rochefort, failure of the British expedition against, 1757, 836

Rochejaquelein, Henri de la, a Vendean leader, 1001; obtains the chief command of their army, ib.; death of, 1793, ib.

Rochester, earl of, lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 684, 689; supports the motion for inviting Sophia of Hanover to England, 706

Rockingham, Charles Wentworth, marquis of, named first lord of the treasury, 1765, 851, 866; difficulty of his position arising from the disturbances in America, ib.; weakness of his administration, 854; again becomes first lord of the treasury, 1782; the king's aversion to; composition of his ministry, 900; notices the power of revenue officers at elections, 901; died, July 1, 1782, 905; his success as a cultivator, 918

Rodney, admiral sir George, destroys the gun-boats in Havre, 838; commands the fleet sent against Martinique, 845; his victory over the Spaniards off Cape St. Vincent, Jan. 16, 1780, 892; captures St. Eustatius, Feb., 1781, 895; defends his conduct against certain charges, ib.; arrives at the Barbadoes, Feb. 19, 1782; effects a junction with Hood's squadron, 900; chases de Grasse; gives him a signal defeat, April 12; first employs the manœuvre of "breaking the line"; question whether he was entitled to the merit of the idea, discussed; capture of the Ville de Paris, ib.; and other French vessels, 901

Roebuck, Dr., originator of modern improvements in manufacturing iron, and founder of the Carron iron works, 927; becomes embarrassed, ib.; refuses to allow Boulton a share in Watt's patent, 929; ultimately agrees to sell his share to Boulton, ib.

Rogers, Samuel, his "Jacqueline" published, 1814, and "Italy," 1822, 1138

Rohilla war, 1774, 948

Roland, appointed minister of the interior, 1792, 977; his wife; her enthusiastic republicanism, ib.; his dismissal, 978; resumes office, 980; execution of his wife, 1793, 1000

Rolica, battle of, Aug. 17, 1808, 1069

Roman dominion in Britain, civilizing effects of; roads in Britain, notice of, 12; policy in employing natives in their armies, 13; the army an instrument of civilization, ib.; fortresses in Britain, notice of, ib.; colonies in Britain, list of, ib.; ancient remains of, ib.; cities of, ib.; administration in Britain, 15; municipal establishments of, ib.; customs, existing remains of, 16; municipalities, rise of separate sovereignties in Britain, from, 19

Romans, progress of the conquests of, in Britain, 8; encouraged the settlement of foreigners in Britain, 14; municipal institutions established by the, 15; evidence of British iron manufacturing, tin and lead mining by the, 605

Rome, intercourse of Britain with, 6; taken by the Goths, 18; occupied and spoliated by the French, 1798, 1019; annexed to France, 1811, 1081

Romilly, sir Samuel, present at a dinner with Wilkes and Mirabeau: Wilkes defends the severity of the criminal law, 945; rejoices at the occurrence of the French revolution, 966; remarks of, on the September massacres, 1792, 981; describes the various parties in 1794, 1003; remarks on the bread riots, 1800, 1801, 1033; description of French despotism, 1802, 1041; praises Pitt's speech, 1803, 1044; solicitor-general, 1056; sums up the evidence for Melville's impeachment, 1806, 1057; engaged in the inquiry into the princess of Wales's conduct, ib.; eloquent speech on the abolition of the slave trade, 1061; remark of, on Mrs. Clarke's interference in military promotions, 1071; his eulogy on Mr. Perceval, 1083; his remarks on Brougham's speech against the regent, 1114; one of the leaders in bringing about an amelioration of the nation's social condition, 1117; his efforts in reforming the criminal laws lead to the abolition of capital punishment for several cases or kinds of thefts, 1118; returned M.P. for Westminster; the death of his wife a proximate cause of his suicide, Nov. 2, 1818, 1130

Rooke, sir George, present at the battle of La Hogue, 651; drives Tourville out of his shelter in the bay of La Hogue, destroying nearly all the French ships, ib.; defeated at the battle of St. Vincent, and loses a large number of merchant ships he was convoying, 657; commands the armament against Deumark, whose navy he drives to the walls of Copenhagen, 1699, 681; commands the fleet sent against Cadiz, 1702, 690; fails in taking it, but captures some Spanish galleons, ib.; commands the expeditionary fleet against Catalonia, 1704, 700; lands at Barcelona, but re-embarks, and effects a junction with sir C. Shovel; the two admirals, with the prince of Darmstadt, attack and capture the rock of Gibraltar, Aug. 2, ib.; fights a drawn battle with the French fleet off Malaga, ib.

Rosbach, battle of, Nov. 5, 1757, 836

Rose, George, secretary of the treasury; does not acquiesce in Pitt's bill for reform, 955; account of the national assembly's conduct by, 1791, 972; urges Pitt to include Fox and Grenville and their friends in his administration, 1046; his account of Pitt's last illness, 1052; introduces a bill for regulating savings' banks, 1816, 1120

Rosen supersedes Hamilton as commander of the forces besieging Londonderry, 628; his inhuman conduct, ib.; he fails in taking the place; raises the siege, Aug. 1, 1689, ib.

Ross, gen., himself and adm. Cockburn incite the slaves of America to rebellion, 1814, 1099; defeats the Americans and burns several buildings in Washington, ib.; mortally wounded in battle, Sept. 11, 1814, 1100

Roubiliac, L. F., his sculptures, 756

Royal Society incorporated by charter in 1662, 621

Rubens, his paintings; employed by Charles I., 757

Rullecourt, baron de. See Pierson, major.

Rupert, prince, appointed to the command of the horse in the royal army at Nottingham, 453; early career, 455 first encounter between his cavalry and the parliamentarian forces; insolence displayed by, ib.; conduct at the battle of Edgehill, 456; gains the battle at Brentford, 457; and that of Chalgrove Field, 459; takes Bristol, 460; relieves Lathom House, 465; possesses himself of York, ib.; is defeated at the battle of Marston Moor, ib.; retreats to Chester, ib.; is defeated at Naseby, 468; his impetuosity; surrenders Bristol, 469; is dismissed from his command by Charles I., ib.; meeting of, with Charles, at Newark, and final parting, 471; appears in St. George's channel with a formidable fleet, 493; admiral Blake interrupts the operations of, 494; takes refuge in Kinsale, ib.; compelled to leave the Irish coast, ib.; sails to the coast of Portugal, and is followed to the Tagus by Blake, 503; escapes to Spain, ib.; appointed to the command of the fleet against the Dutch in 1666, with Monk, 545; is suspected of not having aided Monk with sufficient promptitude in his battle with the Dutch fleet, ib.; assists in ravaging the Dutch coasts, ib.; is appointed to the command of the fleet on the resignation of the duke of York, in 1673, 557

Rural industry of the Anglo-Saxons, 28

Rush, Richard, the United States plenipotentiary in London; his description of queen Charlotte, 1130; his dispatch to Monroe on Canning's letter to himself, 1159; his discussions with Londonderry and Canning, ib.

Russell, admiral Edward, allows himself to be tampered with by James II., but is disgusted at that king's declaration, 651; commands the English fleet at the naval victory of La Hogue, ib.; removed from the command of the fleet, 1693, 655; restored again shortly after, 658; appointed to look after Tourville in 1694, 659; implicated by Fenwick with having held treasonous correspondence with James II., 667, created earl of Orford, 1697, ib.; impeached for his concern in the partition treaties, 685; struck off the privy council list on Anne's succession, 689

Russell, lord. See Bedford.

Russell, lord John, takes up the cause of parliamentary reform, 1819; obtains the disfranchisement of Grampound, 1131; proposes a partial repeal of the corporation and test acts, so as to admit dissenters to public offices; his measure adopted in a compromised form, 1175; paymaster of the forces, 1187; the government reform bill introduced by him; his speech explanatory of its purpose, 1831, 1188; moves the second reading of the bill, 1189; it having been thrown out, he again brings it forward in the new parliament, 1191; carries it in the House of Lords, ib.; re-introduces it into the commons, Dec. 12, 1831, 1196; his resolution on the surplus funds of the Irish church, 1835, 1216; its adoption by the Commons leads to the resignation of the Peel ministry, ib; his municipal corporation reform bill, 1217 et seq.; his measure for commuting tithes, 1220; brings forward bills for a general registration, and for regulating the marriage of dissenters, 1221; his bills for introducing poor law into Ireland, and amending the criminal law, 1836, 1223; eulogizes William IV., ib.; home secretary, 1224; government adopts his resolutions condemnatory of the conduct of the Canadian legislature, 1232; his bill for inquiring into and redressing the Canadian grievances, 1233; grants the release of Thom, 1235; condemned for his leniency toward Frost, 1238; proposes a fixed duty on the importation of corn, 1243; advocates the principle of a free trade in corn, 1244; his speech on the address, 1245; his letter to the city of London electors advocating a repeal of the corn laws, 1275; the premiership offered him by the queen, 1236; which he accepts; but is unable to form a government, ib.; first lord of the treasury, July, 1846, 1279; his financial statement; apprehends a large expenditure; his plans for meeting it, 1284

Russell, lord Wm., moves a resolution in the house of commons to take into consideration how to suppress popery and prevent a popish succession, 569; carries up the exclusion bill to the House of Lords, ib.; accused of a participation in the Rye House plot in 1683; is arrested and brought to trial on July 13, 574; noble behavior of his wife, 575; is convicted, and beheaded on July 21, ib.

Ryder, Richard, his bill for punishing stocking or lace frame destroyers passed, 1812, 1083; home secretary, 1809-1812, 1325

Rysbrack, J. M., his sculptures, 656

Ryswick, treaty of, concluded, Sept. 22, 1697, 668, 732

Ryland, his house burnt down by the Birmingham rioters, 1791, 971

Sacheverel, Dr., enraged at Defoe for his pamphlet on the dissenters, 691; preaches before the lord mayor, Nov. 5, 1709, 718; he is ordered to attend at the bar of the house of commons, and is impeached, 719; proceedings of parliament against; the articles of impeachment, 720; popular manifestations in favor of; the parliament sentences him to three years' suspension from preaching, and his sermons to be burnt, 721; this lenient sentence is celebrated as a triumph by the high church party, ib.; his ovation and progress through the country, 723; characteristic description of him, as given by the duchess of Marlborough, ib.; preaches before the Commons on the thanksgiving day for peace, July 7, 1713, 736

Safety Lamp. See Davy; Stephenson.

St. Alban's, first battle of, on May 22, 1455, 190; Warwick defeated by queen Margaret in the second battle of, in 1461, 192

St. Aubyn, sir John, remonstrates against the king's preferring Hanoverian to English interests, 797

St. Bartholomew's, massacre of, 357

St. Christopher's given to Great Britain, 1714, 735; taken by the French, 1782, 900; restored to Britain, 1783, 907

St. Domingo, French expedition to; resistance opposed by Toussaint, 1042

St. Eustatius, capture of, by Rodney, 1781; the king surrenders his interest in it to the army and navy, 895; retaken by the French, 899

St. Germain, count de, French secretary at war; his interview with Steuben, 882

St. Jean d'Acre, bombardment and capture of, 1840, 1243

St. John, viscount Bolingbroke; he is taken into Marlborough's confidence, 695; resigns his place in the ministry, 1707, 714; his connection with Swift and the party press, 726; envies Harley for being stabbed; insinuates that the blow was intended for himself; has a misunderstanding with Harley on this point of honor, 727; congratulates Marlborough on his successes, 1714, 728; secretly negotiates with France for peace, 729; his letter to Ormond, 733; double-dealing of, 734; created viscount Bolingbroke, 1712, but is dissatisfied at not having received an earldom; is dispatched on an embassy to the French court; he secures the interest of the duke of Savoy, 735; obtains private interviews with the chevalier St. George, ib.; Louis XIV. presents him with a ring 4000*l.* in value, ib.; urges the chevalier to turn Protestant; introduces his Schism bill, 736; quarrels with Oxford, and gains the mastery over him, obtaining the supremacy in the ministry, ib.; is disappointed at George I. being proclaimed king, 760; loses his secretary of stateship, ib.; escapes to France; becomes the Pretender's secretary of state; is impeached by Walpole, June 9, 761; meets the Pretender at Paris; is dismissed from his service, 767; obtains leave to return to England; obtains an interview with his sovereign, 1727, 779; actively opposes Walpole, 1734, 785; his character described by Walpole, 785; he quits England, 786

St. Julien, admiral, his contest with the British at Toulon, 1793, 998

St. Just, cruelty of, 1005; decreed and led to the guillotine, 1794, ib.

St. Lucia taken by the British, 1762, 845; again, 1778, 886; ceded to the French, 1783, 907

St. Pancras church, solecism and unadaptability of its design, 1142; designed by the Inwoods; its cost, 1143

St. Paul's Cathedral, burning of the steeple of, in 1561, 242; opening of Wren's new building, Dec. 2, 1697, 668; plan of, 669; proposals to repair the old edifice; it is burnt down, 1666, 752; Wren's first design for a new cathedral, 753; first stone laid, 1675; the last, 1710, ib.; criticism on, ib.

St. Petersburg founded by Peter the Great, 1703, 718

St. Philip, Byng neglects to try the relief of, 830; it surrenders to the French arms, June 27, 1756, ib.

Saint Ruth, commander-in-chief of James II.'s Irish army, 645; defeated by the English under Ginkell at Aghrim, July 12, 1691, ib.

St. Sebastian captured by the French, 1719, 772; taken by the British under general Graham, 1813, 1091

St. Vincent taken by the British, 1762; regained, 1783, 907

St. Vincent, battle of, Feb. 14, 1797, 845, 1014

St. Vincent, earl. See Jervis.

Saladin, extent of the power of, 90; takes Jerusalem, ib.; fails to relieve Acre, 92; neglecting to restore the Holy Cross, the hostages at Acre are massacred, 93; beheads the Christian captives in retaliation for Richard's massacre of the hostages, ib.; defeated by Richard in 1191, ib.; compels Richard to retreat to Ascalon, but interchanges courtesies with him, ib.; captures Jaffa, 95; agrees to a truce with Richard for three years in 1192, and dies in 1193, ib.

Salamanca, or Arapiles, battle of, July 22, 1812, 1086

Sale, sir Robert, general, leaves Cabul, 1250; harassed by the enemy, ib.; takes Jellalabad, 1251; his heroic defence of the place, ib. et seq.; marches to the relief of Cabul, ib.; mortally wounded at the battle of Ferozeshah, 1845, 1280

Salt, first bed of rock salt discovered in Cheshire in 1670, 608; heavy duties levied upon; abolished in 1823, ib.; consumption of, in 1839, ib.; duty on, revived 1732, 783; which has the effect of preventing the use of the refuse salt as manure, 918

Sancroft, William, archbishop; refuses to take the oath of allegiance to William III., 623; absent at the coronation of William III., 626; deprived of his archbishopric, 1691, 643

Sanctuary, enormous abuse of, temp. Henry VII., 222

Sanderson, sir Thomas, raises a war-cry against Spain, 1739, 791

San Domingo, trade of, 1789; slave revolt in, 1791, 990

Sandwich, lord, sent to watch over the duke of Cumberland, 810; secretary of state, 1763, 847; he resolves to prosecute Wilkes; sets spies on Wilkes's movements and steals his papers; complains of him in parliament, 848; secretary of state, 1763-1765, 865; aids in cross-examining Penn on the feeling of America towards England, 877; replies to Chatham's proposed amendment on the address, 1777, 883

Sandys moves for Walpole's dismissal from the king's councils, 1741, 794; his motion rejected, ib.

San Mateo besieged by count of Las Torres; relieved by Peterborough, 702

Saratoga, convention of, signed Oct. 17, 1777, 882

Sardinia taken by admiral sir J. Leake, 1708, 716

Sarsfield, general, commander of the garrison at Limerick; makes a sortie during the siege of 1690 upon the guns and stores of William's army destroying or rendering them useless, 640; inactive part taken by, at the battle of Aghrim, July, 1691, 644

Sarum, town and hill-fort in the time of the Roman dominion, 6

Saunders, admiral, supersedes West in his command, 1756, 830; conveys Wolfe and his army to Quebec, 839

Savannah taken by the British, 888

Savery, Thomas, steam-engine invented by, 610

Saville, sir George, M.P. for Yorkshire; presents the county petition for redress of grievances, 1780, 888; moves for a list of crown places, 889; his house gutted by the Gordon rioters, 891

Savings banks, establishment of, at Tottenham in 1798 and 1804; at Bath in 1808; at Ruthwell in 1810; and in London, 1816, 1120

Savoy annexed to France, 1792, 983; restored to Piedmont, 1109

Saxe, marshal, appointed to command the troops for the projected invasion of England, 1743; that expedition failing, he takes the command of an army in the Low Countries, 797; commands the French at Fontenoy, 1745, 798; persuades Louis XV. to retire from the battle, ib.; gains the victory over the allies at Lauffeld, July 2, 1747, 820

Saxe Gotha, princess of. See Frederick of Wales, 935, 968, 1015

Saxon shore, "Litus Saxonicum," opinions of Dr. Lappenberg, sir F. Palgrave, and Mr. Kemble as to its meaning a settlement of Saxons, 13

Saxon invasion of Britain, obscurity of the events of, 20; rapid succession of Saxon kings or chiefs; gradual extension of the dominions of; native seats of, ib.; heathendom, account of, 21; period, close of, 56; influence of, on the national character, ib.

Saxons, probable settlement of large numbers of, in England, before the Saxon invasion, 15, 16; principle of personal freedom probably derived from, 15; obscure interval between their supremacy in Britain, and that of the Romans, 18

Schellenberg, or Donawert, battle of the, July 2, 1704, 690

Schism bill, passed 1714, 736; Stanhope desires the repeal of the, 771

Schomberg, marshal, lands in Ireland with an army, Aug. 13, 1689, 628; unable to do anything from the neglected condition of the army, which suffered from want of clothes, medicine, and even necessaries, 635; reinforced, 637; leads the centre at the battle of the Boyne, 638; rallies the retreating Protestants and is slain, July 1, 1690, ib.

Schools. See Education.

Sciences, sketch of the state of the, temp. William and Anne, 621; knowledge of the, spread and increased by the Jesuits, 867; scientific labors and discoveries of Herschell, Davy, Dalton, Wollaston, and Jenner, 1141; scientific writers in 1842, 1260

Scinde, conquest and wise administration of, by sir C. J. Napier, 1843, 1266-8

Scindia wars with Holkar; then allies with him against the British, 1053; defeated at Assye by Wellington, 1055; and again Nov. 29, 1803; signs a treaty with the British, Dec. 30, ib.; joins the Mahratta confederacy against the British, 1169; agrees to aid the British against the Pindarees; his faithlessness, ib.

Scott, John. See Eldon.

Scott, sir Walter, prejudices of, against the union, 709; his verse romances; publication of "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," 1805; "Marmion," 1808; and the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," 1137; two critiques, 1138; his immense popularity, ib.; failure of his dramas, 1139; high success of his Waverley novels, 1140; his commercial failure an example of the danger of drawing upon future wealth, 1145; his honorable efforts to discharge his obligations, ib.; urges the Scotch to treat Charles X. respectfully, 1184; benefits conferred on his family by the copyright act, 1251

Sebastiani, general, his report on the practicability of France reconquering Egypt, 1042; the French ambassador at Constantinople; his offers to sultan Selim, 1063; joins Victor in the Peninsula, 1076

Secession. See American Secession.

Secular law, state of, temp. Henry II., 84

Sedgemoor, battle of, July 5, 1685, 582

Seditious meetings bill brought in by Pitt, 1010; opposition to it, ib.; passed 1795, ib.; another passed Mar. 29, 1817, 1123

Selden, John, joins in the protestation of the House of Commons, in 1621, against the king's interference with their liberty of speech, 418; assists in the debate on the Petition of Right, in 1628, 423; committed to the Tower after parliament had been dissolved, in 1629, 425

Selwyn, major, denounces British interference in continental affairs, 806

Senlac, original name of the spot where the battle of Hastings was fought, 55 et seq.

Septennial act, debates and remarks on the; passed 1716, 767; its repeal agitated, 785

Seringapatam, besieged and taken by the British, 1791, 989; and again in 1799, 1029

Seton, Mr., of Pitmedden, one of the commissioners for establishing the union, 1706; his arguments in favor of the scheme, 710

Settlement, early establishment of the law of, 385; ill effects of, and severities exercised under, ib.; its severity on the poor, 616, 913, 1119; slightly alleviated, 1861, ib.

Seven years' war, history of the, 830, 836, 843, 844, 911

Severus, wall of, 11; suppresses the revolt of the Brigantes and Mæatæ; death of, A.D. 211, ib.

Seville, peace of, Nov. 9, 1729, 733, 780

Seymour, sir Edward, his remarks on the want of good British generals, 653; his contempt of Scotland's poverty, 674; comptroller, 1702, 690

Seymour, lord Thomas, brother of Somerset, marries Catherine, widow of Henry VIII., 205; quarrels with his brother, ib.; addresses the princess Elizabeth after the death of his wife, ib.; is accused of treason, convicted, and executed, ib.; charge against, of defrauding the Mint in conjuction with sir J. Sharrington, 306; letters of, to the princesses Mary and Elizabeth, ib.

Shaftesbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper, earl of, becomes a member of the Cabal ministry, in 1667, 552; character of, by Butler and Dryden, ib.; complicity of, in Charles becoming a pensioner of France, ib.; shifting policy of, 553; is created earl of Shaftesbury, and made lord chancellor, 556; character of, 557; declares the Declaration of Indulgence illegal, ib.; is dismissed from his office of chancellor, and becomes the leader of the opposition, 558; letter attributed to, descriptive of the composition of the House of Commons, ib.; committed to the Tower for opinions expressed in the House of Lords, in 1677, 560; is suspected of having fomented the Popish Plot in 1678, 562; is named president of the council in 1679, and continues to lead the opposition, 565; is dismissed from the presidency, 568; presents the duke of York as a popish recusant to the grand jury at Westminster, ib.; supports the Exclusion Bill in the House of Lords, which is rejected, 570; is indicted for high treason in 1681, and the grand jury throw out the bill, 572; he flies to Holland, 573; death of, in 1683, ib.

Shah Alum. See Alum, Shah.

Shah Soojah, an expelled sovereign, and pensioner of the East India Company, 1248; the British undertake the Affghan war to re-enthrone him, ib.; restored to his sovereignty, 1249; complains of his position, ib.; assassinated, 1251

Shakspere, William, characteristics of his dramas, 394; nationality of, ib.; knowledge of, and taste for, disseminated by Steele, 739; Roubiliac's statue of, 756; impulse given to Shaksperean criticism, 1260

Shannon, fight between the, and the Chesapeake, June 1, 1813, 1098

Sharpe, Granville, aids in promoting the abolition of slavery, 1057

Sharp, William, his engravings, 1148

Shaw, sir James; his courage in quelling the riots of, 1816, 933

Sheffield, trades of, 610; obtains parliamentary representation, 1832, 1200; population in 1831 and 1861, ib.

Shelburne, earl of, dismissed his offices and treated with coldness by the king for voting against government on the general warrant question, 1764, 850; secretary of state, 1766-1768, 865 ; praises the king's nobleness of mind, 898 ; secretary of state, 1782, 900 ; his remarks on contractors, 902 ; circular issued by, on the volunteer question, 902 ; his Irish trade motion rejected, 903 ; commences overtures of peace with Franklin, 904 ; Fox obtains a share in the negotiations ; differences arise between the two ; Shelborne appointed first lord of the treasury, 1782, 905 ; resigns his premiership, Feb. 24, 1783, 907 ; advocates for free trade, ib.

Shelley, P. B. ; "Queen Mab" published, 1812 ; drowned, 1821 ; high character of his poetry, 1138
Shepherd, sir Samuel, attorney-general ; prosecutes Hone for libel, 1119
Sheridan, R. B., elected M.P. for Stafford, 894 ; resigns office, 1782, 905 ; defends the proceedings of the National Assembly ; Burke renounces him, 968 ; condemns, with others, the proceedings of the National Convention against Louis XVI., 984; opposes the "Traitorous Correspondence" bill, 992 ; patriotically supports the mutiny bills of 1797, 1016 ; his speech on the projected French invasion of England, 1798, 1019 ; moves an amendment to the address, 1799, 1026 ; advocates a hearty coöperation with Spain against France, 1068
Sheriffmuir, battle of, Nov. 13, 1715, 765
Shippen ; his remarks on the king's speech, 1717, 771 ; sent to the Tower in consequence, ib.
Shore, sir John. See Teignmouth, lord.
Shovel, sir Cloudesley, joins with sir G. Rooke and the prince of Darmstadt in the capture of Gibraltar, 1704, 700 ; commands the fleet carrying troops to Barcelona, 701 ; commands the English and Dutch fleet employed in the attack upon France, 1707 ; bombards Toulon ; wrecked on his return home, Oct. 22, 714 ; supposed to have been murdered by an old woman ; description of the wreck, ib.
Shrewsbury (or Hateley Field), battle of, July 21, 1403, when Hotspur fell, 162
Shrewsbury, duke of, negotiates with Anne as to her revenue, 633 ; William III.'s favorite minister ; resigns his secretary of stateship at the command of James II., to whom he deserts, 1690, 636 ; again offered the office of secretary of state, which he accepts along with a dukedom, 658 ; recommends Marlborough to William's favor, 659 ; correspondence between William and, 1696, 666 ; accused of having communicated with James II., 667 ; the queen appoints him lord high treasurer, 736, 760
Sidmouth, viscount. See Addington.
Sidney, Algernon, opposes the trial of the king, 489 ; is accused of participation in the Rye-House Plot, in 1683, 575 ; his defence, and conviction, ib. ; is beheaded on Dec. 7, ib.
Sidney, sir Philip, serves in the army sent to assist the Netherlands, 359 ; death of, at Zutphen, 359 ; funeral of, 368
Siéyés, abbé, proposed that the Tiers État be called the "National Assembly," 962 ; his plans for a constitution accepted by the people, 1009 ; a member of the French directory, 1030 ; appointed one of the three consuls, 1799, ib.
Sign paintings. See Painting.
Sikh war, 1845, 1846, 1280
Silbury Hill, the largest artificial mound in Europe, 6
Silchester, 6 ; account of the Roman city of, 13, 14
Silk ; Lombe's mill at Derby ; trade of ; state of manufacture, 607 ; prohibition of Indian silks, 613
Silures, unsubdued during the reign of Claudius, 8
Simnel, Lambert, imposture of, 212 ; represents himself as son of the duke of Clarence, 213 ; his pretensions supported by the duchess of Burgundy, ib. ; proclaimed king in Dublin, ib. ; lands in England with a force under Martin Swartz, is defeated at Stoke, on June 4, 1487, and taken prisoner, ib. ; appointed to a mean office in Henry's kitchen, ib.
Sindercomb, Miles, plot of, against Cromwell, 522 ; its failure, ib.
Sing, Cheyte. See Cheyte Sing.
Singapore ceded to the British, 1170
Singh, Ammer. See Ochterlony.
Sinking fund scheme, Pitt's, 955
Siward, earl of Northumbria (the Siward of Shakespere's Macbeth), notice of, 50
Skippon, major, his speech to the Londoners, 457 ; takes the place of Essex as commander, 465 ; commands the centre with Fairfax at battle of Naseby, 468 ; escorts the payment of money to the Scots for the surrender of Charles I., 474
Slave trade carried on by Bristol traders, 17th and 18th centuries, 603 ; by the merchants of Liverpool and Lyme, 609 ; Assiento contract for the supply of slaves renounced by England, 1750, 909 ; debate on, 1792 ; parliament resolves on its abolition, 967 ; slaves emancipated by France, 1792, 1042 ; she desires to re-establish the trade, ib. ; debates on, 1806 ; progress of the cause of abolition ; parliament resolves to abolish, 1057 ; slave trade abolition bill passed ; receives the royal assent, March 25, 1807, 1061 ; England and America agree to put down, 1101 ; abolished by Bonaparte ; persisted in by Portugal and Spain, 1111 ; debates on, 1823, 1824, 1161
Slavery, existence of, in England under the Romans, 15 ; imposed by statute as a punishment for vagrancy in 1547, 292 ; the statute repealed in 1549, 312
Slavery, colonial ; Canning's resolutions for ameliorating the condition of slaves with a view to their ultimate emancipation agreed to, 1161 ; slavery laws, ib. ; case of Mr. Smith the missionary, ib. ; résumé of parliamentary efforts towards abolishing, 1206 ; resolutions in Mr. Stanley's bill for the abolition of, in the British colonies, ib. ; progress of the bill through parliament, 1833, ib. ; the first day of emancipation in America, Aug. 1, 1834, ib. ; Dr. Channing's address on the abolition of, 1207 ; proposition of president Lincoln in 1862 to emancipate slaves, ib. ; effects of the abolition, ib. ; treaty with Brazil for abolition of, Oct. 18, 1825, 1225 ; emancipation of the slaves in Jamaica, 1237
Smirke, sir R., his architectural works, 935, 1143
Smith, John, a missionary, tried on a charge of inciting the Demerara negroes to revolt ; sentenced to death ; dies in consequence of imprisonment while in ill-health ; his case brought before the British parliament, 1161
Smith, sir Sidney, conducts the blowing up of the French fleet and arsenals on the evacuation of Toulon, Dec., 1793, 999; defends Acre, 1799, 10.9 ; commands the English fleet assisting the Turks, 1801, 1038 ; commands a squadron at Palermo, 1806, 1060
Smith, Sydney, desires the continuance of peace, 1823, 1158 ; "Mrs. Partington's" speech on the reform bill, 1831, 1193 ; urges Lord Grey to create peers to secure the passing of the reform bill,1196 ; describes the cruelty of not allowing counsel to prisoners, 1220 ; his idea of the queen's first duty, 1230
Smolensk, battle before, 1812 ; evacuated by the Russians, 1089
Smollett, Tobias, his vivid description of the attack upon Carthagena, 793 ; publication of his "Roderick Random," 1748 ; "Peregrine Pickle," 1751 ; and "Ferdinand, Count Fathom," 1753, 937 ; manners of 18th century illustrated from his works, 938, 939
Smuggling, extensive practice of, 786, 954
Soane, sir John, built the Bank of England, the Treasury front, and some other edifices, 1143
Soap, duties formerly laid upon, and consumption of, 608
Sobraon, battle of, Feb. 10, 1846, 1280
Social Evils, temp. William and Anne, 620
Societies, for reforming manners, first adopted by the Puritans, 670 ; Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge established about 1698, ib. ; Society for the Propagation of the Gospel established about 1698, ib. ; an older one was established in 1649, but it died out soon after the Restoration, ib. ; artists stimulated by the Society of Arts, 930 ; Society of Sign Painters, and exhibition of paintings by them, 931 ; meetings of the London Corresponding, the Constitutional Information, and the Friends of the People Societies, denouncing the French revolutionary doctrines, 983 ; Hampden Clubs, 1121 ; Society of Spencean Philanthropists, 1122 ; British Institution, 1146 ; Society of Painters in Water-colors formed 1805, 1147 ; Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge originated by lord Brougham, 1826, 1174 ; good and cheap literature issued by it, ib.
Socinians, statute against, 1689, 670
Soda, manufacture of, promoted by the abolition of the tax on salt, 608
Solmes, count, leads the Dutch guards at the battle of the Boyne, 638 ; his charge on the Irish, 638 ; commands the English at Steinkirk ; his conduct at the battle blamed, 653 ; slain, 1693, 654
Somers, lord, named solicitor-general, 1689, 622 ; made lord-keeper, 1693, 655 ; is the leader of his party, 658 ; promoted to the lord chancellorship, 1697 ; and made a peer, 668 ; sends William a blank commission for appointing commissioners, ib. ; removed from his lord chancellorship, 1700, 681 ; impeached in 1701 for his concern in the Partition treaties, 684 ; conferred with by William on the state of English politics, 686 ; loses his place in the privy council on the accession of queen Anne, 1702, 689 ; his weariness of factions, 693 ; has a great influence in bringing about the union of the two kingdoms, 708 ; his opinion on the Septennial Act ; died, 1716, 768
Somerset, Edward Seymour, duke of. See Hertford, earl of.
Somerset House, notice of the building erected by the duke of Somerset, 311
Somerset, Robert Carr, earl of, rapid ride of, from London to Edinburgh, to inform James of Elizabeth's death, 397 ; lavishness of James towards, 406 ; assumes the government of the kingdom after Cecil's death, 411 ; marriage of, to the divorced lady Essex, ib. ; trial of, with the countess, for the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, 413 ; deceitful conduct of the king towards, ib. ; they are convicted, and pardoned, 414
Somersetshire, a specimen of its dialect, 606 ; agricultural progress of ; King's Sedgmoor and the Quantock hills, 917 ; Exmoor, its black cocks and stags, ib. ; forty-one persons to every 100 acres, ib.
Sophia, princess, of Hanover ; her parentage, husband, and child ; description of ; becomes heir to the English crown, 682 ; death of, May 14, 1728, 736
Sophia, princess of Zell, wife of George I., from whom she was divorced, and confined in Aldhen Castle on account of a supposed connection with count Königsmark, 760 ; died November 13, 1726, 779
Soubise, prince de, encamps near Mucheln, 836 ; defeated at Rosbach by Frederick, 836
Soult, marshal, serves in Jourdan's army, 1006 ; defeated by Moore at Corunna, Jan. 1809, 1071 ; his testimony to Moore's merits, ib. ; takes possession of Oporto, March 29, 1072 ; obliges Wellington to retreat, 1809, 1076 ; defeated at the battle of Albuera, May, 1811, 1082 ; retreats to Seville, ib. ; and joins forces with Marmont, ib. ; commands the French army in Spain, 1813, 1089 ; fights the battles of the Pyrenees, ib. ; his engagement with Wellington and Hill, 1091 ; defeated by Wellington at Orthez, Feb. 27, 1814, 1092 ; retreats to Toulouse, where he again fights with Wellington, April 10, ib. ; his enthusiastic reception at the queen's coronation, 1234 ; succeeds to the ministry on Thiers' resignation, 1243
South Sea Company, its proposed scheme ; eagerness of the public to obtain shares, 1720, 773 ; various other contemporary schemes, ib. ; the company endeavors to obtain a monopoly by repressing other companies, which brings about its own downfall ; the rapid sinking of the stock, 774 ; and final bursting of the bubble ; Walpole appointed to restore the national credit, ib. ; the South Sea scheme compared with the Mississippi scheme of John Law, ib. ; bribery complaints from various trades, showing their deplorable state and the universal want of money, ib. ; Walpole's plan for sustaining the national credit ; committee of inquiry appointed ; flight of Knight, the cashier of the company ; the various fates of earl Sunderland, Aislabie, James Craggs, and the postmaster-general, 775 ; the directors estates are confiscated, and themselves declared incapable of holding any government office, ib.
Southey, Robert, character of the ancient Britons by, 5 ; he condemns the inquisitorial character of the property tax, 1113 ; his style described by Byron, 1137 ; his mental decay, 1254
Southwell, poor law reforms carried out at, prior to 1834, 1015
Sovereigns, Table of. See Tables.
Spafields meeting of reformers and riot, 1816, 1122
Spencean philanthropists, the, their origin and objects, 1122
Spencer, earl, first lord of the admiralty, 1794, 1007 ; secretary of state for home department, 1806, 1056
Spenser, Edmund, embodiment of early English legends by, 2 ; characteristics of his poetry, 394
Spenser, Hugh. See Edward II.
Spithead, the mutiny at, 1797, 1030
Sports and Games. See England.
Staël, madame de, her remarks on Pitt and Fox, 993 ; her description of the first days of the consulate, 1034
Stage. See Drama.
Stage coaches in the 18th century ; manners as connected with, 938
Stair, earl of, commands the British troops in Flanders, 1743, 797 ; cut off from his supplies ; advises George II. to make some perilous adventure ; his advice not being adopted, he resigns his commission, ib.
Stamp Act passed 1711 ; duties imposed by it ; effects produced by, 734 ; for taxing America, 1765, ib. ; opposition to it in America, 850 ; debates and remarks on the, ib. ; further opposition in America, 851 ; petition of London merchants against it, 852 ; Pitt urges its repeal, ib. ; examination of Dr. Franklin on the American temper respecting the, ib. ; repeal of the, 853
Standard, battle of the, 75
Stanhope, James, earl of, general, sent with reinforcements for the relief of Barcelona, 1706, 708 ; carries Port Mahon in conjunction with admiral Leake, 1708, 716 ; applies the question of Sacheverel's impeachment to the high church doctrines, 720 ; persuades Charles to take the field against Philip V. ; gains the battle of Almenara, July 20, 1710 ; and that near Saragossa, Aug. 20 ; enters Madrid, Sept. 21, 725 ; retreats to Brihuega ; is surprised by the French under Vendôme ; fights with him, and surrenders himself and army, Dec. 9, ib. ; becomes a secretary of state, 761 ; introduces a law excluding crown pensioners from parliament, 768 ; negotiates for a French alliance with the abbé Dubois, 768 ; discountenances violent measures against Russia, 769 ; reveals Gyllenburg's intrigues to the council ; disagrees with Townshend, ib. ; obtains the chief administration of affairs, ib. ; raised to the peerage, 1717, 770 ; desires to avert the war with Spain, 1718, 771 ; obtains the repeal of the occasional Conformity and Schism acts ; desires also that of the Test act ; and the mitigation of the penal laws against Roman Catholics, ib. ; his death caused by a rush of blood into his head during a fit of anger, 1721, 775
Stanhope, earl, his experiments on the construction of steam-ships, 1794, 1004
Stanhope, Charles, cleared of the charge of bribery brought against him, 775
Stanislaus Leczinsky, set up as king of Poland by Charles XII., 713 ; began to reign, 1704 ; Augustus restored in 1709, 760 ; his claim to the throne supported by France on the death of Augustus, 784
Stanley, E. G. S. See Derby, earl of.
Star-Chamber court instituted by Henry VII. in 1488, 222 ; extended jurisdiction given to, by Charles I., 426 ; severe sentence of, on Prynne, in 1633, for publishing the "Histrio-mastix," 427 ; and on Dr. Leighton for writing against Prelacy, 428 ; convicts and inflicts heavy punishments, in 1637, on Prynne, Burton, and Bastwick, for their anti-prelatical writings, 431 ; fines the city of London 70,000*l.* for an infringement of the conditions on which they held they held their lands in Ulster, 432 ; its prisoners released on the opening of the Long Parliament, in Nov. 1640, 437 ; abolished by statute, 442
Staremberg general, joins general Stanhope in a campaign against Philip of Spain, 1710, 725 ; engages Vendôme at Villa Viciosa, Dec. 10 ; retreats to Barcelona, ib.
Statute of Winchester, 1285, provisions of, 115
Statutes of Laborers, passed in 1349 and 1351, in order to fix their residence, and to establish a scale of wages, 140 ; injustice and inefficiency of, 141
Steamboats, Stanhope's experiments in the construction of, 1004 ; introduction of, on the Clyde, the Thames, and Loch Lomond, 1141 ; first employed by the navy in the Birmese was, 1171 ; improvements in, 1234 ; war steamers first employed in battle at the siege of St. Jean d'Acre, 1840. 1243
Steam-engine ; Savery's invention ; bill for encouraging the, 610 ; employed in the cotton manufacture, 926 ; thirty-three million spindles driven in 1856 by, ib. ; vast improvements in the, made by Watt, 929 ; Watt and Boulton's Soho works, ib. ; final establishment of the, and its amazing influence upon the affairs of the world, ib. ; the sword's antagonist, ib. ; applied to navigation purposes, 1004, 1140

Steam printing machine; its influence in promoting a spread of knowledge, 1142
Steele, Richard, Swift's intimacy with, 726; turned out of his employment for satirizing Harley, ib.; expelled the House of Commons for writing a pamphlet entitled the "Crisis," 1713; ably defended by Addison and Walpole, 736; starts the "Tatler," April 12, 1709, 737; character and aim of this work, ib.; his influence and objects as an essayist, 738; with Addison directs the attention of the people to Shakspere and Milton, 739; his creation of Sir A. Freeport, Captain Sentry, and Will Honeycomb, ib.; the Speciator's club, 740; his notice of three plays, 743; description of the prude and coquette by, 744; denounces luxurious dining and the fashion of duelling, 745; endeavors to repress gaming, 746; advocates for mercy towards the rebel lords, 746; opposed the Peerage bill, 1719, 773
Steinkirk, battle of, Aug. 3, 1692, 653; debate on the, 653
Stephen, earl of Boulogne, swears to the succession of Matilda, 73; departs for England on the death of Henry I., 74; crowned king of England on Dec. 26, 1135, ib.; remarkable outbreak of the people against the Forest Laws, and general confusion, ib.; preferred by the people to a female sovereign, 75; evil effects of the feudal system under, ib.; early reaction of the nobles in favor of Matilda, ib.; is attacked by David, king of Scotland, who supports the claim of Matilda, ib.; the Scots defeated by the bishop of Durham, with the aid of the Saxons, in the battle of the Standard, ib.; reduces some of the disaffected barons, ib.; quarrels with the clergy, and arrests the bishops of Salisbury and Lincoln, 77; his brother, the bishop of Winchester, denounces him at a synod, and he is threatened with excommunication, ib.; Matilda lands in England to support her claim, and is besieged in Arundel castle, ib.; is allowed to pass to Bristol to join the earl of Gloucester, ib.; evils of the destructive partisan war, ib.; battle of Lincoln, 78; taken prisoner and confined in Bristol castle, ib.; his wife expels Matilda from London with the aid of the inhabitants, ib.; is exchanged for the earl of Gloucester, who had been captured at Winchester, ib.; sympathy of the people for, ib.; besieges Matilda in Oxford; turmoil and desolation in the kingdom in 1142, 79; is attacked by Henry II., whom he accepts as his successor, ib.; dies Oct. 25, 1154, 80
Stephenson, George, his rise from the position of engine foreman; his patent safety lamp; constructs a locomotive, 1814, 1185; constructs the Darlington, and Stockton, and the Liverpool and Manchester railways, ib.; his "Rocket" engine; railway works by himself and son, Robert, ib.
Sterne, Lawrence, his "Tristram Shandy" published, 1759-1767, 937
Steuben, aide-de-camp to Frederick of Prussia, 881; volunteers into the American service, 882; condition of the American army according to, 883; he drills and re-organizes it, 884; one of the court appointed to try André; his concern for André, 893; renders valuable assistance at the siege of York Town, 1781, 897; his remarks on the siege, ib.
Stevenson, colonel, pursues the Scindia's army, 1054; unable to join Wellington in time to take part in the battle of Assye, ib.; takes Asseerghur and Burhampoor, 1055
Stewart, general, sent to take Rosetta; compelled to retreat, 1807, 1064
Stockdale and Hansard, case of. See Hansard.
Stockholm, treaty of, Mar. 24, 1724, 733; Mar. 3, 1813, 1094
Stockings, manufacture of, in the 16th, 17th, 18th and 19th centuries, 607
Stoke, battle of, in support of Lambert Simnel, on June 4, 1487, 213
Stonehenge, notice of, 6
Stopford, sir R. admiral; his naval successes against Mehemet Ali, 1243
Storm, great, of 1703; Eddystone lighthouse destroyed by it, 604, 693
Stormont, lord, maltreated by the Gordon rioters, 1780, 891; secretary of state, 1779-1782, 1325
Stothard, his paintings; vignettes, 1146
Strabo, statement of, relating to the peaceful communication of the Britons with the Romans, after Cæsars invasion, 5
Strafford, earl of (sir Thomas Wentworth), supports the Petition of Right in 1628, 423; becomes chief minister of Charles I. after the death of Buckingham, 427; is created a viscount, made Lord President of the North, and Lord Deputy of Ireland, ib.; explains to Laud the principle of thorough, on which England and Ireland were to be governed, 427; proposes to the king a monopoly of salt 429; strong expressions in favor of the levy of Ship Money, 430; prevented by illness from taking command of the English forces against the Scots at Newburn, 435; wishes to return to Ireland, but the king pledges himself for his safety, and he remains in London, 435; is impeached by the House of Commons in 1641, 437; is arrested and committed to the Tower; charges brought against; preparation of Westminster Hall for the trial of, 438; conduct of during the trial, 439; his defence, ib.; papers of the Privy Council furnished against, ib.; his eloquent speech on, during his defence, 440; a bill of attainder passed against, by both Houses, 441; firm demeanor of, at his execution, on May 12, 1641, 442
Strafford, lord, sir John Byng, accusation against respecting Oliver the spy, quite unfounded, 1124
Strange, sir Robert, an engraver; his diligence and skill, 1122
Strathallan, viscount. See Drummond, William.
Struensee, a favorite of the king of Denmark; a conspiracy organized against by the queen dowager; tried and beheaded, 868
Strutt, Jedediah, obtains a share in Arkwright's spinning machine, 944
Stuart family, note on the three last members of the, 825
Stuart, Charles Edward Louis Casimir (The Young Pretender); born 1720, 775; called from Rome to Paris to aid in an invasion of Great Britain, 1743; the expedition failing he retires to Gravelines, 797; Jacobitism of England and Scotland, 799; determines upon restoring the fortunes of his house; writes to his father of his intentions, 800; arrives at Eriska, July 23, 1745, 801; his voyage from Belleisle; takes shelter in MacDonald's house; his cold reception, ib.; persuades Clanranald and two other chiefs to join him; lands at Borodale, July 25; communicates with the clan chiefs; persuades Cameron of Lochiel to aid in his enterprise, ib.; the Glenfinnan gathering, Aug. 19; his standard is raised and the Stuart proclamation read, 802; his own resources and the crippled state of the government's army, ib.; marches southwards; reaches Perth, Sept. 4, having passed Cope marching northwards; enters Perth; his cause gains ground; he is joined by Drummond and Murray, 803; crosses the Forth; joined by lord Kilmarnock; reaches Corstorphine; preparations for defence at Edinburgh, ib.; obtains possession of the town, Sept. 17; enters Holyrood house; James VIII. proclaimed king; Cope embarks his troops at Aberdeen; lands at Dunbar, and marches towards Edinburgh, ib.; battle of Preston-Pans, Sept. 21, in which Cope receives a signal defeat, 804; sleeps at Pinkie house; and returns to Edinburgh, ib.; blockade of Edinburgh Castle; intends crossing the border, ib.; English opinions of the rebellion, ib.; enters Cumberland, Nov. 8; expects a great insurrectionary movement among the English; the inhabitants of Kilmarnock refuse to rise, 807; cause of the non-resistance to his advance; Carlisle is invested, Nov. 10, ib.; and taken three days after, ib.; the dubiousness of his cause; he continues his march into England, 808; Manchester recruits; the town is taken by a sergeant, a drum, and a woman; Johnstone's narrative thereof, ib.; the lukewarmness of Manchester, 809; marches on to Macclesfield; crosses the Mersey; reaches Derby, Dec. 5, ib.; they plunder the town of the collected taxes; the duke of Cumberland pursues him, and general Wade advances upon him from the north, ib.; the enthusiasm of his Highlanders; their eagerness to fight Cumberland; a retreat is resolved upon, ib.; Johnstone's fictitious narrative of the panic in London, 810; the Londoners prepare for defence, ib.; his cause receives no encouragement from the commercial or industrious public, ib.; he retreats from Derby, 811; loses confidence; his mistaken notions and weakness of character, ib.; he is pursued by Cumberland and Oglethorpe, 812; the retreat is delayed by bad roads; lord Murray takes up a position near Clifton to wait the attack of the pursuing army, ib.; has a skirmish with the foremost dragoons, whom he beats back; arrives at Carlisle; the prince leaves that city in the hands of a few followers; his callous indifference as to their fate, ib.; Carlisle is invested by the duke of Cumberland it capitulates, Dec. 30; the Highland army recrosses the border, Dec. 20; reaches Glasgow; makes heavy levies on the citizens; general Hawley's contempt for the Highlanders, 813; the battle of Falkirk, ib.; Hawley's retreat, 814; lord Lovat's double dealing; the prince's rage at hearing of the desertions in his army, ib.; arrival at Inverness, 815; encamps at Culloden Moor, ib.; his confidence of gaining a victory, ib.; he is met by Cumberland and receives a thorough defeat, May 16, 1746; his conduct in the battle, 816; the barbarities after the battle, ib.; his wanderings in the highlands; gains shelter in South Uist island; escapes to Skye; is befriended by Flora MacDonald, 818; escapes to France, Sept. 20, ib.; refuses to quit Paris when ordered; is imprisoned at Vincennes; turned loose in Savoy; visits England in 1750, 820; Canova's bust of him at Rome, takes the title of count of Albany; died, Jan. 31, 1788, 825
Stuart, James Francis Edward (the Pretender) makes an attempt to land in Scotland, but fails, and returns to Dunkirk, 1708, 715; his private interviews with Bolingbroke, 1712, 735; adheres firmly to the church of Rome in spite of the Jacobites urging him to turn Protestant, 736; issues a manifesto on the death of Queen Anne, asserting his right to the vacant throne, 761; the earl of Mar raises his standard at Braemar, Sept. 6, 1715; and proclaims him James VIII. of Scotland, and James III. of England, 762; lands at Peterhead, and joins the camp at Perth, Jan. 16, 1716; his spiritless appearance; assumes the royal state, 765; retreats before Argyle; takes flight to France, Feb.; his compassion for the villagers whose homes have been burnt down, 766; arrives at Paris; meets Bolingbroke there, 767; and dismisses him from his service, ib.; forms an alliance with Spain, 1718; arrives at Madrid, 771; failure of the expedition against Scotland, 772; birth of his son, the Young Pretender, 1720, 775; declaration issued, Sept. 22, 1722, proposing that George I. should yield up the British throne to James III., 776; it is burnt as a libel by order of parliament, ib.; hopelessness of his cause, 1727, 780; bill against his two sons, 1744, 799; note on the Stuart family; Canova's tomb of, and his sons, Charles Edward, and Henry, Cardinal York; died at Rome, 1765, 825
Stuart, James, his Athenian antiquarian inquiries, 935
Stuart, sir John, commander of the British army; defeats the French general Reynier at the battle of Maida, July 4, 1806, 1060
Stubbs, Philip, picture of the times afforded by his "Anatomie of Abuses," 378
Suetonius, account by, of the expedition of Caligula to invade Britain, 7
Suetonius Paulinus assumes the command of the Romans in Britain, A.D. 58, attacks and takes Mona (Anglesey), the chief seat of the Druids, 8; returns to repress the revolt of Boadicea, 9; obtains a conquest over her, ib.
Suffolk, agricultural condition of, 911; the laborers, farmers, and housewives of, 912; a seat of the husbandry implement trade, ib.
Suffolk, de la Poles, dukes of. See Richard II. and Henry VI.
Suffolk, Howard, lady, George II.'s mistress; Walpole devotes himself to queen Caroline, not lady Suffolk, 779
Suffolk, lord, a secretary of state, 1771-1779; his reply to Chatham's speech on the address, 883
Sugar duties, alterations of a free-trade tendency in the, proposed by lord John Russell, 1841, 1244; debates on them, ib.; rejection of the ministerial propositions, ib.; further debates on the, 1844, 1270
Sunday-schools. See Education.
Sujah Dowlah, vizier of Oude; Shah Alum's landed property sold to; hires an army from the English; invades the Rohilla country, 948; died, ib.
Sullivan, general, in the American army; taken prisoner at Brooklyn, 879; employed by Howe as his agent to the congress, 880
Sunderland, Charles Spencer, earl of Marlborough's son-in-law; dismissed his secretaryship of state, 1710, 723; secretary of state, 1717, 769; accused of being concerned in the South Sea scheme fraud; acquitted; resigns his post of first commissioner of the Treasury, 775; his death, 1722, ib.
Sunderland, Robert Spencer, earl of, one of William's confidential advisers, 658; his character and principles, ib.; entertains William at Althorp, 1695, 662; lord chamberlain; issues an order to prevent stage licentiousness, 670; attempts to obtain the lord chancellorship for Somers, 682; William's correspondence with, on the state of English affairs in 1701, 686
Surajah Dowlah succeeds his grandfather, April, 1756; in hopes of booty he storms and take Calcutta; tragedy of the Black Hole, June 20; sufferings of the prisoners, 834; marches from Moorshedabad; encamps near Fort William; signs a treaty of alliance with Clive; goes over to the French, ib.; defeated by Clive at Plassey, June 23, 1757, 835; seeks protection from the French at Patna; murder of, ib.
Surrey, earl of. See Henry VIII.
Sutton, Manners, re-elected speaker of the House of Commons, 1819, 1130; again in 1830, 1166; chosen for the sixth time, 1831, 1191; again, with Mr. Littleton as candidate, 1833, 1202; fails in being elected, 1835, 1215
Suwarroff, a Russian general; captures Ismail; cruelties perpetrated, 969; defeats the Poles, Oct. 10, 1794; captures Warsaw; barbarities inflicted on the inhabitants, 1007; commands the Russo-Austrian army, 1799; gains the battle of Trebbia, 1030; returns home, 1034
Sweyn, with a Danish fleet, ravages England in 980, 46; returns to avenge the massacre of the Danes, 47; lands again in 1012, and proclaims himself king of England, 48; London surrenders to, ib., death of, in 1014, ib.
Swift, Jonathan, points out to parliament men the dangers of quarrelling, 684; a satirical party writer; his character as a partisan, 726; his dealings with Harley and St. John, who make him their tool, ib.; his opinion on Marlborough's dismissal from office, 729; the operation of the stamp duty according to, 734; author of the pamphlet "The Public Spirit of the Whigs;" is presented with £100 by the earl of Oxford, 736; his contributions to the "Tatler," 740; meanness in asking for place, 741; his remarks upon the education of ladies, 743; his "Battle of the Books," 748; character of his writings, 750; marvellous power of preserving the circumstantiality of his tales, and the complete personification of his characters, 751; his "Tale of a Tub;" and "Gulliver's Travels," ib.; condemns Vanbrugh's architecture, 735; author of the Drapier's letters, inveighing against Wood's patent for a copper coinage, 1724, 777; a reward of £300 offered for the discovery of the author of the letters; withdrawal of the patent, ib.; died, 1745, 936; application of his story of the "Spider and the Bee," 1254
Swinfield, bishop of Hereford, account of the Household Roll of, for 1289 and 1290, 115; domestic life and duties of the bishop, 117; manor house of, and modes of living at, ib.; Christmas feast of, 118; prices of articles used by, ib.; state of domestics, laborers, and serfs under, ib.; journey of, to London; lodging and provision on the road, 119; arrival of, in London; notice of London markets and shops, 120; departs from London; visitations of, 121; gardens, orchard, and vineyard of, at Bosbury; building operations of, at Womenswould, in Kent, 122; furniture provided for; dresses provided by, and the prices, ib.

Tables, of treaties, 1326-1731, 730; of contemporary sovereigns from 1689-1714, 1308, 1309; of British writers, arranged chronologically, 1311-1316; chronological list of treaties from 1732-1748, 800; principal officers of state, 1741-1770, 1324, 1325; contemporary sovereigns, 1714-1788, 1309, 1310; treaty list, 1750-1784, 909; principal officers of state, 1768-1782, 1325; the growth of the national debt, 1320-1322; treaties from 1787 to 1802, 1040; population of Great Britain; of England in 1700, 1750, and 1801; of Scotland and Wales in 1801, all arranged by counties, 1316, 1317; contemporary sovereigns and rulers, 1789-1814, 1310; principal officers of state, 1783-1815, 1325; chronological table of treaties, 1802-1814, 1093-94; the national debt, 1793-1815, 1321, 1322; population of Great Britain in 1811, 1317;

table of deceased British writers of the 19th century, 1313-15; list of George IV.'s ministers, June, 1820, 1148; list of the Canning cabinet, 1827, 1167; and the Grey ministry, Dec. 1830, 1187; contemporary sovereigns and rulers, 1815-1837, 1310; population of the United Kingdom, 1821 and 1831, 1317; list of the Peel cabinet, 1215; and of the Melbourne ministry, 1837, 1224; table of treaties, 1815-1850, ib.; and of the national debt, 1815-1837, 1322; growth of the debt, ib.; chronological table of British writers of the 19th century, 1315; table of contemporary sovereigns, 1310; of the population, 1841-1851, 1318; occupations of the people, 1851, 1326; census of religious worships, 1319; and education, 1851, 1320; public income and expenditure, 1815-1850, ib.; commerce, 1318.

Tacitus, statement of, that Cæsar did not conquer Britain, 5; his account of the Britons affords an early indication of the national character, 8; the speeches attributed by, to Caractacus, Boadicea, and Galgacus, probably fictitious, but affording a true representation of the facts and feelings of the period, ib.

Talavera, battle of, July 28, 1809, 1076

Talbot, lord, defied by Joan of Arc, 173; taken prisoner at the battle of Patay, 174; the possessions of the duke of Burgundy ravaged by, 176; death of, at Castillon in 1458, ib.

Talfourd, T. N., his eloquent speech at Reading, 1133; principles of his copyright bill, ; the bill rejected, 1253.

Taliesin, notice by, of the massacre of the monks of Bangor, 28

Tallard sent as ambassador to the English court, 1698; his remarks upon the state of political parties, 673; negotiates with William III. the terms of the Parisian treaty, 677; ordered to leave the Rhine and advance into Suabia at the head of his army, 1704, 694; joins the Elector of Bavaria, Aug. 8, 697; they encamp near the Nebel, ib.; takes up his headquarters at the village of Blenheim, ib.; faults in the disposition of his troops, 698; he leads the main body of the French army; is opposed by Marlborough, defeated, and compelled to retreat to Sonderheim, where he surrenders himself, 698; carried to England by Marlborough, 699

Talleyrand, Bishop of Autun; considers church property to belong to the nation, 967; visits London as the agent of the French government; received with coldness and reserve; returns to Paris: again returns to England on an embassy, 974; which also had a bad reception, ib.; assists Bonaparte's intrigues for power, 1030; his correspondence with Grenville, 1232; Fox's negotiations with, for peace, 1806, 1058; end of the negotiations, ib.; suspected of having revealed the secret articles of Tilsit to the English, 1065; one of the plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Vienna, 1109; secretly negotiates with Castlereagh and Metternich, 1110; resigns his Presidentship of the Council, 1111; anxious to prevent capital punishment, ib.

Talmash commands some troops sent against Brest, 659; unable to land his men; mortally wounded in the attempt, 659

Tatler, objects, plan, and character of Steele's; started 1709, 737

Taylor, Rowland, behavior of, in prison, 327; martyrdom at Hadleigh in 1555, 328

Tea, formerly taxed; prices of, early part of 18th century, 613

Teignmouth sacked by the French under Tourville, July, 1690, 640; a subscription raised in behalf of the inhabitants of, ib.

Teignmouth, lord, as sir John Shore he succeeds carl Cornwallis as governor-general of India, 1028; succeeded by lord Mornington, 1798, ib.

Telford, Thomas, his career and great engineering works, 1144; opinion in 1830 of the capabilities of the locomotive engine, 1184

Templars (Knights), mission from the kingdom of Jerusalem to, in 1185, 90; dissolution of the order of the, in France, in 1307, 131; and suppression of, in England, in 1308, ib.; their house in London given to the students of the law, ib.

Temple, carl, moves an amendment in the address, 1755, 839; first lord of the admiralty, 1756, 832; desires to save Byng under cover of the king's name; dismissed his office, 833; lord privy seal, 835; fails in obtaining the garter, 840; supports Pitt's war policy, 1761, 843; resigns office, ib.; Wilkes' friend; disapproves of "The North Briton's" attack on the Scotch, 846; visits Wilkes in the Tower, 847; dismissed his lord-lieutenancy of Buckinghamshire; struck off the privy council list, ib.; his share in the negotiations for Pitt's return to power, 1765, 851; declines the king's offer of the first lord of the treasuryship, 854; suggested to be the author of "Junius," 858; lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 1782, 905; secretary of state, 1783; differs with Pitt; resigns, 952

Temple, sir William, concludes the Triple Alliance in 1668, 553; it is repudiated in 1671, and he retires to private life, 554; notice of the prince of Orange by, 560; suggests a scheme of government by a cabinet, 565

Tenchebrai, battle of, in 1105, 71

Tennyson, Alfred, his poetry, 1260

Tessé, marshal, joins Philip V.; with him invades Catalonia, 1706, 702; raises the siege of Barcelona, 702

Test Act, William proposes, without avail, the repeal of the, 1689, 624; repeal of, suggested, 1730, 621; again in 1772, 712; in 1790, 968; repealed, 1828, 1178

Tewkesbury, the Lancastrians totally defeated at the battle of, on May 4, 1471, 198

Teynham, Henry Francis, lord, his reform plans and suggestions, 1202

Thackeray, W. M., voluminousness and character of his novels, 1257

Thanet, complete insulation of, in the time of the Romans, 14

Theatre. See Drama.

Thelwall, John, arrested on a charge of high treason, 1002; trial of; defended by Erskine, and acquitted, 1003

Theodosius repels the invasion of the Picts and Scots into Britain, 13

Thiers, M., his account of the intended invasion of Britain by Napoleon, 7; his remarks on Wellington, 1079; president of the French council, 1241; his warlike tone toward England, 1241-5; the king refusing to acquiesce in his hostile speech to be delivered to the chambers, he resigns, 1245

Thistle, order of the, revived by queen Anne, 1703; statutes of the, broken by Georges I. and IV., 712

Thistlewood, Arthur, a Spencean fanatic, 1122; one of the leaders of the Spafields reformers, ib.; antecedents of, 1149; conspires to assassinate the cabinet ministers; his plot discovered, and himself tried and executed, 1820, ib.

Thom, J. N., his earlier career; imprisoned, 1235; released by lord John Russell, ib.; proclaims himself the Messiah at Boughton, ib.; rouses the people, ib.; his three days' march, 1236; the tragedy of Bosenden Wood, ib.; slain in the encounter, ib.

Thomson, James, his "Castle of Indolence" published, 1748; died same year, 936

Thomson, C. P., vice-president of the board of trade, and treasurer of the navy, 1830, 1187; his remarks on Peel's repeal of the house tax, 1834, 1213; president of the board of trade, 1213-24

Thornhill, sir J., his roof paintings, 757; opens an academy of painting, 1724, 930; suggests a plan for a Royal Academy, ib.

Thurlow, Edward, attorney-general, 870; lord chancellor, 1778-1792, 885; opposes Burke's Economical Reform bill, 901; and the contractors' and revenue officers' bills, 901; opposes Fox's Libel bill in the House of Lords, 976; becoming obnoxious to the ministry, he is compelled to give up the great seal, 1792, ib.

Ticonderoga, British attack on, 1758, repulsed, 837; surprised by the Americans, 1775, 874; recaptured by Burgoyne, 1777, 882

Tielmans, tried for conspiring against the Netherlands government; found guilty; banished, 1830, 1184

Tierney, George, opposes Pitt's income tax scheme, 1798, 1022; his conduct in the Caroline debate of 1820, 1150-1; master of the Mint, 1167

Tilsit, treaty of, July, 1807, 1065

Tin mines and manufactories, 605

Tintern Abbey, foundation of, 76

Tinville, Fouquier, furious zeal shown by, as public accuser, 994; executed, 1795, 1009

Tippoo Saib, son of Hyder Ali; concludes a peace with the British, 961; wars against the British under Cornwallis, 1790, 1791; defeated May 15, 1791; surrenders Seringapatam, Feb., 1792, and concludes a peace Mar. 19, 989; Bonaparte's letter to, 1799, 1028; he relies upon assistance from the French; general Harris enters his territory of Mysore, Mar. 5, 1799, 1029; Seringapatam stormed and Tippoo slain, May 4, ib.; division of his territory, ib.

Titus, allusion of, to the security afforded to the Britons by the sea, 3

Tocqueville, his remarks on the public opinion respecting the French revolution, 966; and the French national character, 999

Tolentino, treaty of, Feb. 19, 1797, 1040

Toleration Act, passed, 1683, 630; an imperfect boon, 630

Tone, Wolfe, captured, sentenced to death; commits suicide; died Nov. 19, 1798, 1025

Tomline, bishop. See Pretyman.

Tooke, Horne, arrested on a charge of high treason, 1002; trial of, 1003; defended by Erskine and acquitted, ib.

Torgau, battle of, 1760, 840

Torres Vedras, construction of, and events connected with Wellington's lines of, 1079

Torrington, carl of, sent out to fight the French, defeated off Beachy Head, June, 1690; his baseness and hesitating conduct, 639

Tostig, brother of Harold, succeeds Siward as earl of Northumbria, 52; oppression exercised by, occasions an insurrection, 54; is banished, ib.; invades England with a force of Norwegians; is defeated and slain at Stamford Bridge in 1066, 55

Toulon, besieged by the allies, 1707, 714; negotiations of the royalists of, with lord Hood, 998; the fleet and harbor surrendered to the British, ib.; political opinions of its inhabitants, ib.; besieged by the republicans, 999; the British compelled to evacuate the place, ib.; republican barbarities, ib.

Tournay, surrendered to the allies, 1709, 717; invested by the French, 1745, 830

Tourville, count de, a French admiral; defeats Torrington off Beachy Head, June 30, 1690, 638; anchors off Torbay, July 22, lands his troops at Teignmouth and devastates the village, 640; sails for France, 640; defeated by Russell off La Hogue, May 19, 1692, 651; his fleet, having assembled, is again dispersed on the 23d by admiral Rooke, 652; joins the Toulon fleet, 657; sails into the Mediterranean, 659

Townley, colonel in the Pretender's army; tried, 817; executed, 1746, ib.

Townley, Charles, his collection of sculpture; bought for the British Museum, 1805, 1146

Towns, manufacturing condition of, in 1636, 455

Townshend, lord Charles, his fear that France will render aid to the Pretender, 765; disagrees with Stanhope; dismissed from his office of secretary of state; offered the lord lieutenancy of Ireland, 769; which he reluctantly accepts, ib.; but is dismissed from it, April 3, 1717, ib.; appointed secretary of state in room of carl Stanhope, 1721, 775; accompanies George I. to Hanover, 1727, 779; quarrels with Walpole; resigns office, 780; and retires to the country, ib.

Townshend, brigadier-general, completes Wolfe's victory before Quebec, 1759, 839

Townshend, Charles, chancellor of the exchequer, 1766, 854, 865; his astonishment at Pitt's political schemes, 854; dies of fever, 1768, 855

Townshend, Thomas, draws attention to the tardiness of action by the navy authorities, 1778, 886; secretary of state, 1782, 904, 905

Towton, the battle of, on March 29, 1461, and victory of the Yorkists, 193; constitution of the contending armies of the Roses, ib.

Trafalgar, battle of, Oct. 21, 1805, 904

Traitorous correspondence bill passed, 1744; debate on it, 799; another introduced, 1793, and passed in a modified form, 992; debate on, ib.

Travancore, rajah of, attacked by Tippoo, 989; wars against Britain, 1807-1809, 1168

Travelling, means for, as shown in bishop Swinfield's journeys between Prestbury and London, 119, 121; another journey from Oxford to Canterbury in 1289, 120; travelling in London, 1289, 120; as shown in his visitations, in 1290, 121; mode of, as exhibited by a Scotch army in 1812, 128; dangers of, in the latter half of the fifteenth century, 187; dangerous condition of the London streets, temp. Henry VIII., 295; statute passed for repairing the highways, 1555, ib.; means for, on the Thames, temp. Henry VIII., ib.; insecurity of, illustrated in the murder of Arden of Feversham, in 1551, 296; custom of resorting to the seaside for pleasure a modern one, 604; horror of, in a hilly country, ib.; partly caused by the bad roads, temp. queen Anne, ib.; Bath and Tunbridge Wells the principal resorts of pleasure-seekers, ib.; in Yorkshire, temp. queen Anne, 609; bad state of the road between London and Kensington, 1736, 788; stage coaches, inns, and travelling accommodation about 1737, 938; dangers from highwaymen, drunken drivers, and rapid coaching, ib.; first mail coach started (1784) by Mr. Palmer, ib.

Treasonable Attempts bill passed 1795; its objects; debate on it, 1010

Treason, bills for regulating trials in cases of high, brought forward; not passed, 1692, 650; passed, 1695; Lord Ashley's speech on, 663

Treaties, chronological table of, and the wars connected with them, from 1326 to 1731, 730-733; from 1732 to 1748, 800; from 1750 to 1784, 909; from 1787 to June 25, 1802, 1040; from 1802 to 1814, 1093; from 1815 to 1850, 1224

Trevor, sir John, master of the rolls; parliamentary corruption commenced by, 635; receives a thousand-guinea bribe for assisting in passing the Orphans act; he is discovered, found guilty, and expelled the House of Commons, of which he was the speaker, 661

Tribute, not paid by Britain for some time after the invasion of Cæsar, 8

Trichinopoly defended by Mahomed Ali, 827; the siege raised by the British, ib.

Triennial bill introduced and passed by both Houses, 1693; but vetoed by the king; becomes law, 1694, 655-660

Trinobantes, the kings of the, 6

Triple Alliance, the, concluded, Jan. 4, 1717, 769

Trogoff, admiral, commands the Toulon fleet, 1798; an anti-revolutionist, 998

Troppau, Congress of, Oct. 20, 1820, 1225

Trotter, the navy paymaster; his evidence against Lord Melville, 1805, 1048

Trumbull, sir William; ambassador and secretary of state; first encourager of Pope's poetical talents, 742

Tuileries, attack on the, Aug., 1792, 979

Tullibardine, marquis, joins the Scotch insurrection of 1715, 762; and the earl Marischal's expedition, 1719, ib.; accompanies Charles Edward in his descent upon Scotland, 801; raises the Pretender's standard, Aug. 19, 1745, 802

Turin invested by the French, 1706; prince Eugene compels them to raise the siege, 703

Turner, bishop of Ely, enters into Jacobitical intrigues, 643; implicated by Preston in his plot, 644.

Turner, J. W. M.; character of his principal pictures, 1147; his early popularity, ib.; style of his earlier water-color paintings, ib.

Turnpikes, laws relating to, amended and consolidated, in consequence of the Rebecca riots, 1266

Tyrawley, lord, placed at the bar of the House of Commons to give evidence on the Spanish war, 725

Tyrconnel; his schemes in favor of James II., 626; puts Ireland into a state of defence, ib.; domineers over the Irish Protestants, and places the power of the kingdom in the hands of the Papists, 627; assumes the viceroyship of Ireland under James, 1691, 644

Ulfus, lands given by, to the chapter of York, with a horn as the symbol of the title, 37

Ulm capitulated to the allies, Sept. 12, 1704, 699; peace of, July 3, 1620, 731; besieged by Napoleon; to whom it is surrendered by Mack, Oct. 20, 1805, 1050

Union, Anne empowered by parliament to negotiate for a, with Scotland, 1702, 689; progress of the negotiations; debates and speeches; national feelings elicited, 707-712; the act of union received the royal assent, March 6, 1787, ib.

Union with Ireland proposed in George III.'s message to parliament, Jan. 22, 1799, 1023; progress of the bill for; debates, etc., 1026-1028; completed, 1800, ib.

United Irishmen, the, organized; they scheme a rebellion, 1023; narrative of the rebellion, 1023-1026

University of London opened, 1828, 1174; debate on the motion for granting a charter to the; the motion carried, 1835; various names applied to the institution,

Utrecht, commencement of negotiations at, 1711, 730; union of, Jan. 22, 1579, 731; terms of the peace announced to parliament, 734; treaty of, signed by Great Britain, France, Savoy, Portugal, Prussia, and the States-General, April 11, and by Spain July 13, 1713; conditions of the treaty, 733-735
Uxbridge, lord, leads the English cavalry at Quatre Bras, 1105; his legs shot off at Waterloo, 1107

VACCINATION discovered by E. Jenner; the great good that has resulted from its practice, 1141
Vagrancy, statute to repress, in 1504, 225; atrocious severity of one in 1536, 253; renewed statute in 1547 imposing slavery as a punishment, 292; repealed, 1549, 312; statute of Elizabeth against, 385; inefficiency of the laws against, ib.; hardships of the vagrancy laws on the poor, 1119
Valençay, treaty of, Dec. 8. 1813.
Valencia besieged by Philip, 702; stratagems employed by Peterborough in accomplishing its relief, ib.
Valenciennes, siege of, and capitulation to the allies, July 28, 1793, 906
Valmy, duc de, See Kellermann.
Valmy, battle of, Sept 20, 1792, 982
Vanbrugh, sir John, commences the Blenheim palace, 1705, 705; begins his practice as architect in his 36th year, with Castle Howard, 754; his chief works; their character condemned by the wits and essayists, but properly appreciated by Sir J. Reynolds, 755
Vandamme, general, repulsed by Abercromby in Holland, 1799, 1031; defeated and taken prisoner at the battle of the Katzbach, 1813, 1090
Vandeveldes, their sea paintings; they found a school of painting, 757
Vane, sir Henry, the younger, produces the papers of the Privy Council to prove the guilt of Strafford, 439; chief negotiator with Scotland for an alliance with the parliament, 463; his modifications of the treaty in favor of toleration, ib.; a leading Independent statesman, 472; wishes to keep the army intact, 476; one of the chief disputants with the king at the treaty of Newport, 486; bears testimony to the talent of Charles, ib.; retires into the country after the ejection of members by the army, till after the king's execution, 488; remarks of Mrs. Hutchinson on his conduct at this period, ib.; becomes an active member of the Council of State, 491; President of the Committee for the Navy, 503; conduct of, at the dissolution of the Long Parliament by Oliver Cromwell, 506; publishes a pamphlet describing a new form of government, 520; Cromwell in vain endeavors to persuade him not to act in opposition to his government; and he is imprisoned, ib.; is excepted from the Act of Indemnity in 1660, but his life recommended to be spared, 536; is tried for high treason in 1662, 540; able defence of, and the king's letter recommending him to be put out of the way on account of it, ib.; his execution, on June 14, 1662, ib.
Vansittart, Nicholas, as British envoy attempts to avert a war with Denmark, 1801, 1037; chancellor of the exchequer, 1812-1820, 1148; unwilling to believe that the annexation of Saxony to Prussia had been consented to by British ministers, 1109
Varangians, the Anglo-Saxons driven from England, become the emperor's guard at Constantinople, 57; valor displayed by, ib.
Vauxhall gardens, company and amusement of, 18th century, contrasted with those of Ranelagh, 939
Vellore, mutiny at, 1806, 1056
Vendôme, duke of, commands the French army in the Netherlands, 1707, 713; and the one sent against Brabant, 1708, 715; his incredulity regarding Marlborough's quick march of July 11, 1708; he is defeated by him the same day, 716; commands Philip V.'s army; defeats Stanhope and Staremberg, 725
Veneti, inhabitants of Brittany, character of, 3; intimate relations of, with England, ib.; resistance offered by, to Cæsar; assistance afforded to, by the Britons, ib.; conquest of, by Cæsar, ib.
Venice entered by the French, May 16, 1797, 1017; cession of, to Austria, 1797, 1018
Venloo carried by storm by the English, Sept. 18, 1702, 689
Venner, Thomas, futile attempt at insurrection of, in 1657, in favor of the Fifth monarchy, 522
Verdun capitulated to the Prussians, Sept. 2, 1792, 982
Vergennes, count de, French minister for foreign affairs; his interview with Franklin and Lee, 1776, 880; with Steuben, 1777, 882; and with Mr. Oswald, Shelburn's agent, 1782, 905; offended at the United States signing a peace without obtaining the consent of France, 907
Vergniaud, an eloquent Girondin, 973; obtains a draft of a decree for forming the national convention, 980; his war-cry against the Prussians, 1792, ib.; proposes to obtain the people's judgment on the sentence passed against Louis XVI.; votes the king's death, 987; as president of the convention declares the sentence of death against Louis, ib.; interferes in behalf of Mrs. Elliott, on her being arrested, 1793, 990; executed, Oct. 31, 1793, 1000
Vernon, Edward, vice-admiral; takes Porto Bello; despatched against the Spanish-American possessions; advises the capture of Carthagena, 793; renders no assistance to general Wentworth, ib.; boasts of having destroyed all the enemy's castles, 794.
Verona, congress of, Aug. 25, 1822, 1225
Verrio, employment of, to ornament Windsor Castle, 569; his ceiling paintings, 752, 757
Verulam, attacked and destroyed by Boadicea, A.D. 61, 9
Vespasian, conquests of in Britain, 8; triumph bestowed on, ib.
Victor, marshal, with Macdonald, defeated by Suwarroff at Trebbia, 1799, 1030; defeated by Melas, 1800, 1034; retreats from Talavera to Torrijos; joined by Sebastiani and king Joseph, 1809, 1076
Victor Amadeus II. of Savoy joins the confederacy against France; his war with the French, 643; his despair at the devastation of his country by the French; Schomberg sent to cheer him, 644; defeated at Marsiglia, 657; makes peace with France, 667; thus losing his chance to the English crown; marries Anne Marie of Orleans, a descendant of Charles I. of England, 683; Anne requests subsidies for him, 692; besieged in Turin by the French, 1706, 703; joins the allies in a campaign against France, 1707; ineffectually bombards Toulon, 714; signs the treaty of Utrecht; Sicily, and a claim to the Spanish succession, yielded to, 735; reigned as king of Sardinia, 1720-1730, 1310
Victoria, queen, daughter of the duke and duchess of Kent, born May 24, 1819, 1129; she succeeds to the throne on the death of her uncle, William IV., June 20, 1837; her demeanor and appearance at the audience with the Privy Council, 1224; meets her parliament; enthusiastically received; her speech; general feeling of loyalty towards, and attachment to; opens her new parliament, 1232; her speech, ib.; her coronation, 1234; opens parliament, 1839; speech, 1237; refuses to accedeto sir R. Peel's request to dismiss her ladies of the bedchamber, 1238; approbation of her conduct manifested by some, ib.; and aspersions thrown on her behavior by others, ib.; marries prince Albert1, 240; her life attempted by Oxford, ib.; speech on proroguing parliament, 1241; sp ech on opening parliament by commission, 1244; her answer to the amendment of the address, 1245; birth of her first child; and of the prince of Wales; speech on opening the parliamentary session, 1842, 1261; two attempts on her life by Francis and Bean; bill passed for better protecting her person; speech on proroguing parliament, 1263; speech, 1844, 1264; visited by Louis Philippe, 1271; speech, 1845, 1273; with prince Albert visits Germany, 1275; offers the premiership to lord J. Russell, 1276; her parting interview with sir R. Peel, ib.; speech, 1846, 1277; prorogues parliament; speech, 1283; speech, 1849, 1287
Vienna entered by the French, 1805, 1052; and May, 1809, 1074
Vienna, congress of, 1815, 1109
Vienna, treaty of, April 30, 1725, 733; the treaty of alliance of, March 16. 1731, ib., 780; peace of, November 18, 1738, 786, 800; peace of, October 14, 1809, 1074, 1094; treaty of, March 23, 1815; federative constitution signed at, June, 1815; convention entered into at, August, 1815, 1224
Vikings, notice of the, 25
Villadaria, marquis of, captain-general of Andalusia; opposes sir George Rooke and duke of Ormond, 1702, 690; sent to recapture Gibraltar, meets with no success, and is superseded by De Pontis, 700
Villars, marshal, concludes a negotiation with Cavallars, the leader of the Camisards, or revolted Protestants of the Cevennes, 1704, 691; unites his army with Marsin's, 1705, 704; opposes himself between the allies and France, 1709; follows them after the siege of Tournay; encamps at Malplaquet, 718; defeated by Marlborough at that place, ib.; constructs a series of fortified lines, which are forced by Marlborough, 1711, notwithstanding the superiority of his French army, 728; opposes the allied army, 1712; corresponds secretly with Ormond, 733; defeats prince Eugene at Denain, July 24, 734
Villeneuve, admiral of the Toulon fleet; chased by Nelson to the West Indies, and back to Europe, 1049; where he engages with sir R. Calder, July 22, 1805, 1050; ordered by Napoleon to enter the Mediterranean and proceed to Toulon; in executing which he is defeated by Nelson at Trafalgar, 1051
Villeroy succeeds Luxemburg as general of the French army, 661; takes Dixmuyde and Deynse, and attacks William before Namur, 661; retires, 662; attacks prince Eugene, but is repulsed, 1700, 686; appointed to command a detachment of the French army in the campaign of 1704, 694; ordered to follow Marlborough, who gives him the slip near the Moselle, 695; threatens Marlborough before Landau, 699; takes Huy and invests Liege, 1705, 704; retreats before Marlborough within the French lines, ib.; Marlborough follows and forces the lines; Villeroy then retreats beyond the Dyle, ib; his position, May 23, 1706, 706; defeated by Marlborough at the battle of Ramillies, ib.; retreats to Louvain, ib.
Vimiero, battle of, August 21, 1808, 1069
Vinegar Hill, battle of, near Enniscorthy, 1798, 1024
Virginia, first attempts to found a colony in, 371; founding of the colony of, under James Smith, in 1606, 406; sufferings of the first colonists, and subsequent progress of the colony, 407
Vittoria, battle of, June 21, 1813, 1088
Volunteers; earl of Shelburne's circular proposing the raising of, 1782, 902; spontaneously raised by the Irish, 1779, 903; strength of, in Ireland, 1782, ib.; formation of corps of, encouraged by government, 1794, 1004; imperfectly aided by the government, 1798, 1022; rapid enrolment of, in July and August, 1808, 1045; total number in November, ib.; Pitt and the volunteers at Walmer, ib.; general organization of, throughout England and Scotland; reviewed by the king at Hyde Park and elsewhere, ib.; debate on the volunteer system; it is supported by Pitt, ib.; feebly aided by the ministers, 1046; abstract of a list of yeomanry and volunteer corps, December, 1803, 1319
Vortigern, legend of, 20
Vyvyan, sir Richard, moves for the rejection of the Reform bill, 1831, 1189; speech of, on the Municipal Reform bill, 1835, 1218
WADE, general, carries off Gyllenberg's papers, 769; quells a riot at Glasgow, 1725, 778; evidence of, on the Porteous riots, 1736, 788; sends troops under Oglethorpe to pursue the rebels of 1745, 812; ordered to return to Newcastle, 813
Wagers, act to prevent, passed 1708, 717
Wages of laborers in 1288, 119; of artificers, 122; statutes for the regulation of the scale of, for laborers, 140; statutes for the regulation of, and for the hours of labor, in 1495, 182; truck forbidden, 183; new statute for the regulation of, in 1495, 225; found ineffectual, and repealed in 1496, ib.; new statute for the regulation of, in 1515, 294; the legislature declare in 1563 that the statutes cannot be enforced on account of the high price of provisions, 387; income and wages of various classes in the time of queen Anne, 617; of the out-door agricultural laborer, ib.; combinations of laborers to demand a rise in, in Edward III.'s reign, 821; the relation between master and man in the question of, 822
Wagram, battle of, July 5, 1809, 1074
Wakefield, battle of, defeat of the Yorkists, and death of the duke of York, December 31. 1460, 192
Walcheren, narrative of the expedition against, 1809, 1074-1076
Waldeck, prince of, conduct of, at the battle of Fontenoy, 1745, 798
Waldegrave, lord, character of George III. as portrayed by, 840
Waldegrave, lady, marries the duke of Gloucester, 868; letter of, to her father, sir E. Walpole, on her position as duchess of Gloucester, ib.
Wale, a sign painter; his portrait of Shakspere, 930
Wales, state of, as described by Giraldus in 1188, 82, 83; Llewellyn, prince of, is summoned to do homage to Edward I., and refuses, 114; is attacked by Edward and forced to submit, in 1277, ib.; his attendants in London dislike their food and their treatment there, 115; renewed revolt of, in 1282, 116; is slain and his brother executed, ib.; prince Edward, born at Caernarvon, April 25, 1284; created prince of Wales, ib.; statute passed for the settlement of, by Edward I., ib.; insurrection in 1287 suppressed, 122; another insurrection in 1295 subdued, 124; popularity of Richard II. in, 159; revolt of, against Henry IV., under Owen Glendower, 160; severe measures taken for the repression of, ib.; Henry IV., and his army repulsed, in 1402, ib.; successful resistance of, during the life of Glendower, 163
Walker, Andrew, weeds the Devil's Acre; founder of the London ragged schools, 1230
Walker, George, a Presbyterian minister, one of the principal defenders of Londonderry, 627; appointed, with Baker, to succeed Lundy as governor of Londonderry, during the siege, 627; slain at the battle of the Boyne, July 1, 1690, 638
Walker, James, Vauxhall bridge designed and executed by, 1145
Wallace, William, heads a revolt in Scotland in 1297, against Edward I., 125; defeats the English at Stirling, ib.; created guardian of the kingdom, ib.; is defeated at Falkirk, 126; continued warfare of, ib.; is betrayed, and taken prisoner, ib.; is taken to London, where he arrives August 22, 1305, 127; is executed, ib.
Waller, Edmund, the royalist plot of, discovered, 459; saves his life by bribing the House of Commons, ib.
Waller, sir William, successful against the royalists, 459; defeated at Lansdown, 460; blockades Oxford, in company with Essex, 465; jealousies between him and Essex, ib.; pursues the king into Worcestershire, and is defeated by him, ib.; called out for the defence of London, 466
Walloon weavers, introduction of, into England by the protector Somerset, 315; driven from England by Mary, ib.
Walmoden, count, commands the English army in Hanover, 1794, 1007; defeated by Pichegru, ib.
Walpole, Robert, succeeds St. John as secretary at war, 1708, 715; his argument in applying the principle of resistance to the general doctrine of the subjects' obedience, 720; he is elected a member of queen Anne's third parliament, which met November 25, 1710, 724; defends Steele in the House of Commons, 736; his contempt for literature, 741; condemns Vanbrugh's architecture, 755; impeaches Bolingbroke of high treason, June 9, 1715, 761; moves the adjournment of the House to prevent the appeal for mercy toward the rebel lords, 766; character of his ministerial government, 768; resigns the chancellorship of exchequer, 769; opposes an address of thanks, 1718, 771; opposed the Peerage bill, 1719. 772; his prudence during the South Sea scheme. 774; called upon to retrieve the national credit, ib.; again becomes chancellor of the exchequer, 1721, 775; cancels Wood's patent for a copper coinage, 777; his interview with George II., announcing George I.'s death, 779; prepares the royal speech for sir S. Compton, the minister elect; is confirmed in power by bribing the king, 779; quarrels with Townshend; becomes supreme in the administration. 780; successfully repulses the attempts of the Dissenter, to obtain a repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts, 781; revives the salt duty, 1732, 783; his warehousing system for the prevention of smuggling; his excise scheme, ib.; narrowly escapes being mobbed, 784; debate upon the excise scheme; it fails in passing, ib.; maintains the policy of neutrality in the wars of 1734, ib.; advantages obtained thereby, ib.; his character as given by Wyndham, 785; his character of Bolingbroke, ib.; attends the queen during her last illness, 789; fears the loss of power in consequence of her death, ib.; not a patron of letters, 790; proposes to enlarge the lord chamberlain's powers in reference to plays, ib.; brings forward his bill for licensing plays, ib.; driven into a war with Spain; persists in keeping office, ib.; reproves sir W. Wyndham, 792; his struggle to retain power; he is deserted by the duke of Argyle, whom he dismisses from all his employments, ib.; regarded with jealousy by the duke of Newcastle, ib.; endeavors to prevent the war with Spain, 794; Mr. Sandys persuades the king to remove him from office; Walpole's defence, 795; the motion is negatived; his unpopularity increases; he resigns, February 1, 1742; created earl of Oxford, ib.; a parliamentary inquiry is made into his administration; he passes through the ordeal, ib.; he is carried about in effigy by the mob, 796; anecdote of, ib.; died March, 1745, 798

Walsingham, sir Francis. See Elizabeth.
Waltheof, earl, submits to William the Conqueror, 57; joins Canute and Edgar Atheling on their invasion in 1070, 58; refuses to take an active part in the conspiracy against William in 1073, 61; is betrayed by his wife (daughter of William the Conqueror), and executed, ib.
Walton, captain, his conduct in the battle with the Spanish fleet, 1718, and model despatch to his admiral, 771
Wansdyke, notice of, 6
Wantage, description of Alfred's home at, 27
Warbeck Perkin, lands in Ireland in 1492, and announces himself as second son of Edward IV., 215; claims and receives the protection of the duchess of Burgundy, ib.; doubtful ex parte accounts of, and pretended confession, ib.; letter of, to Isabella of Spain, ib.; attempts a landing at Deal, and is repulsed, 217; is expelled from Burgundy, and finds refuge with James IV. of Scotland, ib.; marries Catherine Gordon, ib.; his position in Scotland in 1496 described by one of the spies of Henry VII., ib.; difficulties of supposing him an impostor, 218; invades England, supported by James IV., but is compelled to retreat, ib.; unpopularity of, occasioned by the foreign assistance, ib.; leaves Scotland, and lands in Cornwall, 219; attacks Exeter, but is repulsed, ib.; is deserted by his forces, and flies to sanctuary at Beaulieu Abbey, where he is taken prisoner, ib.; attempts to escape, is retaken, and imprisoned in the Tower, ib.; exhibited to the public, and reads his confession, ib.; is executed at Tyburn, November 23, 1499, ib.
War-chariots, Southey's notice of, 6; Cæsar's description of, ib.
Ward, James an animal painter, 1147
Ward, M.P. for St. Alban's; his intended Irish church motions, 1212
Wardle, colonel, causes an inquiry to be made into the duke of York's conduct as commander in-chief, 1809, 1071; popularity; subsequent contempt for, 1072
Warner, Rev. Dr., manners of; as evidence of those of the clergy of his day, 943
Warren, sir J. B., commands the squadron sent against Quiberon, 1795, 1009; engages the French off Ireland, Oct. 1798, 1025
Warsaw, alliance of, Mar. 31, 1683, 732; treaty of, Feb. 24, 1768, 909; defended by Kosciusko, 1794, 1007; entered by the French, 1807, 1062
Warwick, Neville, earl of, supports the claims of Richard duke of York, 190; important assistance of, at the first battle of St. Alban's, ib.; returns from Calais to attend an attempted reconciliation of the York and Lancastrian factions, 191; attempt on his life and his escape to Calais, ib.; is declared a traitor by the parliament at Coventry, ib.; lands in Kent, enters London, wins the battle of Northampton, and takes Henry prisoner, in 1460, ib.; defeated by queen Margaret at the second battle of St. Alban's in 1461, 192; joins Edward, duke of York, and enters London, ib.; marches with Edward to the North, and wins the battle of Towton, 193; the representative of popular opinion, 194; becomes estranged from Edward, 196; wealth and power of, 196; joins with Clarence in an attempt to dethrone Edward, who is taken prisoner, but escapes, ib.; is defeated by Edward at Stamford, ib.; is reconciled to queen Margaret, 197; invades England, and restores Henry without a battle, ib.; is slain at the battle of Barnet, April 14, 1471, 198
Warwick, Dudley, earl of, nearly made prisoner at the battle of Pinkie, 302; is sent to subdue the Norfolk rebels under Ket, 308; defeats them at Dussindale, 309; recommends clemency, ib.; acquires political power, ib.; heads the confederacy of nobles against Somerset, 310; obtains possession of the Tower, ib.; is joined by lord Russell and the army, 311; is created duke of Northumberland, 314; becomes the actual governor of the king, 315; marries his son to the lady Jane Grey, ib.; causes lady Jane to be proclaimed queen, June 10, 1553, 317; leaves London to oppose the advance of Mary, 318; is arrested tried for treason, convicted, and executed, ib.; apostatizes before his death, ib.
Washington, George, born 1732, 728; his early career; becomes adjutant general; unsuccessfully defends the British posts on the Ohio; serves under general Braddock, 1755, ib.; his opinion of American affairs 1774, 871; his view of civil war, 874; appointed commander-in-chief of the United States army, 1775, 875; his character; refuses all pay but the discharge of expenses, ib.; composition of his army; arrives at Boston, July 3, ib.; blockades the town, 876; his impatience; makes preparations for an attack, 877; the British evacuate the place, Mar. 17, 1776, 877; refuses Howe's letter to him, 1776, 879; retreats before Cornwallis; crosses the Delaware and destroys the boats, thus hindering his pursuer's passage; surprises the Hessians at Trenton; retreats to Princeton, 880; there defeats a body of British troops; his high military qualities displayed in the campaign, ib.; perplexed at Howe's conduct; marches to oppose him at Philadelphia, 882; goes into winter quarters at Valley Forge; sufferings of his army from want of food and clothing, 883; augurs new difficulties and greater struggles, 888; remonstrates against Cornwallis's proceedings, 892; receives a commission of lieutenant-general in the French service, 1780, ib.; Clinton demands André's release from, 893; confirms the sentence passed upon André by a court-martial; defence of his conduct for so doing, ib.; his difficulties in sustaining his army, 895; anxiety for the arrival of De Grasse's fleet; on hearing that it had gone to the Chesapeake he changes his plan of operations and also marches thither; his able management of the march, 897; siege, ib.; and capitulation of Cornwallis, ib.; bequeaths his swords to his nephews, bids farewell to his army, 909; and retires into private life; resigns his commission, Dec. 20, 1782, ib.; retires from the presidency of the United States, Dec. 1796; alarmed at the party spirit rising in the States, 1012; president of the United States, 1789-1797, 1310
Washington, British attack on, Aug, 1814, 1099
Wat Tyler. See Richard II.
Watchmen. See Police, 616
Waterford capitulates to William III., July 21, 1690, 639
Waterloo, battle of, June 18, 1815, 1105
Watson, admiral, co-operates with Clive in destroying the pirates of Gheriah, and in the re-capture of Calcutta, 1757, 834; refuses to sign Clive's false treaty, ib.
Watson, bishop, opposes a free trade between England and France, fearing the latter's pre-eminence in a commercial contest, 928
Watson, sen., a Spa-fields meeting leader, 1122; addresses the meeting, ib.; tried for high treason; found not guilty, ib.
Watson, jun., a Spa-fields meeting leader, 1122; impels the mob to riot; his prominent part in the riot; taken, ib.; escapes, ib.
Watt, James, his career as philosophical instrument maker at Glasgow, 928; turns his attention to the improvement of the steam engine, ib.; gradual maturing of his thoughts and final success, May, 1768, 929; connects himself first with Dr. Roebuck, ib.; but subsequently with Boulton, ib.; the two become the proprietors of the Soho works, ib.; vast influence of his invention on the affairs of the world, ib.
Weaver, description of the labors of a, 602; double occupation of farmer and, in Lancashire and Ireland, 924
Webb, general, present at Blenheim, 1704, 698; conducts a convoy to Lille; attacked by a large French force; succeeds in defeating them and arrives before Lille with his army; his success the main cause of the surrender of Lille; receives the thanks of parliament; meanness of Marlborough towards, causes him to leave the army, 1708, 717
Webb, John, inspector of hospitals; his report on the unhealthiness of Zealand, 1075
Wedderburn. See Loughborough, lord.
Wedgwood, Josiah, improves the manufacture of earthen and china-ware, 927
Wellesley, marquess of, his speech on the French revolution, 1001; despairs of British success in Holland, 1794, 1006; fears a French invasion of Ireland, 1796, 1003; succeeds lord Teignmouth as governor-general of India, 1798, 1029; negotiates with Tippoo Sahib, ib.; attacked in parliament, 1053-1056; adopts the subsidiary system policy, 1033; resigns the government of India, July, 1805, 1056; secretary for foreign affairs, 1809, 1077; resigns the seals, Feb. 19, 1812, 1082; appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland, 1156; lord steward, 1325
Wellington, duke of, Arthur Wellesley; condemns Massena's conduct in his retreat of 1811 as barbarous, 696; colonel; assists his brother lord Mornington in governing India, 1029; appointed to the command of the Nizam of the Deccan's army, 1799; his wonder at the size of the army, ib.; congratulates his brother on the success of the British arms in India, ib.; returns to England, Sept. 1805, 1053; reinstates the Peishwa in his capital of Poonah, ib.; appointed to the command of 17,000 men, June 26, 1808; his letter to Scindia, ib.; crosses the Godavery, 1054; how he formed his plan of the battle of Assye, 1055; the battle, Sept. 23, ib.; battle of Argaum, Nov. 29; obtains possession of Fort Gawilghur Dec. 15, thus ending the Mahratta war, ib.; receives the order of the Bath; returns to England; account of the famine in India by, ib.; principal secretary in Ireland, 1807, 1062; his advice on the Buenos Ayres affairs, 1064; commands the reserve forces in the Copenhagen expedition, 1807, 1065; sent with troops to Portugal; sails from Cork, July 12, 1808, 1068; placed under Dalrymple and Burrard, ib.; lands at Figuiera, Aug. 1; defeats the French at Rolica, Aug. 17, 1069; gains the victory at Vimiéro, Aug. 21, ib.; his future actions clogged by Burrard's command, ib.; convention of Cintra; recalled home; examined before a court, ib.; opinion of, on Mrs. Clarke's briberies, 1072; ordered to replace sir John Cradock in Portugal; lands at Lisbon, April 22, 1809, ib.; passage of the Douro; compels Soult to retreat from Oporto, ib.; enters Spain; makes a junction with Cuesta, 1076; gains the battle of Talavera, July 28, ib.; created viscount Wellington, 1077; arranges for the defence of Portugal, ib.; worried by the ministers, ib.; sagacity and penetrating judgment of, 1079; construction of the lines of Torres Vedras, ib.; they stop Massena's course, ib.; unable to relieve Ciudad Rodrigo, ib.; battle of Busaco, Sept. 27, 1810, ib.; evacuates Coimbra and retires within his lines, ib.; his arguments with the ministry for continuing the war in the Peninsula, 1081; pursues Massena on his evacuating Portugal, and defeats him at Fuentes d'Onoro, May 5, 1811, and at Albuera, May 16, ib.; preparations for the campaign of 1812, 1085; insufficient artillery, and means of transport; capture of Ciudad Rodrigo, Jan. 19, 1812, ib.; siege of Badajoz, Mar. 16 to April 7, ib.; the assault and surrender, April 7, 1086; unable to restrain the excesses of his soldiers, 1086; difficulties in obtaining supplies and reinforcements; his perseverance under the obstacles created by government, ib.; advances into Spain, June 13; capture of the Salamanca forts, June 29, ib.; follows general Marmont's movements, ib.; wins the battle of Salamanca, July 22, ib.; his conduct before the battle, ib.; and after, ib.; effects of the victory, 1087; enters Madrid, Aug. 12; the siege of Burgos fails, ib.; the retreat, ib.; his candor, ib.; commander-in-chief of all the forces in the Peninsula; gains the battle of Vittoria, June 21, 1813, 1089; obtains possession of the passes of the Pyrenees, 1091; his remonstrance to the admiralty, ib.; passes into France, ib.; after some struggling he effects the passage of the Nivelle, ib.; gains the battle of Orthez, Feb. 27, 1814, 1092; crosses the Garonne, and defeats Soult at Toulouse, April 10, ib.; lands at Dover, June 28, 1093; receives the thanks of parliament for his services, ib.; his respect for private property and defenceless places, 1049; succeeds lord Castlereagh as British minister at Vienna, 1003; his opinion of Bonaparte's escape from Elba, ib.; prepares to defend the Netherlands, 1104; his accurate knowledge of Napoleon's advance, 1105; attends the ball at Brussels, ib.; his sudden departure from it, and march to Quatre-Bras, ib.; the battle of Ligny, ib.; takes up his position on the field of Waterloo; Byron's description of the field of Waterloo, ib.; his position and that of the French, 1106; the character and condition of the two armies, ib.; the struggle at Hougoumont, ib.; the battle as described by Wellington, ib.; British firmness and endurance, ib.; Wellington's fortitude, ib.; Wellington's and Blucher's share in the victory, 1107; arrival of Blucher and the Prussians, ib.; the crisis; the victory won, June 18; joins in pursuing the French, ib.; his emotions at the loss of his soldiers, ib.; refuses to acquiesce in Bonaparte's going to America, and declines having anything to do with his execution should that be resolved on, 1108; signs the declaration of the allies, ib.; erroneous views concerning Wellington's conduct entertained by M. Thiers, 1109; his firm moderation preserves Paris from unnecessary humiliation, ib.; representative of Great Britain at Aix-la-Chapelle, where the evacuation of France by the allied troops is agreed upon, 1130; master-general of the ordnance, 1140; a member of the conference for averting public proceedings against queen Caroline, 1152; induces George IV. to consent to Canning being secretary for foreign affairs; represents Great Britain at the Verona congress; Canning's instructions to him, 1157; resigns both his seat in the cabinet and his office of commander-in-chief on the accession of Canning's ministry, 1827, 1165; his share in the negotiations for a new premier, 1168; his interest in the Madras mutiny, 1169; accepts the command in chief of the army, 1827, 1172; on the resignation of Lord Goderich the king requests him to form a government, 1173; formation of his administration, ib.; defends the expression "untoward event" in the royal speech, ib.; Brougham objects to his being at the head of the government, 1174; his severe attitude towards Mr. Huskisson leads to the other four Canningite ministers resigning, 1176; his views on the Catholic question, ib.; his difficulty in obtaining the king's sanction to allow this question to be brought forward by government, 1177; announces the intention to the Lords, ib.; the king dismisses his ministry, but recalls it, ib.; speech of, on the Catholic Relief bill, 1178; duel with the earl of Winchelsea on his refusing to withdraw a calumny against him, ib.; character of George IV. as given by, 1179; Brougham's harsh opinion of his ministry, 1180; his proposed policy towards the new French government of 1830, 1184; present at the opening of the London and Manchester railway, 1186; his declaration against parliamentary reform, ib.; the lord mayor elect advises him to enter London with a strong guard, ib.; advises the king not to go to London, and is himself, from apprehension of bloodshed, deterred from going, ib.; resigns his premiership, 1187; his reception of the news of the proposed Reform bill of 1831, 1188; his speech against it, 1192; popular speculations as to his putting down public excitement, 1197; attempts to form a government, ib.; his account of the cause of his failure, 1198; withdraws from opposing the reform bill, ib.; supports the Poor Law Amendment bill, 1210; his consideration in enabling earl Grey to recover himself in parliament, ib.; negotiations for the Peel ministry, 1214; his dictatorship, as first lord of the treasury and sole secretary of state, with lord Lyndhurst, 1834, ib.; secretary of state for foreign affairs, 1215; announces the resignation of the Peel ministry to the lords, 1216; his eulogy of William IV., 1223; his enthusiastic reception at the queen's coronation, 1234; recommends sir R. Peel to the queen for her minister, 1238; opposed to the proposed system of a penny postage, 1239; deprecates a war with France, 1241; praises the conduct and achievements of the Indian army, 1249; his reply to Sir R. Peel's memorandum vindicating his conduct in the corn law question; determines to support Peel's administration, 1276; his admiration of Peel's courage in re-accepting the premiership, ib.; his successful plan for repressing a Chartist insurrection, 1285
Wentworth, sir Thomas. See Strafford, earl of.
Wentworth, general, commands the land forces against Carthagena, 1741; attacks fort San Lazaro; fails in taking it, 793
Wesley, John, with Whitefield, the founder of Methodism; his character, 647
West, Benjamin, a favorite of George III.'s; one of the founders of the Royal Academy, 931; exhibits at the first Royal Academy exhibition, ib.; succeeds Reynolds as president, 933; early career, ib.; patronized by the king, ib.; critique on his picture of "The Death of Wolfe," ib.; nominally head of the British school of painting, 1792–1820, 1146

West, rear admiral; his attack upon the French fleet unsupported by Byng, 1756; superseded by admiral Saunders; received with favor at court, 830
Westmacott, his sculptures, 148
Westminster, Edward the Confessor's palace of, 54
Westminster bridge opened, 1750; constructed by Labelye, 935
Westmoreland, population and trade of, 610
Wetherell, sir Charles, counsel at the trial of Watson, 1817, 1122; recorder of Bristol; an opponent of the Reform bill; his conduct rouses the Bristolians into a riot, 1194; his irritating address in behalf of municipal corporations, 1835, 1218
Weymouth, Thomas, viscount, secretary of state, 1768–1770, 856, 865; complains of Wilkes' libelling him, 856; opposes the duke of Richmond's motion for an address, 1778, 885; secretary of state, 1775–1779, ib.
Wharncliffe, lord, gives notice of his motion to request the king not to dissolve parliament, 1831, 1190; makes his motion, ib.; moves for the rejection of the reform bill, 1192; said to have been requested to moderate his opposition to the reform bill by the king, 1196; his modified opposition, ib.; lord privy seal, 1215; died Dec. 19, 1846, 1276
Wharton, Philip, duke of, makes a furious attack upon the earl of Stanhope, which so roused the earl's anger as to cause his death, 1721, 775
Whateley, rev. Thomas, important poor law reforms carried out by, at Cookham, Berkshire, 1210
Whitbread, Samuel, presides at a meeting of the Society of "the Friends of the People," 986; moves for a vote of censure against lord Melville, 1048; and his impeachment, 1805, ib.; his grief for Mr. Perceval, 1812, 1083; declaims against the destruction of military buildings at Washington, 1814, 1100; his peace motion rejected, 1815, 1104; protests against the annexing Saxony to Prussia, 1109; his poor law reform plan, 1807, 1120; savings banks recommended by, ib.
Whitefield, George, character of, one of the founders of Methodism, 947
Whitehall burnt down in 1698; the banqueting house the only portion saved, 671
Whitelock, gen., appointed to command the British troops at Plata, 1807, 1063; lands with 7800 men near Buenos Ayres, June 28, 1064; failure of his expedition; tried by court-martial and disgraced, ib.
Whitworth, lord, English ambassador at Paris; his interview with Bonaparte for the purpose of obtaining an explanation of his views towards Great Britain, February, 1803, 1042; violence shown by Bonaparte at a second interview with, March, 1043
Widdrington, William, lord, impeached of high treason, 1716, 768; tried and found guilty, ib.; is reprieved, ib.; an act of grace, passed, 1717, releases him from prison, 770
Wight, Isle of, conquered by Vespasian, 8; untruth of the tradition that John retired to, after the signing of Magna Charta, 105; Charles I. escapes to, 482
Wilberforce, William, returned M.P. for Hull, 1780, 894; his experience of club life, 942; and the licentiousness among Cambridge students, 944; returned M.P. for Yorkshire in the parliament of 1784, 954; draws the attention of the House to the African slave trade; the committee appointed decide that it shall be gradually abolished, 976; his first open opposition to Pitt, 1794, 1008; his opinion of lord Grenville's hostile answer to Napoleon, 1800, 1032; fears the defeat of the Austrians, by Bonaparte, 1805, 1050; indefatigable efforts of, to obtain the abolition of the slave trade, 1058; the two great objects of his life; his "Practical Christianity" published, 1139; his vain attempts to end the struggle between George IV. and queen Caroline, 1152; last speech in parliament, 1824, 1161; his thankfulness for having lived to see England's willingness to abolish slavery; died July 29, 1833
Wilkes, John, publishes the "North Briton," 1762, 846; attacks the king and Bute, 846; his comments on the king's speech in the "North Briton," No. 45; arrested and imprisoned; he is released, being protected as a member of parliament from arrest, 847; deprived of his colonelcy of militia, ib.; supported and encouraged by earl Temple, ib.; caricatured by Hogarth; defended by Churchill, 848; Sandwich proposes to prosecute him; sets spies on his motions, and obtains clandestinely some of his papers; wounded in a duel with Mr. Martin; takes flight to France; is expelled the House of Commons, ib.; his proceedings against Halifax and Egremont fail; but he obtains £1000 from Mr. Wood for false imprisonment, ib.; prosecuted for libels, found guilty, and outlawed, Nov. 1, 1764, 849; elected member for Middlesex; surrenders himself at the King' Bench prison as an outlaw; the mob endeavors to rescue him, 855; legal proceedings against him for libel; he is sentenced to two years' imprisonment and two fines of £500; lord Weymouth prosecutes him for libel, and Wilkes is expelled the house, 856; his birthday celebrated by the Londoners, ib.; his expulsions from parliament and re-elections; agitations and debates about the legality of his re-elections, ib.; attacked by Junius, 857; released from prison; becomes an aldermen and city agitator, 864: concerned in the printer's affair, 1771; the House and the King afraid to prosecute him, 865; obtains a seat in parliament without opposition, 1774, 872; lord mayor of London, 1775; presents the address and remonstrance to the king, denouncing the government measures towards America, 873; chamberlain of London; his address to Pitt, 1784, 954; his parliamentary reform motion, 1776, 1200
Wilkie, sir David, style and popularity of his paintings, 1147
Wilkins, William, his architectural works, 1143
Wilkinson, Catharine, the originator of public baths and washhouses, 1832, 1228
William of Normandy, descent and position of, 52; visits Edward, and observes the position of affairs, and the state of parties at his court, ib.; releases Harold from his imprisonment by the count of Ponthieu, 53; exacts an oath from Harold to support his claim to the throne of England, 53; rage of, at the news of Harold having been chosen king, 54; prepares for the invasion, ib.; lands at Pevensey, 55; fights and wins the battle of Senlac, or Hastings, ib.; founds the "Abbey of Bataille," ib.; elected king of England, 56; subdues London, ib.; crowned on Dec. 25, 1066, ib.; tumult on the occasion, and probable cause of, ib.; Edgar Atheling submits to, ib.; conciliatory policy of, ib.; builds fortresses and creates fiefs, 57; visits Normandy, ib.; oppressions of the Norman chieftains in England while away, ib.; Anglo-Saxon insurrection against, ib.; returns to England, and promises to maintain the laws of Edward the Confessor, ib.; violates his promise, and becomes tyrannical, 58; remarkable energy of, ib.; insurrection in the North suppressed by, ib.; repulses the invasion of Canute, king of Denmark, and devastates Northumbria, ib.; scarcity and famine in consequence, ib.; confiscation of Saxon estates by, 59; gradual restoration of security by the establishment of Norman fiefs, 59; numerical preponderance of the Saxons in the time of, ib.; marches to Chester in 1070, and suppresses the insurrection in Mercia, ib.; blockades Hereward in the Isle of Ely, and compels him to submit, 60; insurrection in Maine suppressed by, with an army of Normans and English, 61; revolt of nobles in England suppressed, and execution of Waltheof, ib.; continental wars and family quarrels of, ib.; oath of fealty taken to, ib.; Domesday Book compiled by order of, in 1085, 62; Forest Laws enacted by, and misery occasioned by the enclosure of the New Forest, 63; knight service instituted by 64 et seq.; feudal exactions imposed by, 65; besieges Mantes in 1087, is hurt, and dies on Sept. 9, ib.; character of, 66
William II., Rufus, coronation of, as king of England, on Sept. 26, 1087, 66; early severities of, and insurrection of the Norman nobles against, ib.; insurrection suppressed by the assistance of the English, ib.; oppressive proceedings of, ib.; description of the court of, ib.; repulses Malcolm of Scotland, and builds Carlisle castle, 67; his brother Robert challenges him, and declares war, ib.; taxes England to pay the mortgage money for Normandy to duke Robert, ib.; sufferings of England from the oppressions of, ib.; seizes Normandy in 1095, 69; Westminster Hall built by, ib.; killed by Walter Tyrrel on Aug. 1, 1110, ib.
William, prince of Orange, called to the command of the forces of Holland on the invasion in 1672, by Louis XIV., 559; after the murder of the De Witts, he succeeds in expelling the French, ib.; marries the princess Mary, 560; concludes the peace of Nimeguen, 561; is invited to interfere in the affairs of England, 595; publishes a declaration announcing his design to come to the assistance of the English people, 596; sails from Helvoetsluys, and lands at Torbay, Nov. 5, 1688, ib.; marches to Exeter, ib.; his first reception not encouraging, ib.; is joined by the duke of Grafton and Churchill, and other commanders, 597; and by the prince of Denmark and the princess Anne, ib.; advances to Hungerford, ib.; his Dutch guards march to Westminster, 598; sends a message to James, which induces him to leave London, and proceed to Rochester, ib.; arrives at St. James', Dec. 19, and is met by peers, members of former parliaments, the lord mayor and citizens, 598; is requested to call a Convention, and in the meanwhile undertake the administration of affairs, 599; parliament meets in 1689, ib.; their proceedings, ib.; their final resolutions, ib.; princess of Orange arrives at Whitehall, ib.; Declaration of Rights, ib.; William and Mary proclaimed king and queen, 600
William III., the preservation of England due to his resolution and conduct, 621; weak health, character and appearance, ib.; wishes to govern by a balance of parties; his own secretary for foreign affairs, 622; twelve judges appointed by; jealousy of the English toward his Dutch friends, Bentinck, Auverquerque, and Zuylistein, ib.; speech on opening parliament, Feb. 18, 1689, 623; desires large supplies, the abolition of the hearth tax, ib.; and religious toleration, 624; desires to make all Protestants eligible to government employment, ib.; suspected of being adverse to the Anglican church, ib.; quells the mutiny at Ipswich, 625; apprehends several persons disaffected toward him, ib.; opposition toward, shown, by the Whigs, in the postponing of the Indemnity bill, 626; coronation of William and Mary, April 11; the Commons promise to support him in a war with France, ib.; negotiates with Tyrconnel, who faithlessly schemes in James's favor, ib.; refuses to proscribe Claverhouse, 629; his letter to the Scotch convention, suggesting a union, ib.; the throne of Scotland settled upon himself and Mary, 630; speech of, on meeting of parliament, Oct. 19, 1689, asking for supplies to carry on the war with Ireland and France, 633; annoyed by the misunderstandings as to the princess Anne's position, 634; his disgust at the contest between the Whigs and Tories; resolves to go to Holland, leaving the kingdom in the queen's hands, ib.; changes his design, and resolves to go to Ireland; dissolves parliament, 635; refuses to inform the Commons who recommended Shales to be commissary of stores, ib.; applies himself to remedy the abuses of the government departments, and to prepare for an Irish campaign, ib.; his dislike to bribery; deserted by his favorite minister, Shrewsbury, ib.; jealousy of parliament in settled the revenue, ib.; act of recognition, 636; authorizes Carmarthen to present an act of grace for political offences, which was passed, ib.; prorogues parliament, places the government in the queen's hands, and leaves London for Ireland, June 14, 1690, ib.; his energetic conduct and vigilance in reorganizing the army, ib.; absurd reports of him in Ireland previous to his landing at Belfast on the 14th of June, 637; his march to the Boyne; considerate conduct of his troops, ib.; encamps on the Boyne's bank, opposite to that on which James II. was; while reconnoitring he is wounded; his death is reported and triumphantly proclaimed in Paris, ib.; arrangements for the battle; position of the army; Schomberg commands the centre, his son the right, and William himself the left; courage and perseverance of; gains the battle, July 1; his departure for Ireland the signal for the French to attack the English coast; the queen's energetic conduct, 639; William's movements from place to place; enters Dublin, July 6, ib.; captures Waterford on the 21st, ib.; determines to invest Limerick, ib.; William encamps before Limerick, Aug. 8th, 640; commences the siege on the 19th, but raises it on the 29th, 641; leaves Ireland and lands at Bristol, Sept. 6, ib.; speech on opening the second session of parliament, Oct. 2, ib.; large war supply granted him; his position with regard to English and foreign politics, ib.; his mental qualities a security against England's degradation, 642; closes his second parliamentary session, Jan. 5, 1691, and leaves for Holland, where he is enthusiastically received, ib.; congress at the Hague; stipulates for the religious toleration of the Waldenses; a secret article to that effect is introduced into a treaty signed Feb. 8, 1691, 643; he breaks up the congress; arrives in England, April 13, and leaves again for Holland, May 1, ib.; vacancies filled up, ib.; plot of Preston and Ashton against William; his clemency and conduct with regard to this and other plots, ib.; sends Marlborough into Flanders, 644; plots against his government in Scotland, 645; his lenient disposition towards the Highlanders, ib.; examination of the question as to William's share in the Glencoe massacre, 647; causes an inquiry into the massacre, 648; his leniency towards Stair, 649; character of, unjustly assailed, 650; Marlborough is dismissed from office; court quarrels, ib.; bill for establishing the independence of the judges vetoed by; sets out for Holland, Mar. 5, 1692, ib.; Grandval's plot to assassinate William discovered, 652; defeat of William by Luxemburg at the battle of Steinkirk, Aug. 3, ib.; his concern for his soldiers at this battle, 653; William returns to England, Oct. 18, ib.; speech on meeting parliament, Nov. 4, 654; vetoes a parliamentary reform bill, 655; closes the session of parliament; changes some of the ministry, ib.; makes preparations for a campaign, 656; Kensington and Versailles, ib.; leaves London to join his army on the continent, Mar. 24, 1693; prepares for battle; defeated at Landen, July 29, 657; his conduct in battle, and admirable skill in covering his retreat, ib.; thankful that the result was not worse, ib.; returns to Kensington, Nov.; forms a new ministry, ib.; adopts the principle of government by party, 658; prorogues parliament, and sets out for the continent, May, 1694, 659; his vexation at the failure of the Brest expedition, ib.; returns from the continent, Nov. 9; opens parliament on the 12th; his unhappiness at the illness of the queen, 660; she dies, Dec. 28, 1694; his grief at her loss, ib.; he abstains from business for weeks after, ib.; prorogues parliament, becomes reconciled to Anne, and departs for the continent, 661; sits down before Namur, ib.; obtains possession of the town, July 28, ib.; and of the citadel, Aug. 26, 1695, 662; returns to Kensington, Oct. 10; his enthusiastic reception in England; makes a progress through the country, ib.; opens a new parliament, Nov. 22, 663; orders a grant of an estate in Denbighshire to the earl of Portland, but on the Commons showing it to be unconstitutional he recalls it, 663; informs the parliament of a design to assassinate him, and of a threatened invasion of England, ib.; assassination plot against, Feb., 1696, 664; leaves England for the Netherlands, May, 666; his financial difficulties in carrying on the campaign nearly compel him to forsake his kingdom and go to the Indies, ib.; closes parliament, 667; embarks for Holland, April, 1697; saves Brussels, 668; negotiations for peace are carried on at Ryswick, ib.; the treaty of Ryswick concluded Sept. 22, ib.; returns to England, Nov. 26; makes an entry into London, and is enthusiastically received, ib.; his speech on opening parliament, Dec. 3, 1697, 669; and in 1698, 670; sends Portland on an embassy to France, the chief point for negotiation being that of the Spanish succession, 671; his vexation at the defenceless state of the kingdom, 672; hires Evelyn's house for Peter the Great; his interview with the czar, ib.; grants the Commons' petition to discourage the woollen and encourage the linen trade of Ireland, 673; his answer to the petition against the African and Indian company, 674; his conduct with regard to the company's Darien scheme, ib.; its failure rouses the Scotch against, 676; he proposes the union of the two kingdoms, 677; his anxiety for a partition treaty before the death of Charles II., king of Spain, ib.; the partition treaties, ib.; goes to Loo, and carries on a negotiation for a partition treaty, 678; correspondence of, with his ministers, ib.; obtains a blank commission from his lord chancellor, Somers, ib.; the first partition treaty signed, Oct. 11, 1698, ib.; the second is signed in 1700, but Louis dupes William, and seizes the Spanish crown for his own grandson, 679; speech on opening the new parliament, ib.; notwithstanding his anxious desire to retain his troops, they are disbanded by parliament, Dec., ib.; he is deprived of his Dutch guards, ib.; his mortification, and resolve to abandon England, ib.; the speech he intended to deliver to parliament announcing this resolution, ib.; but his judgment gets the better of his rash resolve, ib.; the dismissal of his Dutch guards, 680; discussion and inquiry into the extent of Irish forfeitures of estates, ib.; a bill of resumption is brought in, to which the king reluctantly gave his assent, proroguing the parliament immediately after, ib.: Albemarle, a new favorite of, 680; persuades Portland not to discontinue the negotiations for a second partition treaty, ib.; he sends an armament to protect Sweden; Denmark is driven back, and signs a treaty of peace, ib.; his difficulty in governing caused by the party factions, 683; his anxiety on the Spanish succession question, 683; Charles's will is accepted by Louis, and his grandson Philip succeeds to the Spanish throne, ib.; conduct of, ib.; the new parliament; changes in the ministry, ib.; he asks assistance for the States-General, ib.; the act of settlement, 684; impeachment of Somers and others for their share in the partition treaties, ib.; the popular feeling against the House of Commons, which is presented with the Kentish petition, 685; and the Legion memorial, ib.; after long discussions about the partition treaty, the Lords and Commons at length encourage the king to enter into a league with the States-General against France; he prorogues parliament, June 24; and shortly after embarks for Holland, 686; forms the great alliance, ib.; the treaty is signed at the Hague, Sept. 7; the death of James II., ib.; Louis proclaims the prince of Wales king of England, by the title of James III.; William confers with Sunderland on the state of affairs in England, ib.; returns from Holland, Nov. 4; and dissolves parliament on the 11th, 687; he opens his last parliament, Dec. 30; and delivers his last speech, Dec. 31, ib.; the Commons vote him a liberal supply; fractures his collar bone by a fall from his horse; desires the Commons to take steps for the union of England and Scotland, ib.; death of, Mar. 8, 1702, ib.; discontinued the practice of touching for the king's evil, 694; an encourager of taste for architecture, 752; prince Albert's high opinion of, 1256

William IV., admiral Langara's astonishment at his obedience to orders as midshipman, 905; marries the princess Adelaide of Saxe-Meiningen, July 13, 1818, 1129; lord high admiral, 1827, 1165; accident to, at the lord mayor's banquet, 1172; succeeds to the throne on the death of George IV., June 26, 1830, 1179; addresses to, on the expediency of providing a regency in case of his decease, 1180; speech on proroguing parliament, July, 1830, ib.; opens parliament, Nov. 2; declares that no reform will be sanctioned by the government, 1186; owing to a statement that the duke of Wellington would be attacked, he declines dining with the lord mayor, and postpones his visit to the city, ib.; requested to dissolve parliament by lords Grey and Brougham; description of the interview, 1190; his excitement; dissolves parliament, ib.; opens parliament, 1831; recommends the consideration of the reform question, 1191; his constancy; prorogues parliament, 1193; again recommends reform, Dec. 1831, 1196; desires the lords to give a less decided opposition to the Reform bill, ib.; petitions to, to create peers if necessary, ib.; refuses to create peers at the request of the cabinet, 1197; but ultimately gives a reluctant consent to this measure; uses his personal influence with the opposition peers, 1198; and thus secures the passing of the Reform bill, ib.; his speech on opening parliament, 1203; compliments parliament for their exertions bestowed upon public business, 1211; desires to effect the union of different party leaders in the same ministry, in the hope of settling the Irish church question, 1213; dismisses the Melbourne ministry, 1215; unprecedentedness of this act, ib.; his speech, 1835, ib.; speech on opening parliament by commission, 1837, 1223; his illness and death, June 20, 1837, ib.; character of, ib.; his funeral, 1232

Williamson, sir Joseph. See Partition Treaty, 678

Wilmington, Spencer, earl of. See Compton, sir S.

Wilson, a smuggler; robs an excise collector; is apprehended, tried, and found guilty; attempts to escape from prison; heroism displayed in saving his comrade Robertson; executed April 14, 1736, 787

Wilson, John, his writings in "Blackwood's Magazine," 1140

Wilson, Richard, contributes to the first Royal Academy exhibition, 932; classic landscape painter, ib.; his works compared with those of Gainsborough, ib.

Wiltshire, a pastoral country: agricultural improvements; bustards formerly abounded in; boldness of this bird; the last specimen probably seen in, in 1805, 916; backward state of farming in, ib.

Wiltshire Downs, ancient British monuments on, 6

Winchelsea, Daniel Finch, earl of, introduces, as earl of Nottingham, the comprehension bill into the House of Lords, 624; his despatch to the naval officers, 1692, 651; his differences with Russell, 656; appointed secretary of state, 1702, 689; urges prosecution of the Whigs, 1711, 726

Winchelsea, earl of, his calumnious letter to the duke of Wellington; refusing to withdraw it, a duel takes place in Battersea Fields, Mar. 21, 1829, and an apology tendered at its conclusion, 1178

Winchester, the ancient city of, 6

Winchester, Henry, bishop of, influences the election of his brother Stephen in 1135, 74; denounces him at a synod for offences against the clergy, 77; supports Matilda, 78; rejoins his brother and supports his cause by the authority "of the holy see," 79; superseded as legate, ib.

Windham, William, approves of parliament's conduct in expressing its feeling on the situation of the French royal family, 1792, 985; sent to Holland to smooth the difficulties as to the command of the allied army, 1006; appointed secretary of war, 1794, 1007; manages the Quiberon expedition, 1009; superseded by Charles Yorke, 1801, 1036; opposes Yorke's motion for an army of reserve; advice as to volunteers, 1045; secretary of state for war, 1806, 1056; his treatment of the volunteers renders him unpopular, ib.; secretary of state, 1806,

Wine, effects of the Methuen treaty upon the wine trade, 692; claret the general wine of England prior to 1703; port since that date, ib.; restrictions on the importation of French, removed by the Scottish parliament, 707

Winstanley, his lighthouse at Eddystone: perishes with it, 1703, 604

Winton, George, earl of, impeached of high treason; tried and found guilty, 1716, 766; makes his escape, 767

Witchcraft, instances of the belief in, 18th century, 747

Wolfe, James, colonel, 1757; volunteers to take Rochefort with the assistanee of 500 men, 836; serves under Amherst in the expedition against Louisbourg; his gallantry, 837; made major-general and commander of the Quebec expedition: his dinner with Pitt, 838; his passage of the St. Lawrence; lands near Quebec, 839; his night voyage; takes possession of the heights of Abraham; battle with Montcalm; death, Sept. 13, 1759, ib.

Wolseley, colonel, with colonel Barry, conveys supplies to Enniskillen, and defeats the duke of Berwick, 1689, 628

Wolsey, cardinal Thomas, birth, and rise of, under Henry VIII., 228; acts as war minister to Henry VIII. while almoner, ib.; accompanies the expedito France, and is made bishop of Tournay, 229; made chancellor, cardinal, and papal legate, 231; and archbishop of York, ib.; magnificence of, ib.; the pope secures his support against the doctrines of Luther, ib.; maintains the papal supremacy in England, ib.; the ostentation of Wolsey the result of policy, 232; his labor and difficulties as a minister, ib.; propitiated by Charles V. in his meeting with Henry at Gravelines, 234; asserted promotion by, of the conviction and execution of the duke of Buckingham in 1521, ib.; appointed to mediate between Francis I. and Charles V., 235; aspires to the papal chair, and fails, ib.; he endeavors to overawe the Commons into the granting of a large subsidy, 236; fosters dissensions in the court of Scotland, 237; takes the blame on himself of having levied taxes without the consent of parliament, 239; sent ambassador to France, 241; difficulties of, arising from the question of the king's divorce from Catherine, ib.; concludes an alliance with France, ib.; first troubles of, from the king's attachment to Anne Boleyn, 242; receives the French embassy at Hampton Court, ib.; is authorized by the pope to inquire into Henry's marriage, 243; is associated with cardinal Campegius for the purpose, ib.; arrival of Campegius in England, ib.; interview of Catherine with the legates, ib.; dissatisfaction of Henry with, 244; is deprived of the great seal, 245; leaves York Palace, ib.; rejoicings at his fall, ib.; destitution of at Esher, ib.; is defended in parliament by Thomas Cromwell, 246; is accused of slandering the church of England in the court of Rome, ib.; continued interest of, in his colleges, 249; receives a general pardon, and resides in his see of York, ib.; his great popularity there, ib.; is arrested for high treason, ib.; dies at Leicester, on Nov. 29, 1531, on his journey to London, 250

Wood, alderman, his conduct in the riots of 1816, 1122; moves a vote of censure against government for employing Edwards, 1149; entertains queen Caroline at his house, 1820, 1151

Wood, William. See Money, 777

Woodfall, H. S., printer and conductor of the "Public Advertiser," containing Junius's letters, 857; publishes a collected edition of the letters, ib.; prosecuted for publishing Wilkes's address to the king, 859

Wool, act passed in 1689, for the prevention of the exportation of, and encouraging the woollen manufacture of this kingdom, 602; considered to be the basis of England's wealth, ib.; manufacture of, chiefly in the western counties from time of Edward VI., ib.; annual value of wool, and the woollen manufactures at the end of the 17th century, ib.; Bristol formerly the seat of the commerce of, and the woollen manufactures, 603; extensively employed in making stockings, 607; woollen manufacture of Yorkshire 150 years ago, 609; Kendal green cloth, 610; Ireland applies herself to the woollen manufacture; William is implored to discourage it, 673; Ireland prohibited from exporting, 1782, 903

Woollett, William, a skilful engraver of landscape paintings, 933

Wordsworth, William, quotations from his poem on the French revolution, 966; and his sonnets, 1041; his writings described by Byron; first appears as a poet in 1793, 1137; character of his writings, ib.; advantages derived by, from the copyright act of 1842, 1253

Wren, sir Christopher, plan of, for rebuilding the city of London, 547; alterations of, at Windsor castle, 569; he is extensively patronized by William, 752; description of his mind; becomes assistant surveyor-general, ib.; studies the architecture of France, 753; his plan of rebuilding London, ib.; commences the erection of St. Paul's, 1675, ib.; his first plan; the cathedral finished, 1710, ib.; criticism on the building, 754; his skill shown in the London parish churches, such as St. Stephen's, Walbrook, ib.; other buildings erected by, ib.; retires from public life, ib.; dies at the age of 90, and is buried in the choir of St. Paul's, ib.

Wurmser, Austrian general; succeeds Beaulieu in the command of the army in Italy, 1796, 1012; defeated by Bonaparte, ib.; defends Mantua; capitulates; chivalrous treatment of, by Bonaparte, 1017

Wurtemburg, duke of, joins Marlborough; shares the alternate command with him, 641; his part in the battle of Stemkirk, 652

Wyat, sir Thomas, insurrection of, against the marriage of queen Mary with Philip of Spain, 320; he marches to London, 321; and is defeated, 322; is executed, 323

Wyatt, James, his architectural designs, 935, 1142

Wyatt, Samuel, architect of Trinity House, Tower Hill, 1142

Wyattville, sir Jeffrey, his earlier architectural works, 1142

Wycliffe, prosecuted for his opinions, 145; supported by the duke of Lancaster, ib.; resistance of, to Peter's pence, 146; translates the New Testament, ib.; the precursor of the Reformation, ib.; the religious opinions of, not the cause of the insurrection in 1381, 148; many of his opinions declared heretical by a synod of divines, ib.; petitions against the Act for the punishment of preachers of heresies, 149; it is repealed, ib.; his translation of the Scriptures is proscribed, ib.; his death in 1384, ib.; enduring effects of his labors, ib.; the council of Constance orders his body to be disinterred and burnt, 163

Wykeham, William of, deprived of his temporalities and dismissed from court, 145; notice of his constructions and institutions, 146

Wyndham, sir William, a Tory leader; attacks Walpole, 1734, 785; his portrait of Walpole, ib.; secedes from the House of Commons; his adieu; and reproof of Walpole, 792; died, 1740, ib.

Wyoming, description and state of, 887; destruction of the forts, and massacre of the inhabitants, 1778, ib.

Yandaboo, treaty of, signed Feb. 24, 1826, 1171

Yarmouth, lord, empowered to negotiate for peace, 1806, 1058

Yorktown taken possession of by lord Cornwallis, 1781, 896

York, rise of the House of, 187; character of Richard, duke of, ib.; popularity of, 189; takes up arms against Somerset, ib.; is arrested, ib.; is elected Protector by the peers, 196; is superseded, ib.; marches towards London, ib.; wins the first battle of St. Alban's, on May 22, 1455, ib.; conducts Henry to London, ib.; is appointed Protector a second time, 197; is again superseded, ib.; absents himself from the king's councils, ib.; attends in London, in 1458, an attempted reconciliation of the York and Lancastrian factions, ib.; commencement of the Civil War of the Roses, in 1459, ib.; is declared a traitor by the parliament at Coventry, 192; flies to Ireland, ib.; returns from Ireland, after the battle of Northampton, in 1460, ib.; claims the crown in a parliament at Westminster, ib.; the peers compromise the claim by enacting that York should succeed on Henry's death, ib.; queen Margaret resists the compromise, and assembles an army, ib.; battle of Wakefield, and death of York, on Dec. 31, 1460, ib.

York, the duchess of, takes refuge, in 1460, in the chambers of John Paston, in the Temple, 192; notice of her family there with her, ib.

York, Frederick, duke of, son of George III., born Aug. 16, 1763, 858; leads the English guards against the French, 996; besieges Valenciennes; the garrison capitulates, July 28, 1793; advances against Dunkirk; compelled to raise the siege, ib.; his forbearance and generosity, 997; announces the French decree of no quarter to the British, 1005; defeats Pichegru, May 10, 1794, 1006; he is recalled on account of incompetency for his position, ib.; loses Holland, 1007; supersedes sir R. Abercromby in the command of the British and Russian armies in Holland, 1799, 1031; his reverses and incompetency, 1032; charges brought against him for misrule at the Horse Guards, 1071; parliamentary inquiry into his conduct; his disgraceful connection with Mrs. Clarke, ib.; his acquittal; resigns his office of commander-in-chief, Mar. 20, 1809, ib.; appointed the king's custos, with an allowance of 10,000*l.*, 1130; commander-in-chief, 1148; his speech on the Roman Catholic Relief bill, 1825; sensation caused by it, 1164; his death, Jan. 5, 1827, and burial, Jan. 20, ib.

York, James, duke of. See James II.

Yorke, Charles, secretary of war, 1801, 1036; proposes to raise an army of reserve of 50,000; and subsequently to enroll every fighting man, 1803; home secretary, 1803, 1325

Yorkshire, population of, in 18th century, 609; the five great clothing towns in, ib.; travelling in, temp. queen Anne; industry of, temp. queen Anne, ib.; the marquis of Rockingham's example to the farmers of, 918; cultivation of the East Riding wolds; rapid agricultural progress promoted by Legard's experiments, ib.; moors of; improvers, ib.; James Croft, the collier, 919; dialect of Craven in, ib.

Young, Arthur, quotations from, illustrative of the agriculture of England, 911, 914, 915, 917, 918; and that of Ireland, 922; notices the prevalence of farming and weaving being the employment of one man in Ireland, 924; quotations from his "Travels in France," illustrating the opinions and state of society in, and agricultural condition of, France, 956, 959, 964, 966

Young, Edward, his description of ladies' employment, 745; his "Night Thoughts" published, 1741, 936

Zaragoza, victory of the allies won near, 1710, 725; siege of, 1808, 1069

Zonaras, account by, of the speech of Caractacus, 5

Zorndorf, battle of, August 25, 1758, 837

521
521

WINCKLER
UL 194
CINTI

DATE DUE

OVERSIZE DA 30 .K654 1880
v.2
Knight, Charles, 1791-1873.

The popular history of England

945

UNITED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY LIBRARY
3 0645 1000 6041 3